• V. 18-27. These rules for the dedication of the altar, and consecration of the priests, in some things agreed with, in others differed from, those prescribed by Moses. (*Marg. and Marg. But the instruction seems to be the same, as has been deduced from these types and shadows of the ceremonial law, in the books of Exodus, Leviticus, and Numbers: and the same evangelical truths are here prophetically proposed, as were there exhibited in the way of positive injunction.—It is remarkable, that the prophet is addressed, as if he were personally to superintend the service, in the same manner that Moses did when the tabernacle was set up, and when Aaron and his sons were consecrated. Yet he was not employed at the consecration of the altar or temple after the captivity: but probably was dead before that time.—(Seed of Zadok. PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-12. All external institutions of religion derive their excellency and efficacy from the presence and manifested glory of God in them: and, as this glory is displayed in Christ our “Sun of righteousness,” we sinners may behold it with comfort. His voice indeed is very terrible to his enemies, and at first excites great commotion and consternation in the hearts of his chosen people: but when they are taught by the Holy Spirit, they experience its power accompanied with peace and comfort to their souls.—Every display of the divine glory should inspire our hearts with reverential awe; and the condescension and multiplied visits of our gracious God should never cause us to forget our own unworthiness and vileness. He may for a time “hide his face” from his church or any of his servants, to rebuke their sins and to humble them for their good; but in due time he will return: and, as his glory irradiates the soul of him who beholds it, so it will ere long illuminate the whole earth.—It is of the infinite mercy of our God that he reigns upon “the throne of grace” over his redeemed people, and makes his church “the place of the soles of his feet.” But if we would have the assurance and comfort of this his condescending love, we must seek his sanctifying grace; that we may no more defile his holy name, or our souls that are his temple, by our sins; or his church, by immoralities, impieties, or superstitions. For, by “setting up their thresholds and posts” in opposition to the Lord’s, even kings have often substituted a carcass of worthless, nay, idolatrous observances, in the place of vital and evangelical godliness. And for these things, God has abhorred the services of his professed people, and consumed them in his anger, from age to age. As, in those happy and glorious times which are approaching, every particular will be regulated and reformed according to the sacred Scriptures; so we should now put away whatever has displeased God in the conduct of his people in other ages, that we may personally anticipate those times, and do what we can towards preparing for them.—The goodness of God towards us should “lead us to repentance;” and the discovery of the rule and pattern for our conduct, will show us the necessity of it, and direct us in it; “for by the law is the knowledge of sin.” But when Christ crucified, and “the things that are freely given us of God” through him, are shown to the soul by the Holy Ghost, they peculiarly fill us with shame for all our iniquities. This penitent frame of mind prepares us for fuller discoveries of the mysteries of redeeming love, and for a more distinct understanding of all the ordinances and commandments of God.—The whole of the Scriptures are written and should be opened and applied, that men may perceive their sins and repent of them, and their duties and do them: that all which belong to the church of God may be “most holy, according to the law of the house.”

V. 13-27. We wretched sinners can no more be holy without “the sanctification of the Spirit,” than we can be righteous, or have access to God, except through Christ, our Altar, Priest, and Oblation. We now indeed are not required to offer any atoning sacrifices; for “by one offering he hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified;” but “the sprinkling of his blood” is incessantly requisite to us, in all our approaches to God the Father. Even his royal and chosen priesthood who minister unto him, could not be permitted to present their “spiritual sacrifices” were they not cleansed from guilt through his precious blood: (Notes, Heb. 13:15, 16. 1 Pet. 2:4-6.) all their powers and faculties and senses need the same cleansing, before they “can serve God acceptably” in body and soul: their best services contract so much pollu-

2 Then said the LORD unto me; This gate shall be shut, it shall not be opened, and no man shall enter in by it; because the LORD the God of Israel hath entered in by it, therefore it shall be shut.

3 It is for the prince; the prince, he shall sit in it to eat bread before the LORD; he shall enter by the way of the porch of that gate, and shall go out by the way of the same.

4 Then brought he me the way of the north gate before the house; and I looked, and behold, the glory of the LORD filled the house of the LORD; and I fell upon my face.

5 And the LORD said unto me, Son of man, mark well, and behold with thine eyes, and hear with thine ears all that I say unto thee concerning all the ordinances of the house of the LORD, and all the laws thereof; and mark well the entering in of the house, with every going forth of the sanctuary.

tion from remaining sinful, that they can be accepted only as sprinkled with that "blood which cleanseth from all sin." But when they come in the appointed way to the mercy-seat, their Advocate pleads for them within the sanctuary above, and his blood is the propitiation for their sins: they themselves become living sacrifices, holy and acceptable to God through him; and being daily washed in his blood, and seasoned with the salt of his purifying grace, they "glorify him in body and spirit, which are his."—All our approaches to God should be with recollection and deliberation: our hearts should be previously prepared for attending on solemn ordinances, especially for devoting ourselves to the Lord at his table: ministers should seriously prepare for entering upon their important work, and continuing steadfast and fervent in spirit that they may fulfil it: and we should all daily be preparing to meet our God in death and judgment; that we may then find his gracious acceptance, and render him our eternal Hallelujahs.

NOTES.—CHAP. XLIV. V. 1-3. 'He brought me to... the gate of the outer sanctuary, which looked eastward; and that gate which I had seen formerly open, (as that by which the glory of God visibly entered into the temple), was now shut. Then said the Lord unto me, This gate shall continue shut, and no ordinary person shall ever enter by it; because the Lord God of Israel hath honoured and hallowed it, by entering in thereby.' Bp. Hall. (Marg. Ref. Note, 43:1-5).—Some suppose, that by the prince the high-priest is meant; and others the civil governor, as Zerubbabel, or Nehemiah. But as no such rules were laid down in the Mosaic law, or prescribed concerning Solomon's temple; so there appear no traces of their having been observed under the second temple.—The prince, in many of the preceding prophecies, evidently means Christ; (Marg. Ref. d, e) and whatever be prophetically intended, the injunction may remind us, that none can enter heaven, the true sanctuary, as Christ did: namely, by virtue of his own excellency, and his personal holiness, righteousness, and strength. He who is "the Brightness of JEHOWAH's glory" entered this way; but it is now shut to the whole human race; and we all must enter as sinners, by faith in his blood, and by the communication of his grace.—The prince, having entered by the portico of this gate, would there sit to eat bread before the Lord, and then return to his palace by the same way. (Marg. Ref. c, d. Note, 46:8, 9.) This may signify the Saviour's meeting his people, and communing with them in his ordinances, and especially at his table; and coming to them and returning to his heavenly palace, so to speak, by a way of his own; as the kings of the house of David did from their palace to the temple and back again. (Notes, 1 Kings 10:4, 5.) JEHOWAH, by an audible voice out of the sanctuary, is represented as thus speaking to the prophet.

V. 5, 6. (Marg. and Ref. Notes, 40:4, 43:10, 11.) When the prophet had well compared the conduct of his people "with the laws of the house," it would be evident to him, that they had been guilty of many abominations; and he was ordered to call them to repentance and reformation, and to let what was past suffice them, for they had already become exceedingly guilty. (Notes, 45:9, 1 Pet. 4:3-5.)

V. 7-9. 'Setting up idols within the precincts of mine own house, and appointing idolatrous priests to officiate there (43:8)... Or... they suffered the heathen to offer at God's altar, expressly against the law.' Louth. The last-mentioned profanation is not recorded in any instance.—The introduction of uncircumcised persons, to eat of the peace-offerings and oblations, would have been a gross violation of the Mosaic law. But "the uncircumcised in heart," as well as "in flesh," are mentioned; yet there was no law to exclude unregenerate persons, who were circumcised and ritually clean, from the ordinances of the temple: so that this must denote a different constitution. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. c, p, u. Notes, Lev. 26:41, 12. Deut. 10:16, 30:1-10, v. 6. Jer. 4:3, 4, 9:25, 26. Acts 7:51-53. Rom. 2:25-29. Phil. 3:1-7, v. 3. Col. 2:11, 12.) And it seems to refer to the prostitution of the Christian sacraments, by admitting ungodly persons, who come from secular motives, to partake of them; and to the admission of such persons into the ministry, as seek nothing but the emolument or worldly distinctions of the sacred office; which things are the scandal, and threaten the ruin, of the protestant churches, as well as others. Thus God's covenant is broken, and its seals and the most sacred institutions of Christianity are prostituted, secularized, and abused; the most holy things are neglected, and keepers are placed over the charge of God in the sanctuary, to please the humours, to flatter the pride, to subserve the lusts, or support the political designs of men. All these abuses will be terminated when this prophecy shall be fulfilled. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 10-14. Even those Levites, who were also priests as descended from Aaron, had often led the Jews into idolatry, by their example and influence; and yet in general they had been permitted to perform the most honourable parts of their sacred function: but, in the times predicted, such persons would deservedly be disgraced, and punished by degradation to the meaner and more laborious services; such as the work of porters, or slaying the sacrifices.—Few, if any, of those who before the captivity had been criminal in this respect, witnessed the restoration of the temple-service; nor does it appear that their descendants were thus degraded, on account of the idolatry of their ancestors; and after the captivity, it is not recorded, that any of the priests were guilty of leading the people to worship idols. But a thorough reformation of the whole church, or the prevalence of pure religion among the converted Jews, is evidently predicted, under allusion to the Mosaic institutions.—Thus perhaps, those ministers, who have supported antichristian idolatries and gross superstitions; or who have been heretical in their doctrines, or scandalous in their lives, may be excluded from the sacred service and otherwise punished and disgraced, when the times here predicted shall arrive: yet being brought to repentance, they may be employed in the worship of God, and admitted to perform more ordinary services. Or, in general, effectual means will be used, to prevent the exceedingly great scandal and wide-spreading mischief, of an unregenerate and ungodly ministry. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, Lev. 1:5—9. Num. 8:19. 18:1—7. 2 Kings 23:9. 1 Chr. 23:2—28.)

V. 15, 16. Zadok was made high-priest by Solomon, when Abiathar was degraded for rebellion, according to the sentence denounced against the family of Eli. (Marg. Ref. i. Notes, 1 Sam. 2:35, 36. 1 Kings 1:8—10, 39. 2:26, 27, 35.) Zadok signifies righteous: and it is probable that his posterity in general supported the worship of JEHOVAH, when the other priests went astray from him; and therefore the priest-hood was to be established among them, and they would be honoured by exclusively performing those services, in which the priests had the nearest access to God. In this prophecy, they represent faithful, holy, and conscientious ministers of Christ: and it is here predicted under this allusion, that such ministers shall greatly abound, and be encouraged in the happy period intended.—It is observable, that the table in the sanctuary is mentioned rather than the altar of incense; perhaps intimating the change in the external institutions of divine worship, which would take place before the accomplishment of the prophecy. It is not easy to determine, whether any external regulations, in respect of divine ordinances, answering to these predictions, will be made among the converted Jews, when reinstated in their own land, or not.—(Marg. Ref.)

V. 17—20. The garments of the priests as appointed in the law are here referred to, though with some variations. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. o—q. Notes, Ex. 28:40—43.)—The prescribed attire may denote, that every thing should be so devised, as to render Christians and ministers most unincumbered, and prepared for their work; and that they should “abstain from all appearance of evil,” and whatever may prove offensive and disgusting in their deportment and ministrations. The putting off their garments, that they might not “sanctify the people with” them, may prophetically refer to the superstitions in use among papists and others, who suppose a sanctifying efficacy, inherent in the garments or relics of holy men. “They shall not tie them to an expectation of sanctity to be derived from them.” Bp. Hall. (Marg. Ref. r, s.) All these superstitions will be at length abolished; and yet a decent distinction will be preserved between things sacred and common. (Notes, 42:14.) The way also in which the priests were directed to wear their hair, in the medium between opposite extremes, might denote the attention that should be paid to gravity and decorum in their external appearance, as well as the simplicity and spirituality of their hearts. (Marg. Ref. t, u.)—And within. (17) That is, in the temple itself.

V. 21. Marg. Ref. Notes, Lev. 10:8—11.

V. 22. According to the law, the high-priest was not allowed to marry either a widow, or a divorced person: but here all the priests are forbidden to marry any widow, except the widow of a priest. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, Lev. 21:7, 10—15, vv. 13—15.) This regulation plainly intimates the superior sanctity of the times referred to. There is no reason, however, to induce us to a literal interpretation of this regulation, as if binding on Christian ministers, any more than for such an interpretation of the other rules of this vision: it only implies, that in the predicted period, they would avoid all scandalous or suspicious connexions, and every thing that could lessen their characters among the people, or discredit their sacred office.—It is observable, that marriage is always considered as consistent with the most sacred characters, and in the most holy persons, under every dispensation of the church, and even in its highest state of earthly purity.

V. 23, 24. (Marg. Ref. z. Notes, 22: Lev. 10:8—11, 26. Dent. 33:10. Mal. 2:4—9.)—The priests and Levites under the Mosaic dispensation frequently acted as magistrates. (Marg. Ref. a. Notes, Dent. 17:8—13. 1 Chr. 23:2—6. v. 4. 26:29—32. 2 Chr. 19:5—14.) In allusion to which, it is perhaps here intimated, that controversies will, in the times predicted, be generally decided by arbitration; by reference to ministers and according to the law of God; and not by litigations before human tribunals, according to the laws of man. (5) (Notes and P. O. Acts 6:1—7. Note, 1 Cor. 6:1—6.)—The particular mention of hallowing the sabbath, in this emblematical prophecy of a future prosperous state of religion; implies the importance, as well as the perpetual obligation of that sacred institution: when true piety most prevails it will be most honoured by ministers and people. (Marg. Ref. b, c. Notes, Is. 56:5—7. 58:13, 14.)

V. 25—27. ^aWhosoever touched a dead body became legally unclean. (Num. 19:1.) and thereby was unqualified to attend upon God's worship in the temple. (Lev. 22:3.) His uncleanness continued seven days; . . . and the priests were to reckon to him (a priest) “seven days more.” Louth. (Marg. Ref. d, e. Notes, Lev. 21:1—6. Num. 19: 11, 21.)—Even when those additional days were expired, he must recommence his ministrations by offering a sin-offering. (Marg. Ref. g. Notes, Ex. 29:10—14. Lev. 4.) The superiority of Christian ministers, in the approaching happy period over their natural affections, is here denoted with reference to the law of Moses: they are supposed to mourn for their near relations; but they are represented as moderating their grief, and not long permitting it to interrupt them in their important work; yet still even in this respect needing forgiveness, through Christ our sin-offering.

V. 28—30. The portion both of the land, and of its increase, which were presented as a holy oblation to God, were by him given to the priests for their maintenance. Thus they would have no inheritance, distinct from the portion which God reserved for himself. They would be maintained, so to speak, at his table; and would forfeit their support, if his worship should be forsaken. What particular regulations, concerning the provision for ministers in the predicted times, are thus foretold, the event must determine: certainly important alterations are needful in that respect. In general it may intimate, that they would keep at a distance from all polluting, inordinate, or inexpedient indulgence of their appetites.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—16. No man should presume, even in appearance, to arrogate to himself that glory which belongs to God alone. It is also very proper that Christ our Prince should "in all things have the pre-eminence;" but though the way, by which he has entered into heaven, is for ever shut against the whole fallen race of Adam; yet he has opened for us "a new and living way," by which we may find access and acceptance through faith in his blood. He also graciously comes among his assembled people, to commune with them, before they go to be with him in heaven. Then the glory of the Lord fills his sanctuary, and his people adore him with humble gratitude: and we should carefully meditate on these goings of our God and King, and hearken to all that he says to us, concerning "the ordinances and laws of his house;" and we should mark well the entrance into his courts, and all the goings out of them. Thus we shall be able to see, how rebelliously even professed Christians have prostituted his sacraments, and the sacred ministry, by throwing them open to strangers, enemies, and evidently unregenerate persons; to the disgrace of the gospel, and the grief of true believers, and the encouragement of wicked men. Alas! they, to whom these charges have been committed, have not kept them: but have profaned them for secular interest or carnal affection: to feed hungry relatives, or to enrich or humour ungodly connexions. Or men have heaped to themselves flattering teachers after their own lusts, or they have made the seals of God's covenant the passport to preferment! These are gross violations of the covenant, and great abominations, of which it should "suffice all the parties concerned." (P. O. Rev. 18:9—19.) They have always been the ruin of vital godliness, in proportion as they have prevailed; and indeed they prevail almost universally. But whatever men may connive at or determine, the Lord will certainly exclude all such as are "uncircumcised in heart;" and though they may enter into the outward sanctuary, they shall find no admission into heaven.—Those professed ministers of religion, who forsake God, and lead the people astray into idolatry, superstition, heresy, or wickedness, shall even bear their iniquity: and when they who sustain this sacred character fall into scandalous sins, they should not be hasty in returning to their public work: for even if they repent, and again serve God and enjoy communion with him, and be in some respects employed by him; yet they may not be able to recover their influence or to be useful as before: and if they be degraded and bear their shame, for an example to others; they should not complain, but be thankful for acceptance in the meanest place or most laborious services. But such as indeed keep the charge of the sanctuary, and closely adhere to the Lord when others go astray from him, and boldly protest against prevailing crimes, shall be peculiarly honoured of God as instruments of glorifying him, and of doing good to his people, by their prayers, examples and ministrations.

V. 17—31. All who are employed in the important work of the ministry, should be of harmless and blameless conversation; sound in the faith, full of good works; of exemplary temperance, sobriety, and gravity: walking humbly before God, and circumspectly in the sight of men: not arrogating honour to themselves, or leading the people into a superstitious eneration of them; yet acting honourably, and maintaining a sober peculiarity in their whole conduct. They should perform the most common actions of life in a pious and sanctified manner; their apparel, and the whole of their style of living, should be plain, simple, frugal, and such as manifests their indifference about worldly things: they should be careful in forming connexions, and in the choice of wives, and prudent in the management of their families; showing that they are governed by reason, conscience, and the fear of God, not by passion and humour, in all these matters. They should teach the people, both by word and example, the difference between the holy and profane, the clean and the unclean: they should study to be peacemakers, and should regulate their judgment and decisions in all cases by the commandments of God; and not according to their own humours, interests, or partialities: they should observe, and teach others to observe, the statutes of the Lord, in all the ordinances of his house, and in hallowing his sabbaths: they should govern their passions and moderate their sorrows, by stricter rules than they expect others to do; not suffering their work to be interrupted, or improperly performed, whenever they can help it. They should delight in every part of their sacred services: and yet do all in a humble reliance on Christ our Sin-offering, and his precious blood and prevailing intercession: and they should be superior to all avarice and sensuality. The Lord himself is the Portion of such ministers; and they need not be anxious respecting a temporal subsistence, though they have no possession in Israel. Their God will incline his servants to perform their bounden duty, by supplying their wants: and thus he will cause his blessing to rest on the houses of their benefactors, in answer to their prayers for them. So that they will not generally be obliged to involve themselves in worldly cares and employments for a maintenance: much less will they be driven to do any thing sinful or scandalous through urgent necessity: but trusting in God and doing his will, they shall be provided for as it is good for them; and "having food and raiment, they will learn to be therewith content." Lord, increase the number of such faithful and exemplary ministers; and enlarge and prosper the spiritual priesthood, all over the whole earth.

NOTES.—CHAP. XLV. V. 1—8. The division of the land, appointed in these verses and in the forty-eighth chapter, entirely differs from that which took place in the days of Joshua; and nothing, at all answerable to it, seems to have occurred when the Jews returned from Babylon: but whether it will be, in any measure, literally fulfilled at their future restoration to their own land; or whether it figuratively describe the regulations which shall at length take place in the affairs of the church, cannot be positively determined. It seems evident, that our translators did right in adding the word reeds, to the numbers mentioned in this admeasurement; referring to the reed, that was in the hand of Ezekiel's divine conductor, which was about four yards long; for the length and breadth of the sanctuary are stated the same as before. (Notes, 40:5. 42:15—20.) So that, unless the text be there totally changed, without any authority; this passage, as well as that, must be understood of "reeds." Except when the suburbs are mentioned, the word cubit does not once occur in either place. (2)—According to this measure, (of cubits,) the portion here set out will be almost seven miles square; whereas, if we measure by reeds, it will arise to six times as much, and can only be understood in a mystical sense. Length.—This surely is not a sufficient reason for altering the original text: for a great part of the vision, on any supposition, must be thus interpreted. There are, however, on the other hand, those who make these measures immensely larger: but I can neither understand their rules of computation, nor the grounds on which they proceed.—It is indeed evident, that the land of Canaan could by no means admit of so large a proportion being allotted to the sanctuary, with the priests and Levites; but, it is probable this was intended to intimate the immensely large extent of the Christian church, above that of Israel; especially in those glorious times which are doubtless emblematically predicted.—Supposing, therefore, that reeds are intended, this holy oblation would on the imply, that in those happy days, kings and rulers will take a more leading and active and liberal part, in supporting the worship of God, according to the gospel, than many at present think they ought to do? PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

We should present to the Lord an oblation, of the first and best of all our possessions; that we may honour him with our substance, and obtain his blessing on all our labours and comforts.—It is the duty of Christians, according to their ability, to provide for the decent and comfortable subsistence of ministers, that they may attend to their work without distraction. But it becomes ministers to be content even with a scanty provision, and to “suffer all things rather than hinder the gospel of Christ.” The interests of religion require that they should generally reside near their work, and as retired as may be from the vain hurry of the world; that they may “give themselves to the word of God and prayer;” and that every thing pertaining to them may savour of holiness and piety.—Subjects also should willingly contribute what is requisite to the honourable support of their governors, and the charges of government: and princes, especially “the princes of Israel,” ought to imitate the equity and lenity of Christ our King: they should use their authority for the good of the people, and lay no needless or oppressive burdens on them; that they may comfortably enjoy their possessions. If any have deviated (as alas! too many have, and still do,) from these salutary rules; they must be warned to proceed no further, but to let the past iniquity suffice; to remove all violence and spoil, and to terminate all exactions. These are the duties of men in every age: and the happy time is coming, when all ranks in every part of the earth will attend to them. Then there will be no more fraud, oppression, misery, war, or devastation; but universal righteousness, peace, and prosperity. (Note, Rev. 20:1—6.)—It is an important part of the will of God, that men should deal with exact honesty in all the transactions of life: no zeal, orthodoxy, or diligence in religion can compensate for the want of truth and justice in our moral conduct; though for a time they may cloak it. The Lord requires a just weight and a true balance, and exactness in every one of our dealings.—All should use their influence, and improve their talents, in promoting the cause of godliness. The sabbaths and ordinances of God, and the commemoration of his benefits, should be our chief delight and satisfaction; and we should aim to reduce our various duties to some regular method, that they may not interfere with each other; and to persist in it till it become habitual. And, though nothing we do can atone for sin; our zealous services testify our acceptance of the sacrifice of Christ our Prince and High-Priest, which according to his part, he has most graciously prepared for us, and to which we must have continual respect in all our approaches to God. For our very best duties are polluted with sin; we pollute the ordinances in which we join, and all that we are connected with, till they are cleansed in the fountain of his blood: and our errors, ignorance, and simplicity, as well as our wilful sins, need the same cleansing. But his oblation of himself once offered is of infinite sufficiency, and answers these and all other purposes of mercy to the whole multitude of believers, in every age and nation: and it would equally suffice for the whole human species, were they made willing to come to God by him, who by “one offering hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified.” As therefore “Christ our

Let us live like strangers and pilgrims on earth, rejoicing in Christ, as we pass through this desert to heaven; and then we shall soon arrive in those mansions above, “where is fulness of joy, and pleasures at God’s right hand for evermore.”

NOTES.—CHAP. XLVI. V. 1—3. The prophet had before observed, that “the way of the gate of the outward sanctuary, which looketh toward the east, . . . was shut;” and had been informed, that it must not be opened, but for the prince. (Note, 44:1—3.) But “the gate of the inner court” on the east is here spoken of. This was to be shut on other days, but to be opened on the sabbaths and new moons, until the evening. According to this, it seems, that none were at any time to come into the sanctuary by the east gate of the outward court, except the prince: and that the priests and Levites must go into the inner court by the north or south gates, except on the sabbaths and new moons: when, entering the outward court by the north or south gates, perhaps they might pass into the inner court by the east gate: or they must open it, that the prince might enter, and that the people might worship before it, with the altar and sacrifices full in view.—“The prince only shall enter by the way of that gate; and when he is to enter, shall stand at the post of that gate, until the priest have prepared his burnt-offering and peace-offering; and . . . when they have made this safe way for him, he shall come in, having first bowed down, and worshipped at the threshold of the gate. Likewise the people . . . shall worship at the door of this gate, but they shall not presume to enter by it.” Bp. Hall. This seems to denote the constant, reverential, and exemplary attendance of kings on the pure, evangelical ordinances of religion, in the approaching flourishing days of the church. Some indeed interpret it of Christ’s meeting his assembled people on their solemn festivals, especially on his own day, to apply to them the benefits of his atonement and prevailing mediation: but, he does not meet his people as joining in their worship, or as offering any sacrifice: so that this interpretation appears to be inadmissible. (Marg. Ref.)

The porch of that gate without. (2) Note, 40:9.—Prepare, &c. Or, “offer” it: for so the word often means.—The people, &c. (3) The gate on the sabbaths and new moons was not to be shut till evening; which implied, that those days should be wholly employed in religious exercises: whereas on other days men might attend as they had leisure, and then return to their ordinary employments. (Note, 12.)

V. 4—7. “This was a new ordinance; whereupon the number of the beasts, and the proportions of the meat and drink-offerings, are different here from those prescribed in the law.” Louth. (*Marg. 4 And ¹he burnt offering that the prince shall offer unto the Lord in the sabbath-day shall be six lambs without blemish, and a ram without blemish.

5 And ¹the meat-offering shall be an ephah for a ram, and the meat-offering for the lambs ¹as he shall be able to give, and a hin of oil to an ephah.

6 And in the day of the new moon it shall be a young bullock without blemish, and six lambs, and a ram: they shall be without blemish.

7 And he shall prepare a meat-offering, an ephah for a bullock, and an ephah for a ram, and for the lambs according as his hand shall attain unto, and a hin of oil to an ephah.

8 And when the prince shall enter, ¹he shall go in by the way of the porch of ¹that gate, and he shall go forth by the way thereof.

9 ¹But when the people of the land shall come before the Lord in the solemn feasts, ¹he that entereth in by the way of the north gate to worship, shall go out by the way of the south gate; and he that entereth by the way of the south gate, shall go forth by the way of the north gate: he shall not return by the way of the gate whereby he came in, but shall go forth over against it.

10 And ¹the prince in the midst of them, when they go in, shall go in; and when they go forth, shall go forth.

11 And in the feasts and in the solemnities, ¹the meat-offering shall be an ephah to a bullock, and an ephah to a ram, and to the lambs as he is able to give, and a hin of oil to an ephah.

12 Now when the prince shall prepare ¹a voluntary burnt-offering, or peace-offerings voluntarily unto the Lord, ¹one shall then open him the gate that looketh toward the east, and he shall prepare his burnt-offering and his peace-offerings, ¹as he did on the sabbath-day: then he shall go forth; and after his going forth ¹one shall shut the gate.

13 Thou shalt daily prepare a burnt-offering unto the Lord of a lamb of the first year without blemish: thou shalt prepare it every morning.

14 And thou shalt prepare a meat-offering for it every morning, ¹the sixth part of an ephah, and the third part of a hin of oil, to temper with the fine flour; a meat-offering continually by a perpetual ordinance unto the Lord.

15 Thus shall they prepare the lamb, and the meat-offering, and the oil, every morning ¹for a continual burnt-offering. [Practical Observations.]

16 ¹Thus saith the Lord God; ¹If the prince give a gift unto any of his sons, the inheritance thereof shall be his sons'; it shall be their possession by inheritance.

17 But if he give a gift of his inheritance to one of his servants, then it shall be his ¹to the year of liberty; after, it shall return to the prince: but his inheritance shall be his sons' for them.

18 Moreover, ¹the prince shall not take of the people's inheritance by oppression, to thrust them out of their possession; but he shall give his sons' inheritance out of his own possession: that ¹any people be not scattered every man from his possession.

19 ¹After, he brought me through ¹the entry, which was at the side of the gate, into the holy chambers of the priests, which looked toward the north; and behold, there was a place on the two sides westward.

20 Then said he unto me, This is the place where the priests shall boil the trespass-offering and the sin-offering, where they shall bake the meat-offering; that they bear them not out into the outer court, ¹to sanctify the people.

21 Then he brought me forth into the outer court, and caused me to pass by the four corners of the court; and behold, ¹in every corner of the court there was a court.

22 In the four corners of the court there were courts ¹joined of forty cubits long and thirty broad: these four ¹corners were of one measure.

23 And there was a row of building round about in them, round about them four, and it was made with boiling-places under the rows round about.

24 Then said he unto me, These are the places of them that boil, ¹where the ministers of the house shall boil the sacrifice of the people.

that all the people must enter from the north, or from the south. (Note, 1-3.) But those who entered from the north were to go out by the south, and they who entered by the south, to go out by the north. This may signify, that every thing should be regulated, in respect of divine worship, in that way which may most effectually prevent disorder and interruption: but it is generally supposed to intimate that men should go forward, and make progress in religion, and go through with it; and not be superficial, hypocritical, or apostate.—There being no passage or thoroughfare out of the temple westward; if the people had entered in at the east gate, they must have returned back the same way they came in: which would have been turning their back upon God and the place of his residence. ¹Louth.—As the prince was to return by the east gate, this reason is scarcely conclusive. V. 10. Though the prince was directed to enter and return by a way of his own; yet he might enter the sanctuary at the same time, and continue as long there as the people; and thus testify his fellowship with them in the worship of God.—He shall pay the same attendance upon God's worship with the people; since all men are equal in the sight of God. ¹Louth. V. 13-15. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, Ex. 29:38-41. Num. 28:3-10.) It is observable, that nothing is here said about "the evening-sacrifice;" or the additional lamb, morning and evening, on "the sabbath-days." Many suppose the evening-sacrifice to be included: but as "the morning" is repeated in a remarkable manner, and the evening is not once mentioned; it seems rather to be an intimation of that change in the externals of religion, which the coming of Christ would introduce.

V. 16-18. This may signify, that princes in those days will not waste their revenues in enriching favourites and dependants. The prince might settle a perpetual inheritance on his sons; but the grant made to any servant would expire at the year of jubilee.—Some think, that this implies, that Christ our Prince gives his children, or true believers, their inheritance unalienably: but those whom he only endues with gifts and talents, employs in some part of his service, whilst they remain unregenerate, will be deprived of all, when true Christians receive the full possession of their inheritance. And in this case, the eighteenth verse may be considered as descriptive of the character and government of our Prince of Peace. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 19-24. ¹The flesh of the sacrifices, which were to be eaten, was to be boiled, except the flesh of the passover. (2 Chr. 35:13.) So it is taken notice of as a piece of daintiness... in the sons of Eli, that they would not have the flesh which came to their share sodden, but roasted. (1 Sam. 2: 15.)... The Hebrew word Keturoh, translated joined, is rendered in the margin, made with chimneys, which sense very well agrees with the description... There was a place in the inner court for boiling the trespass and sin-offerings; (19, 20.) and boiling places might be appointed for boiling the peace-offerings, which... perhaps were dressed by the Levites;... whereas the former were boiled by the priests in the court properly belonging to them. ¹Louth.—About the walls of these little courts, which were as kitchens, were little chambers for the cooks. (Marg. and Marg. Ref.)—The most holy things, of which none but the priests might eat, were to be prepared in the inner court: the peace-offerings, of which the people partook, were to be boiled in these little courts, at the corners of the outward court. CHAPTER XLVII.

The prophet is shown waters springing from under the threshold of the temple, growing wider and deeper, and at length becoming an impassable river, which healed the desert, and the dead sea; abounded with fish; and had on each bank fruit-trees filled with new fruit every month, the leaves of which served for medicine, 1-12. sanctify the people," may intimate, that the peculiar privileges of believers are not granted, or left open to unconverted persons; and that they should not promiscuously be admitted to partake of the Lord's supper: as this tends to induce in them an opinion, that they are holy persons, and need not conversion; and thus occasions much superstition and delusion. (Note, 44:17-20, v. 19.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-15. We should worship and commune with God every day, in our closets and families, and in public as we have time and opportunity. On six days of the week indeed, men are called to serve God in their temporal employments; and must not neglect those duties, even for the sake of spending all their time in his more immediate worship. But on his own day we all should occupy ourselves wholly in his sacred service; and, laying aside every other employment and all avocations, as much as may be, and shaking off sloth and inactivity, we must learn to delight in the succession of one religious exercise to another, as the proper business of the whole day: and it may be right occasionally to appropriate a day from the other six, to be spent in a similar manner.—It behooves those in authority to use their influence and example, in promoting a general regard to the worship of God, and their wealth in preparing every thing for it; they should frequent his holy ordinances with reverence and attention, and without betraying any symptoms of weariness: for, however they may be distinguished in other matters from their subjects, they are in the sight of God entirely upon a level with them; and every distinction admissible respecting his worship, between them and others, must be confined merely to external circumstances. But whether rulers will or will not join with us, in attending on the lively ordinances, in which "Christ is set forth as evidently crucified among us," he, our Prince of Peace, will surely manifest his presence amidst us: and especially when we spend his holy day with his assembled saints, and feed by humble faith on the Sacrifice, which he has prepared and offered for us. In expectation and assurance of his glorious and gracious presence, we should worship with reverence in his courts; abound in spiritual sacrifices; consecrate our talents and substance to him, according to our ability; and take care that every thing be done decently and in order. We should recollect, that Press forward is the Christian's motto: we must still depart further and further from our sins, and sinful pursuits and connexions; and get further into the knowledge, practice, and experience of the gospel: and we should dread a hypocritical profession and worship, which generally terminate in a man's returning into his old course of sin and death.—The Lord has prescribed us many duties, as of indispensable obligation: but he has also graciously left many things to our voluntary choice; especially as to the proportion of our time and substance to be appropriated to his immediate worship and service; that they, who "greatly delight in his commandments," may abound in them to his glory, the edification of their brethren, and their own benefit; without entangling their own consciences, or prescribing rules that might be inexpedient to others; or inducing them to formal services, for which they have no heart, and in which God could have no pleasure. But we must never omit our daily worship, nor neglect to apply the sacrifice of the Lamb of God to our souls, for pardon, peace, and salvation.

V. 16-24. Our King of peace and righteousness will enrich all his spiritual progeny with an unalienable inheritance: nor will he let any man in any way serve him, without allotting him a suitable reward. But it will be dreadful to be put off with a revocable portion, and to be left utterly destitute, when the children shall receive their full liberty and eternal inheritance; let us then rest in nothing short of regenerating grace, and the Spirit of adoption witnessing with our spirits, that we are children and heirs of God.—If all princes had in them the mind that was in Christ; their peaceable subjects would never have cause to complain of being thrust out of their possessions, or scattered from them; in order that favourites and dependants might be enriched with the spoil. They would rather straiten themselves to relieve the people; as "knowing the grace of Christ, who, though he was rich, for our sakes became poor, that we through his poverty might be rich."—The minister of the gospel is as truly serving Christ and the people, when in his study he is searching the Scriptures, meditating, and preparing for his work, as when he is publicly preaching the word to the congregation. He should endeavour to get well acquainted with his instructions, and to speak from a matured judgment, and an experienced heart, and with fervency of spirit: he should be careful, both in dispensing the word, and in administering the sacraments, to guard the people against superstition and false confidence, and from mistaking the notion or form for "the power of godliness;" and every thing, in his outward accommodations, and manner of life, and his method of spending his time, should be so regulated, as may best tend to make him "approved unto God, a workman that needeth not be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth."

NOTES.—CHAP. XLVII. V. 1-5. This part of the vision must be understood figuratively; which is important, in forming a determination concerning the import of the whole vision. Doubtless both Solomon's temple and the second temple were well supplied with water, conveyed thither in order to wash the sacrifices, and for similar purposes; and to preserve every thing clean and wholesome: but these waters flowed originally from the temple, not as a common sewer, but as a delightful fertilizing river. The prophet had before surveyed the doors of the house: but he now for the first time discovered a very small stream of waters, (so the word signifies,) springing forth from under the threshold of the house eastward, at his right hand, and at the south side of the altar. These waters no doubt, were an emblem of the "gospel preached with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven" to render it effectual; and conveying with it all spiritual blessings to the souls of believers, and to the nations of the earth. (Marg. Ref. b. Note, Rev. 22:1.) "The gradual rise of the waters represented in this vision, denotes the large effusion of the Spirit, which was very remarkable at the first publication of the gospel, and its wonderful increase from small beginnings; and will be so again, when God shall "pour the Spirit of grace" upon the Jews, in order to their conversion. (Zech. 12:10.) . . . The supplies of grace are often represented, in the holy writers, under the metaphor of a river, and streams watering the dry and thirsty earth, both cleansing and making fruitful the ground where they pass. The metaphor is probably taken from the river that watered paradise. Louth. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. c-f. Note, Gen. 2:10-14.)—When the prophet had been shown the source of these waters, he was led by his conductor to observe the progress and increase of them; and, as the east gate was shut, he was brought out from the temple north ward.—When his conductor, with the line in his hand, had measured the length of a thousand cubits from the source, he led the prophet across the waters, which only reached to his ankles: but continuing to try their depth every thousand cubits, he found them grow still deeper every time, till they could no longer be forded, but were become a river impassable, except by swimming.—This was an emblem of the progress of Christianity, from small beginnings to an immense increase; and the latter part of the representation may relate to the times, when the gospel shall fill the earth, and produce the most extensive and important good effects on the state of mankind in every nation.—Thus the river signifies the same as the "stone, cut out without hands, and becoming a great mountain and filling the whole earth;" and the grain of mustard-seed becoming a large plant, like a tree in which the fowls of the air make their nests. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. g. Notes, Is. 2:2-5. 9:5,6. Dan. 2:34,35,44,45. Matt. 13:31,32.) The passage may also be accommodated to the progressive growth in knowledge and holiness of true Christians: and it is often applied to the holy Scriptures, in which there are some things plain to the meanest capacity, and others incomprehensible to the most exalted created understanding; and only to be apprehended by faith, as a river that cannot be forded.

'bank of the river were very many trees on the one side and on the other.

8 Then said he unto me, These waters issue out toward the east country, and go down into the desert, and go into the sea: which being brought forth into the sea, the waters shall be healed.

9 And it shall come to pass, that every thing that liveth, which moveth, whithersoever the rivers shall come, shall live: and there shall be a very great multitude of fish, because these waters shall come thither: for they shall be healed: and every thing shall live whither the river cometh.

10 And it shall come to pass, that the fishes shall stand upon it, from En-gedi even unto En-eglam; they shall be a place to spread forth nets; their fish shall be according to their kinds, as the fish of the great sea, exceeding many.

11 But the miry places thereof and the marshes thereof shall not be healed; they shall be given to salt.

12 And by the river upon the bank thereof, on this side and on that side, shall grow all trees for meat, whose leaf shall not fade, neither shall the fruit thereof be consumed: it shall bring forth new fruit according to his months, because their waters they issued out of the sanctuary: and the fruit thereof shall be for meat, and the leaf thereof for medicine.

13 ¶ Thus saith the Lord God: "This shall be the border, whereby ye shall inherit the land according to the twelve tribes of Israel: Joseph shall have two portions.

14 And ye shall inherit it, one as well as another: concerning the which I lifted up my hand to give it unto your fathers: and this land shall fall unto you for inheritance.

15 And this shall be the border of the land toward the north side, from the great sea, the way of Hethlon, as men go to Zedad;

16 Hamath, Berothah, Sibraim, which is between the border of Damascus and the border of Hamath; Hazar-haticon, which is by the coast of Hauran.

17 And the border from the sea shall be Hazar-enan, the border of Damascus, and the northward, and the border of Hamath. And this is the north side.

18 And the east side ye shall measure from Hauran, and from Damascus, and from Gilead, and from the land of Israel by Jordan, from the border unto the east sea. And this is the east side.

19 And the south side southward, from Tamar even to the waters of strife in Kadesh, the river to the great sea. And this is the south side southward.

20 The west side also shall be the great sea from the border, till a man come over against Hamath. This is the west side.

21 So shall ye divide this land unto you according to the tribes of Israel.

22 ¶ And it shall come to pass, that ye shall divide it by lot for an inheritance unto you, and to the strangers that sojourn among you, which shall beget children among you: and they shall be unto you as born in the country among the children of Israel; they shall have inheritance with you among the tribes of Israel.

23 And it shall come to pass, that in what time the stranger sojourneth, there shall ye give him his inheritance, saith the Lord God.

V. 8-10. These waters ran eastward into the desert, and then into the sea; which is supposed to mean the dead sea, or the lake of Sodom, that lay east of Jerusalem. In this sea it is said no living creature is found; at least it is evident, that it does not abound with fish, as other seas do. But the prophet was informed by his conductor, that when the waters from the sanctuary should enter the sea, its waters also would become wholesome, and fit for the production and habitation of fishes, and of every living thing found in other seas; for to every place whither they flowed they would communicate life abundantly: so that fishers would spread their nets from one side of this lake of Sodom to another, (for En-gedi lay on one side, and En-eglam on the other side, of the lake,) and take exceedingly great quantities of all those kinds of fish, which they had been used to catch in the Mediterranean sea. 'Mystically denoting the healing virtue of God's grace to cure the vices and corruptions of wicked men.' Lowth.—This represented the efficacy of the gospel, when attended by the pouring out of the Holy Spirit, to communicate spiritual life to the most atrocious sinners, like those of Sodom: to render the Gentile nations productive of numerous converts; checking the progress of iniquity, undermining the foundations of idolatry, reforming cities and countries, and bringing men to know, worship, and serve the one living and true God, where his name had not before been known. So that the ministers of Christ would meet with abundant encouragement to labour, and to preach the gospel, where before none ever thought of being so employed: till at length the most hopeless and benighted nations would be abundantly filled with the light and holiness of true religion. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Joel 3:18-21. v. 18. Matt. 4:18-22. v. 19. 13:47-50. Luke 5:1-11. v. 10.)

The rivers, &c. (9) The word "rivers and river," are promiscuously used in this verse: though some of the Jewish writers are of opinion, that these waters divide themselves, and some flow eastward, and others westward; which opinion they ground... chiefly upon the words of Zechariah. 14:8. Lowth. (Note, Zech. 14:8-9. v. 8.) The dual (marg.) seems to mark out two rivers: but as the word rendered "country" (8) is Galilee, it perhaps implies that one river flowed into the sea of Galilee, though that which flowed into the dead sea be principally noticed.

V. 11. There would, however, still remain some marshes, reeks, or swamps, into which these healing waters could not find an entrance; and these would be left incurably sterile and worthless. This represents the case of those, who reject, neglect, or pervert the gospel; or those countries, which exclude it from among them. In short it is the only healing medicine for the distempers of our fallen race; and they will be given up as reprobate to final ruin who are not healed by it. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, Heb. 6:4-8. 2 Pet. 2:20-22.)

V. 12. St. John has almost transcribed this part of the vision, and applied it to the salvation of Christ, as perfected in the felicity of heaven. (Note, Rev. 22:2-5. v. 2.) In this vision, the trees, on each side of the river of the water of Life, seem to signify the several parts of the mediatorial work of Christ, and the sufficiency of his salvation to supply all the various wants of believers, and to complete their uninterrupted felicity. Many expositors interpret this verse of believers, who are, "trees of righteousness" planted on the banks of this river in great abundance. Yet the plenteous provisions of the gospel, the precious promises of the sacred word, and the privileges of believers, as communicated to their souls by the quickening Spirit, may be aptly thus represented. These abound on each side of the river, wherever the gospel is successfully preached: they afford nourishment and delight to the souls of men; they never fade or wither, or are exhausted; they are various, according to the variety of circumstances and occasions, in the Christian's experience; as if a tree should yield a succession of different kinds of fruit in great abundance, through the months of the year: and even the leaves serve as medicines to their souls: the warnings and reproofs of the word, and the salutary corrections of their Father's rod, though generally less valued, and always less pleasant, than divine consolations, yet tend to heal the maladies of their souls, and to restore them to holiness and happiness. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, Gen. 2:8, 9. 3:22-24. Prov. 3:18. Rev. 2:6, 7.)—If believers are intended by these trees, the emblem shows that they are rendered flourishing and fruitful by the word and Spirit of God; that they become exceedingly useful; that they persevere in their fruitfulness and usefulness through the various changes of life; that they exercise various Christian graces in succession; and that their profession, doctrine, example, conversation, and endeavours, powerfully tend to instruct, reform, and benefit mankind. (7. Notes, Ps. 1:1-3. v. 3. 92:13-15. Jer. 17:5-8. John 15:2.)—Because their waters, &c. [Notes, 1-5. Rev. 22:1-6.]

V. 13-23. The prophet here again returns to the division of the land, the account of which had been interrupted by intervening discoveries. (45:1-8.) As no such division of Canaan took place after the captivity, this must be understood of future events. Several names are here added, or changed for others: yet the boundaries of the land are nearly the same as were marked out by Moses; except, that it does not appear, whether any part, or what part, of the country east of Jordan, is included within the eastern boundary. (*Marg. and Marg. Ref. b-i. Notes, Num. 34:1-15. PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The more carefully we examine the things of God and religion, the more interesting will be our discoveries concerning them.—All our invaluable privileges and advantages are conveyed to us through the gospel; they flow from Christ, our Temple, Altar, and Door of access to the Father; they all spring from the everlasting love and mercy of our God, through his atoning sacrifice, and by the sanctification of the Holy Spirit. No obstructions of men, or fallen angels, can interrupt the communication of spiritual blessings from the fulness of Christ to the souls of his beloved people; and the course of the greatest rivers might far more easily be stopped, than the progress of his gospel, when God is pleased to prosper the labours of his servants. It has hitherto continued gradually to diffuse its influence; and it will still run wider and deeper in its energy and effects till it shall fill, heal, and fructify the whole earth. We may rejoice in the assured hope of this happy event; and in the mean time we may be satisfied, that the water, which Christ gives his praying people, shall be "in them a well of water springing up into everlasting life."—Whilst we wait for the completion of our felicity, and are conflicting with various trials and temptations: let us attend to the sacred Scriptures, beginning with the most obvious and practical truths, and proceeding gradually to those which are the most difficult; remembering that many things will be found incomprehensible to us, which we must apprehend by faith and humbly adore, but not presume to think that we can fathom, or judge of by our limited powers, or our proud reasonings. But we should chiefly mark the blessed effects, which the word and spirit of God are every where represented as producing on the souls of men; that we may inquire whether they have wrought such a change in our judgment, and affections, and character? Into whatever place, or heart of man, these healing waters flow, they communicate divine life and holiness; they counteract the various evil propensities of our fallen nature, and teach men to "deny ungodliness and worldly lusts, and to live soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world." So that where they abound, knowledge, purity, piety, and charity, and every thing good and useful, abound likewise. How desirable then is it to be instrumental in sending the word of God to those regions which have hitherto been given up to idolatry, ignorance, impiety, and vice! and to see the preachers of the gospel encouraged to cast their nets, and to attend to their laborious work with patient hope and evident success, where sin and Satan before reigned with undisturbed sway! The time is coming when they shall thus labour and prosper, in those distant regions, which are now enveloped in Pagan or Mohammedan darkness, with as much encouragement, as the apostles did at Jerusalem, when numbers were "daily added to the church of such as should be saved;" and their converts shall be of the same excellent character as those were, "when great grace was upon them all." Yet is this blessed gospel of salvation the savour of death to numbers in every age; and those who are not made holy by it, because they neglect, oppose, or abuse it, must die in their sins and perish without remedy.—As the Lord has so amply provided in Christ Jesus all the rich variety of spiritual blessings, which can conduce to our comfort and holiness, and as those blessings lose no part of their beauty or excellency by the succession of ages: so Christians also should study to be useful and fruitful, the lights of the world and the healing of the people; that their whole conduct, and all their endeavours, may conduce to render men wiser, holier, and happier, on every side of them. They should bring forth fruit suited to the seasons of adversity and prosperity, and to the various occasions and circumstances in which they are called to act: they should consider it their duty and their privilege to have, their leaf unwithering, and their fruit increasing; because they are watered from the sanctuary of God; and they should delight in proceeding with increasing zeal and usefulness to serve him to the end of their lives. Surely none should deem themselves "branches of the living Vine," who do not in some measure bring forth such fruits as he did, when he went about doing good to the souls and bodies of men! And if all that bear the name of Christians and profess the doctrine of Christ, were of this character, his religion would appear to be most excellent and beneficial in the eyes of all beholders. Such Christians need not doubt of their inheriting the good land, which Canaan typified, and which the Lord has sworn to give to the seed of Abraham: all the Gentiles, who believe in Christ, and are united to him by the supply of his sanctifying Spirit, are the children of Abraham and heirs according to promise, and will share the privileges of Israelites, without marring their inheritance: for there is room in the church and in heaven for all, who come for the blessings of that new covenant, of which Christ is the Surety and Mediator.

NOTES.—CHAP. XLVIII. V. 1-7. This division of the land entirely differs from that which was made in the days of Joshua; and it is not probable that it should ever literally take place: but it seems to denote the equality of privilege, which subsists among all the tribes of the redeemed, whatever their previous characters have been; and their intimate union and communion with each other.—This division of the land among the twelve tribes may imply, that all true Christians shall be equally sharers in the privileges of the gospel. Louth. A portion is laid out for each tribe directly across the country from east to west: and Reuben's lot is placed between Ephraim and Judah. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, 47:13-23. Josh. 13:15-22. 15:1-12. 16:1-10. 17:11-13.)

V. 8-13. Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, 44:15, 16. 45. 1-8.—As the Levites, &c. (11.) 'All the priests were Levites; but no Levites were priests, except the descendants of Aaron.' 'As the other Levites went astray.'

V. 14 This may intimate that what has been devoted to shall be unto them ^aa thing most holy, by the border of the Levites.

13 And over against the border of the priests the Levites shall have five and twenty thousand in length, and ten thousand in breadth: all the length shall be five and twenty thousand, and the breadth ten thousand.

14 And they shall not sell it, neither exchange, nor alienate the first-fruits of the land: for it is holy unto the Lord.

15 ¶ And the five thousand, that are left in the breadth over against the five and twenty thousand, shall be ^aa profane place for the city, for dwelling, and for suburbs, and the city shall be in the midst thereof.

16 And these shall be the measures thereof; the north side four thousand and five hundred, and the south side four thousand and five hundred, and on the east side four thousand and five hundred, and the west side four thousand and five hundred.

17 And the suburbs of the city shall be toward the north two hundred and fifty, and toward the south two hundred and fifty, and toward the east two hundred and fifty, and toward the west two hundred and fifty.

18 And the residue in length over against the oblation of the holy portion shall be ten thousand eastward, and ten thousand westward: and it shall be over against the oblation of the holy portion; and the increase thereof shall be for food unto them ^athat serve the city.

19 And they that serve the city shall serve it out of all the tribes of Israel.

20 All the oblation shall be five and twenty thousand by five and twenty thousand: ye shall offer the holy oblation ^afour-square, with the possession of the city.

21 ¶ And ^athe residue shall be for the prince, on the one side and on the other of the holy oblation, and of the possession of the city, over against the five and twenty thousand of the oblation toward the east border, ^band westward over against the five and twenty thousand toward the west border, over against the portions for the prince: and it shall be the holy oblation; and the sanctuary of the house shall be in the midst thereof.

22 Moreover, from the possession of the Levites, and from the possession of the city, being in the midst of ^athat which is the prince's, between the border of Judah and the border of Benjamin, shall be for the prince.

23 As for the rest of the tribes, from the east side unto the west side, ^aBenjamin shall have ^aa portion.

24 And by the border of Benjamin, from the east side unto the west side, ^aSimeon shall have ^aa portion.

25 And by the border of Simeon, from the east side unto the west side, ^aIssachar ^aa portion.

26 And by the border of Issachar, from the east side unto the west side, ^aZebulun ^aa portion.

27 And by the border of Zebulun, from the east side unto the west side, ^aGad ^aa portion.

28 And by the border of Gad, at the south side southward, the border shall be even ^afrom Tamar unto the waters of ^astrife in Kadesh, and to ^athe river toward ^athe great sea.

29 This is ^athe land which ye shall divide by lot unto the tribes of Israel for inheritance, and these are their portions, saith the Lord God.

30 ¶ And these are ^athe goings out of the city on the north side, four thousand and five hundred measures.

31 And ^athe gates of the city shall be after the names of the tribes of Israel: three gates northward; one gate of Reuben, one gate of Judah, one gate of Levi.

32 And at the east side four thousand and five hundred: and three gates; and one gate of Joseph, one gate of Benjamin, one gate of Dan.

33 And at the south side four thousand and five hundred measures: and three gates; one gate of Simeon, one gate of Issachar, one gate of Zebulun.

34 At the west side four thousand and five hundred, ^awith their three gates; one gate of Gad, one gate of Asher, one gate of Naphtali.

35 It was round about eighteen thousand measures: ^aand the name of the city from ^athat day, shall be, ^aThe Lord is there.

V. 30-35. It is most obvious to interpret these "measures," of the reed which the prophet's conductor held in his hand: for what was the use of it, but to measure with? Or what measure should we compute by, but that which the Spirit of God has pointed out to us? By this measure the city would be near forty miles in circuit, or ten miles on each side of the square; which was vastly larger than Jerusalem ever was. Doubtless the large dimensions of the city and land were intended to intimate the great increase of religion, and the propagation of the gospel in the times predicted. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 45:1-8. 1a. 26:1, 2. 54:23, 3. 60:15-22, v. 18. Rev. 21:9-21, v. 12, 13, 16, 21.) "The same description is given of the gates of the new Jerusalem, (Rev. 21:12, 13.) to signify that all true Israelites have their share in this heavenly city, and a right to enter into it. (Rev. 22:14.) Louth.—Levi. (31) One gate is here assigned to Levi; and only one to Joseph, or the two tribes descended from him.—The land here divided is never called Canaan, nor the city measured Jerusalem; probably because they were figurative of spiritual blessings to the church and to Israel: but "the Lord is there," or, "JEHOVAH-shammah," (marg.) is the name given to this holy city: signifying that his powerful and gracious presence with his church is the source of all her peace, security, felicity, and holiness; and that at length these blessings will be abundantly communicated, and his presence and glory signally displayed among his people. (Marg. Ref. o. Marg. and Ref. Notes, Matt. 18:19, 20. 28:19, 20. John 14:18-24. Rev. 21:22-27. 22:2-5.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

When true converts enter the church by faith in Jesus Christ, all their former sins are blotted out, every stigma is removed, all distinctions are swallowed up, and the vilest of them are admitted to a full participation of all the privileges of the children of God, and made heirs according to the hope of eternal life. Yet on earth some of them must be placed more advantageously than others for their spiritual improvement: and in proportion to their degrees of grace and fruitfulness on earth, so will be their capacity for the glory and felicity of heaven, and their enjoyment of it.—Our inheritance as the spiritual priests of the living God, cannot be forfeited or exchanged: nor should we desire to change the temporal portion which our gracious Lord has allotted us.

Especially it behooves the ministers of Christ to be contented in their places, and with "such things as they have;" and, as they must by no means waste or alienate the revenues appropriated to the maintenance of religion; so the Lord will call those to a strict account who plunder them, or make the concerns of religion to subserve their love of filthy lucre.—In the visible church on earth, there will still be some part "profane;" even believers must spend part of their time in those employments which do not immediately belong to religion; and though these must be performed from pious motives and in a conscientious manner, yet they should be kept distinct from spiritual concerns.—All that belong to the Israel of God should serve the common cause, in their proper places, and according to their abilities: and those who occupy themselves in so good a work, should not be left destitute of such things as are needful for them.—The way of access into the church is open on every side, that sinners may enter by faith from all the quarters of the globe, and from all the tribes of the earth: and all that belong to the true church below, shall at last find admission into the holy city above: for all things are so regulated and established by the power, truth, and love of God, that no believer shall ever be ashamed of his confidence.—Through the whole extent of the church, even when it shall fill the earth, the Lord will vouchsafe his gracious presence and blessing. May we be found citizens of this holy city, and act consistently with that character and have the benefit and comfort of the Lord's presence with us in life, in death, and for evermore.

THE BOOK OF DANIEL.

THE WRITER of this book was contemporary with Ezekiel, but probably younger than he: yet he began to prophesy before him; and he continued in his prophetic office much longer. He was of the royal family of Judah; and having been early in life carried captive to Babylon, he soon became renowned for wisdom, and was advanced to great authority under Nebuchadnezzar: and he seems to have continued in an exalted station, and in offices of great trust and power, through all the subsequent period of the Chaldean monarchy; and afterwards under Darius the Mede and Cyrus the Persian: yet he was even then far more eminent for wisdom and piety, than for rank and authority. (Notes, 1:3—7. Ez. 14:13—21, vv. 14, 20. 28:2—5, v. 3.) Josephus, no doubt speaking the current opinion of his countrymen at that time, calls Daniel "one of the greatest of the prophets; for he was wont not only to foretell future things, as other prophets also did; but he likewise determined the time when they should come to pass." But since his time, "the Jews, in order to invalidate the evidence that results from the prophet's writings in support of Christianity, have, on the authority of a few doctors, agreed to class him among the Hagiographi;" which decision, however, does not, upon their own rules, affect his pretensions to be considered as an inspired writer. Gray's Key.—It may further be noted, that this determination, and the frivolous reasons assigned for it, are strong proofs, that his prophecy of seventy weeks has created them exceedingly great difficulties; because it so fixes the time of the Messiah's advent, that, unless Jesus of Nazareth be He, all expectations of his coming must be finally disappointed, if Daniel was indeed a prophet in the highest sense of the word. (Notes, 9:24—27.)—Our Lord, however, called him "Daniel the prophet," with a special recommendation of his predictions, even the most difficult of them, to the attention of his disciples. (Comp. 8:13, 9:27. 11:31, 12:11, with Matt. 24:15. Mark 13:14.) And there is such a coincidence between his prophecies and those of St. John, "that the latter, in his Revelation, doth more distinctly unfold those events, which the former foretells in general terms." Mede.—"In his work hath been produced such instances of his having been a prophet, as an infidel cannot deny, or, if he denies, cannot disprove." Bp. Newton.—"The first six chapters are chiefly historical, though indeed the second chapter contains the prophetic interpretation of Nebuchadnezzar's dream, concerning the kingdoms which were successively to illustrate the power of God, who removeth and setteth up kings as seemeth good to him. . . . The four historical chapters which succeed, relate to the miraculous deliverance of Daniel's companions from the furnace: the remarkable punishment of Nebuchadnezzar's arrogance; the impiety and portended fate of Belshazzar; and the divine interposition for the protection of Daniel in the lions' den. All these are written with a spirit and animation highly interesting. We seem to be present at the scenes described; and the whole is enriched with the most exalted sentiments of piety, and with the finest attestations to the praise and glory of God." Gray's Key.—The last six chapters are entirely prophetical; and a great part of them has generally been considered as extremely obscure. . . . But it is the nature of prophecies not to be thoroughly understood, till they are thoroughly fulfilled. Not that such prophecies are therefore like the pagan oracles, of an ambiguous, equivocal, and delusive nature. Obscure they may be: but there is a wide difference between obscurity and equivocation. The pagan oracles were, purposely worded in such a manner, that if they failed in one sense, they might hold good in another, though directly the contrary: the scripture prophecies have a determined meaning; and though sometimes they may comprehend more events than one, yet they are never applicable to contrary events. The pagan oracles were delivered for the immediate direction of those who consulted them; and therefore a mistake at first was of more fatal consequence: the scripture prophecies were intended more for the instruction of future ages; and therefore it is sufficient if time shall illustrate the particulars. The pagan oracles are no sooner understood, than they are despised: . . . the reverse is true of the scripture prophecies: and the better you understand, the more you will admire them. The completion of the former demonstrates their fraud and futility, the completion of the latter, their truth and divinity." Bp. Newton.—Some parts, however, of these predictions are so exceedingly plain, and have been so exactly and circumstantially fulfilled, that Porphyry, a bitter enemy of Christianity, took occasion from this circumstance, to maintain that they were written after the predicted events. This is a most important testimony: for it shows, that the completion of those parts, which relate to historical facts, terminating in the reign of Antiochus Epiphanes, was absolutely undeniable; yet it is capable of clear proof that these prophecies were extant, in the Greek language, many years before Antiochus was born; and in the hands of the Egyptians, who had no kindness either to the Jews, or their religion.

BUT in fact, the prophecies of Daniel have in all succeeding generations received as undeniable accomplishments, as those did which relate to more ancient events. They all take their beginning from about the prophet's days; they all give a concise prophetic history of the church, and of the world, as far as immediately connected with it, nearly to the end of time: for even the prophecy of the seventy weeks, though the first coming of the Messiah is the most prominent subject, shows the state of the Jewish nation to this day, and intimates events which have not yet taken place. They all, either expressly, or by consequence, predict four great monarchies; the fourth of which shall last "to the time of the end," "the end of the indignation." They all foretell long-continued calamities to the Jewish nation, and to the people of God; at length terminating in the restoration of Israel, and the final and universal triumph of true religion; the kingdom of Christ and of his saints, which must endure to the general resurrection. They are not insulated predictions; they all exhibit the same grand outlines of the plan of Providence, to the period of the church's calamities, varied in such a manner, as to reflect reciprocal light on each other. And for above two thousand years, the most prominent parts of history form the best interpretation of these astonishing prophecies.—These four kingdoms have succeeded each other; they have answered the description given of them with surprising exactness. The Messiah came at the appointed period, and was cut off; "the abomination of desolation" was set up in the holy place; Jerusalem was destroyed; the poor remnant of the Jews were scattered, and remain so to this day. The fourth kingdom, which thus desolated them, and persecuted the infant Christian church, after a time appearing in another form, has exactly answered the predictions of its blasphemy, tyranny, idolatry, and long-continued dominion, given in this ancient book: and nothing now remains, but the destruction of this kingdom, the conversion of the Jews, and the final triumphs of true religion, to render the whole history of all those ages, a clear comment on Daniel's prophecies.*—One great cause of the uncertainty, which numbers complain of as to the real meaning of these predictions, arises from learned and ingenious men trying to accommodate the events of their own time, (important indeed to them, but small in the grand concerns of the world, during revolving thousands of years,) to some detached particulars in the prophecy. But it should be remembered, that prophecy is a very small, though exact map; on which, not every country town or considerable place is found, but merely those of pre-eminent consequence. No city, so to speak, is marked in Britain but London. It should, however, be also understood, that any interpretation, which violates the geography or chronology of prophecy, must be "a private interpretation," and not the real meaning. (Note, 2 Pet. 1:20, 21.) The grand outlines alone are marked, and those in their due order and arrangement. It is also of great importance to note, that many of the prophets, perhaps all in some measure, agree in the grand events predicted: the coming of a Saviour, to be the Light of the world, a great High Priest, and a glorious King; "His sufferings, and the glory which would follow;" the present state of the Jews, the corruption and persecutions of the church by a powerful and blasphemous enemy; the final restoration of Israel; and the victories, triumphs, and kingdom of the Redeemer. Some give one view of these subjects, and some another: but all agree in the general outlines; the prophets uniformly confirm each other's testimony; and in no one instance is there a discordant voice, or any thing that can be thought so, by those who diligently examine and compare the whole. This combination of testimony gives prophecy its full force; and, connected with its accomplishment, amounts to a complete moral demonstration, that the Scriptures are the oracles of God.

* The rise and surprising progress of the Mohammedan delusion seem also clearly predicted, under the emblem of the "little horn of the third beast." (Notes 8:9—19, 22—26.)

'The prophecy is writ, part in Hebrew, part in Chaldee; for which this reason may be assigned; that those parts of it, in which the Babylonian empire was concerned, were writ in their language, viz. from 2:4. to the end of the seventh chapter; a great part of which was probably entered into their public registers.' Louth.

From the consideration, that this eminent and greatly beloved servant of God was, to extreme old age, and probably till his death, a minister of state in a heathen court, we may conclude with observing, that faith and piety are not confined to any place or station in life, but that the Lord can preserve his people humble and spiritual in the midst of all possible suares, and in the most entangling employments, to which his providence calls them.

CHAPTER I.

Jehoiakim, with part of the sacred vessels, is carried captive, 1, 2. Nebuchadnezzar commits Daniel, and certain young Jews, to the master of the eunuchs, to be instructed in the Chaldee learning; allotting them a daily portion, and changing their names, 3-7. They're sent to eat of the king's meat; and, being permitted to live on pulse and water, they improve in vigour and comeliness, 8-16. God confers on them knowledge and wisdom; so that, being far superior to the wise men of Babylon, they are preferred by the king, 17-21.

IN the third year of the reign of Jehoiakim king of Judah, came Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon unto Jerusalem, and besieged it.

2 And the Lord gave Jehoiakim king of Judah into his hand, with part of the vessels of the house of God: which he carried into the land of Shinar to the house of his god; and he brought the vessels into the treasure-house of his god.

3 ¶ And the king spake unto Ashpenaz the master of his eunuchs, that he should bring certain of the children of Israel, and of the king's seed, and of the princes;

4 Children in whom was no blemish, but well favoured, and skilful in all wisdom, and cunning in knowledge, and understanding science, and such as had ability in them to stand in the king's palace, and whom they might teach the learning and the tongue of the Chaldeans.

V. 3—7. It is evident, that Daniel and his companions were carried captive, when Jehoiakim fell into the hands of Nebuchadnezzar, though it is not here mentioned, and before the captivity of Jehoiachin.—The eastern monarchs have in every age been accustomed to employ eunuchs, in their palaces and about their persons; and as these were frequently advanced to the highest dignities; the original word is sometimes used in general for a courtier, or officer in the palace. It is probable however that Daniel and his companions were eunuchs.—'The master of the eunuchs,' on this occasion, received orders from Nebuchadnezzar, to select from the young men of Israel, and especially from those of royal and noble birth, such as were unblemished in their outward form, and of comely figure, who had good capacities, and had received the rudiments of a good education; and whose prudence, good sense, and learning might render them fit to occupy some station at court. It was then, as well as at present, deemed a branch of magnificence to be served by foreigners; perhaps the king had observed several of the young Jews to be very ingenious, and of promising abilities; and he desired to avail himself of the talents both of his native subjects, and of those whom he had acquired by conquest. These young men were to be instructed in the learning and language of the Chaldeans, and in every science which could qualify them for service. Three years were allotted for their education; and to encourage them to be diligent and obsequious, they were to be supplied with viands and wine, every day from the king's own table. This education would tend, and probably was meant, to detach them from the interests of their people and religion, and to attach them to those of their new masters.—Among the number selected, there were four more distinguished and conscientious than the rest: their names were all compounded with the original words for God, or Lord. "Daniel" signifying God my judge; "Hananiah," the grace of the Lord; and "Azariah," the Lord is a help. It is not agreed what "Mishael" signifies, but it is compounded with El, the name of God.—'The master of the eunuchs,'

5 And the king appointed them a daily provision of the king's meat, and of the wine which he drank: so nourishing them three years, that at the end thereof they might stand before the king.

6 Now, among these were of the children of Judah, Daniel, Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah:

7 Unto whom the prince of the eunuchs gave names: for he gave unto Daniel the name of Belteshazzar; and to Hananiah, of Shadrach; and to Mishael, of Meshach; and to Azariah, of Abed-nego.

[Practical Observations.]

8 ¶ But Daniel purposed in his heart that he would not defile himself with the portion of the king's meat, nor with the wine which he drank: therefore, he requested of the prince of the eunuchs that he might not defile himself.

9 Now God had brought Daniel into favour and tender love with the prince of the eunuchs.

10 And the prince of the eunuchs said unto Daniel, I fear my lord the king, who hath appointed your meat and your drink: for why should he see your faces worse liking than the children which are of your sort? then shall ye make me endanger my head to the king.

however, changed these names for others compounded with the names of the idols of Babylon; as intimating the change which he expected or desired in their religion. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, 4:8, 9, v. 8. Gen. 41:45, 46.)—The word rendered "children" is frequently used for young persons, when come to maturity; and it is the common opinion, that Daniel was at this time twenty years of age. Indeed we must suppose, from the narrative, that both he and his companions were at least seventeen or eighteen.—As these young men were of the seed-royal, it is probable that some of them were descended from Hezekiah: and thus the prophecy concerning his posterity was exactly fulfilled. (Note, 2 Kings 20:17, 18.)

V. 8—16. It is probable that Daniel first formed his own determination, and then brought over his companions to his views and purpose. (Marg. Ref. q.) He did not consider it as unlawful to learn the sciences and language of the Chaldeans, as a preparation for future usefulness; and we may hence decidedly conclude, that he was not required to study the arts of the magicians and astrologers. He resolved however, 'not to defile himself with the portion of the king's meat.'—Many of the dishes would consist, in part at least, of those meats which were unclean according to the law; others of them would be such as had been offered to idols and the wine, it is probable, had been presented to them, and a part from it poured out for a libation on their altars. Daniel, no doubt, concluded that by eating and drinking of these provisions he should have fellowship with idolaters; (Marg. Ref. r. Note, 1 Cor. 10:18—22.) or be corrupted with the prevailing luxury and intemperance of the court, as well as induced to eat such meats as the law of God forbade; and that such a self-indulgent course of life was suited neither to the afflicted state of his country, nor to his own condition as a captive, nor to his character as a devoted worshipper of the God of Israel. He was therefore resolved not to defile himself, yet he did not rudely refuse what was intended in kindness, but gently and modestly requested the prince, or master of the eunuchs, to indulge him in this respect, as his conscience was concerned in it. It is, however, improbable, that he would have succeeded quietly in his purpose; had not that God, whom he so conscientiously served, given him a place in the esteem and tender compassionate regard of this stranger; by means of the excellent abilities, discretion, and courteousness, and amiable qualities, with which God had endued him. (Marg. Ref. s. Notes, Gen. 32:27, 28. 39:2—6. Prov. 16:7.) The prince of the eunuchs, therefore, was disposed to gratify Daniel: but he feared lest the king, who had given orders about the diet of the young Jews, should observe any of them to look unhealthy and dejected, as he took it for 11 Then said Daniel to 'Melzar, whom the prince of the eunuchs had set over Daniel, Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah, 12 Prove thy servants, I beseech thee, ten days; and let them give us pulse to eat, and water to drink.

13 Then let our countenances be looked upon before thee, and the countenance of the children that eat of the portion of the king's meat: and as thou seest, deal with thy servants.

14 So he consented to them in this matter, and proved them ten days.

15 And at the end of ten days their countenances appeared fairer and fatter in flesh than all the children which did eat the portion of the king's meat.

16 Thus Melzar took away the portion of their meat, and the wine that they should drink; and gave them pulse.

17 ¶ As for these four children, God gave them knowledge and skill in all learning and wisdom: and Daniel had understanding in all visions and dreams.

18 Now at the end of the days that the king had said he should bring them in, then the prince of the eunuchs brought them in before Nebuchadnezzar.

19 And the king communed with them: and among them all was found none like Daniel, Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah: therefore, stood they before the king.

20 And in all matters of wisdom and understanding, that the king inquired of them, he found them ten times better than all the magicians and astrologers, that were in all his realm.

21 And Daniel continued even unto the first year of king Cyrus.

granted they would, if they lived on pulse and water: so that comparing their countenances with those who were not so scrupulous, he should inquire into the cause of the difference; and, finding that his orders had been disobeyed, should in a rage order him to be put to death. (Marg. and Ref.) The subsequent history shows that he had some ground, from the character of the king, for these apprehensions. It seems, however, that he was willing to connive at the desired change, though he would not order it: and perhaps he hinted to Daniel, that Melzar, his deputy, could do it without danger: at least Daniel applied to him, and besought that a trial might be made for the space of ten days; during which time he and his friends would live upon pulse, or vegetables, and water, without any kind of animal food or wine: and if on this spare diet they did not thrive as well, as those who ate the king's portion, he might afterwards refuse his concurrence. This temperate diet would be in its own nature wholesome; yet it was not suited to render them fatter in flesh than the others: but doubtless Daniel's confidence was placed on the special blessing of God, to render it so nourishing, that he and his friends might no more be tempted to defile themselves. It cannot, however, be supposed, that he would in any case have consented to eat forbidden food, whatever sufferings his refusal might have exposed them to. But the Lord did not disappoint his expectation; for his looks and those of his friends fully satisfied Melzar, that he might safely leave them to their own plan; and so he took away, perhaps as a perquisite to himself, the portion which was allotted them from the king's table.—This was a singular instance of conscientious temperance and self-denial in young persons, who had been brought up in affluence. (Marg. Ref. u-x. Note, Ex. 2:21.)

V. 17-21. It pleased God so to prosper the instructions given to Daniel and his friends, and their application to study; and so to communicate knowledge and wisdom from himself, that they far excelled their fellow-students in every thing: (Marg. Ref. x, y. Notes, 2:27-30, v. 28. Gen. 41:16. 1 Kings 3:5-14. Prov. 21:9. Luke 21:12-19, v. 15. Acts 6:9-14, v. 10.) and Daniel was early endued with the supernatural ability of interpreting remarkable dreams, as Joseph had been in Egypt; for he alone was chosen to be a prophet. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. z. Notes, 2:17-23. Gen. 40:8.) So that when they were brought before the king, (who appears to have been a man of learning and penetration,) they were found far better qualified for his service than any of the other students: nay, they far excelled in learning, and in the satisfactory solution of difficult questions, all the magicians and astrologers, and other pretenders to extraordinary discoveries with which his realm abounded. They were, therefore, speedily advanced to honourable stations in his palace; and Daniel continued to be employed in the affairs of government, and to be regarded as a prophet, through the whole remaining duration of the Chaldean monarchy; and till Cyrus succeeded to the kingdom, on the death of his father-in-law, Darius the Mede. Thus he lived to witness the conclusion of the seventy years which Jeremiah had predicted as the term of the captivity: (Note, 2:2,3.) and there can be no reasonable doubt that Cyrus's favourable decree was procured by his means. Indeed it is evident that he survived that event at least two or three years. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. a-o. 10:1. Note, Ezra 1:1-4.)

Skill in all learning, &c. (17) * They were particularly skilful in those parts of the Chaldean learning which was really useful, and might recommend them to the favour of the kings both of Babylon and Persia, and qualify them for places of trust under them.—So Moses's education in Egyptian learning (Acts 7:22.) fitted him to be a ruler of God's people. Levith. (Note, Ex. 2:10.)

V. 1-7. The successes of ungodly men, even in their enterprises against the worshippers of God, are to be ascribed to his interposition: they could "have no power against them, except it were given them from above;" though they generally either take the glory of it to themselves, or give it to their idols.—The Lord will permit his enemies to profane even those things which have been consecrated to his service, when they have been polluted by the hypocrisy or crimes of his professed worshippers.—It is the prudence of princes to employ the abilities and endowments of body or mind, and all qualifications natural or acquired, which are to be found among every class of their subjects: and it is the wisdom of God thus to bring forth into scenes of usefulness those whom he has qualified to serve the public, or his church. He will sometimes have a few of his servants to stand in kings' palaces, to direct the deliberations of senates, or to sway the affairs of kingdoms; as well as others to be employed in the work of the ministry, or in the obscure occupations of private life. We should, therefore consider seriously what is our proper work, and do it diligently; and not censure others who aim to glorify God in a different sphere.—Youth is the time for acquiring useful knowledge: nor is it superfluous for those who most simply seek wisdom from God, to apply their minds, and to employ their time, in pursuing various kinds of human learning.—Kings, who would have able statesmen and servants, should encourage literature, and support men of abilities in prosecuting their studies; for they will find but few disposed to such pursuits, except they have a prospect of being comfortably supported, nay, liberally rewarded. How careful then should parents be, so to train up their children, that they may be qualified for future usefulness! But alas! the education which is generally patronised by royal or public bounty, tends more to corrupt men's principles and morals than to improve them; and to lead them from scriptural sentiments, language and behaviour, to adopt the names, notions, habits, and phraseology of heathens: and, instead of teaching youth to bridle their passions, and to exercise self-denial, it too commonly initiates them in luxury, or confirms them in habits of licentiousness.

V. 8-20. If the Lord has put it into the heart of any young person, from pure principles, to "purpose not to defile himself," by any unlawful or inexpedient indulgence; he will enable him to obtain the benefit, and to escape the dangers of every situation. But this will require much command over every appetite and natural inclination: and much firmness, meekness, and prudence will also be requisite to avoid giving needless offence: for, even where conscience and duty are concerned, modest persuasion and entreaty are preferable to impetuosity, moroseness, and obstinacy.—When the Lord sees good, he can bring his servants "into favour and tender love," even with strangers to true religion: and indeed the genuine spirit of Christianity, when connected with the meekness of wisdom and superior abilities, is exceedingly amiable and conciliating even in the eyes of ungodly men, where it does not interfere with their pride, lusts, and interests.—Those who first form salutary designs, will seldom be left alone in them; though few in general will concur, compared with the numbers who prefer present indulgence or interest to duty.—Temperance, nay, abstinence, is more consistent with health, than men are apt to believe, who seek excuses for self-indulgence. Yet there may be seasons, when a degree of abstemiousness is needful, which in other circumstances would not be proper. If this be undertaken by any man in the fear of God, and not from pharisaical pride or affectation, or with a spirit of censoriousness; but either that he may not defile himself by an improper intercourse with ungodly men, or that he may "keep under his body and

CHAPTER II.

Nebuchadnezzar, perplexed with a dream which he had forgotten, with menace and promises requires his wise men to make it known to him, with the interpretation, 1-9. They acknowledge their inability, and are sentenced to die, 10-13. Daniel obtains respite, joins in prayer with his friends, has the dream revealed to him, and blesses God, 14-24. He stays the decree, and is brought before the king, 24-30. The dream and its interpretation, 31-45. The king honours Daniel; and confesses that his God is pre-eminent above all gods, 46, 47. AND in the second year of the reign of Nebuchadnezzar, Nebuchadnezzar dreamed dreams, wherewith his spirit was troubled, and his sleep brake from him.

2 Then the king commanded to call the magicians, and the astrologers, and the sorcerers, and the Chaldeans, for to show the king his dreams. So they came and stood before the king.

3 And the king said unto them, I have dreamed a dream, and my spirit was troubled to know the dream.

4 Then spake the Chaldeans to the king in Syriac, O king, live for ever: tell thy servants the dream, and we will show the interpretation.

5 The king answered and said to the Chaldeans, The thing is gone from me: if ye will not make known unto me the dream, with the interpretation thereof, ye shall be cut in pieces, and your houses shall be made a dunghill.

6 But if ye show the dream, and the interpretation thereof, ye shall receive of me gifts and rewards and great honour: therefore show me the dream, and the interpretation thereof.

7 They answered again and said, Let the king tell his servants the dream, and we will show the interpretation of it.

8 The king answered and said, I know of certainty that ye would gain the time, because ye see the thing is gone from me.

9 But, if ye will not make known unto me the dream, there is but one decree for you: for ye have prepared lying and corrupt words to speak before me, till the time be changed: therefore tell me the dream, and I shall know that ye can show me the interpretation thereof.

10 ¶ The Chaldeans answered before the king, and said, There is not a man upon the earth that can show the king's matter: therefore there is no king, lord, nor ruler, that asked such things at any magician, or astrologer, or Chaldean.

bring it into subjection" he may expect a peculiar blessing on his spare diet, to support his health, and to fit him for active service; without burdening his conscience, or "making provision for the flesh to fulfil the lusts thereof." And though a regard to health is a general duty, there may be cases when the care "of keeping a conscience void of offence" will render even this a subordinate consideration; which may in a measure be overlooked, upon the same principle, that the offending right hand must be cut off, and that the martyr yields up his life rather than sin against God. When any see it necessary to purpose such designs in their hearts, and to mention them even to those who have a tender love for them; they will often find them a hindrance to their designs, out of fear, either respecting them, or on their own account. When, however, the trial is made, such fears are often found to have been mere temptations: and conscientious temperance will always be found more beneficial, even to the comfort of this present life, than sinful indulgence. It also exceedingly tends to fit a man for study, or any great and continued mental exertions: and pious young men should endeavour to excel their fellows in every useful pursuit; not that they may be praised, but for the honour of the Gospel, and that they may be qualified for usefulness.—For whatever station or service the Lord intends men, he will give them suitable endowments: and the wisdom which he bestows, is ten thousand times better than worldly policy, curious arts, or the most admired attainments of human learning; both for the management of secular concerns, and with respect to the eternal world.—It is a happiness to the realm, and an honour to the prince, when he is competent to judge who are best qualified to serve him, and when he expressly prefers them on that account.—A youth spent in temperance and piety, and in departing from evil, conduces to durable usefulness and eminence; and treasures up joys for the future, either on earth, or in heaven, or both. Let then young men keep their eyes steadily fixed on the examples of this chapter: let us all "count every thing but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ," and the experience of his salvation; and always remember that God will "honour those that honour him, but that they who despise him shall be lightly esteemed."

NOTES.—CHAP. II. V. 1. Nebuchadnezzar was king of Babylon when he came up to Jerusalem, and carried away Daniel and his friends to Babylon; which was in the first year of his reign: yet after Daniel had been three years educating, Nebuchadnezzar is said to have had this dream in the second year of his reign. (1) Hence it is concluded that he reigned some time along with his father: and that this was in the second year of his reigning alone. (Note, Jer. 25:1.) The king was convinced that his dream was supernatural, and was troubled about it, though he could not recollect particulars: God so ordering it, that he might bring Daniel forth into notice, to make known his own glory, as the God of Israel and of the whole earth. (Marg. Ref.)

Dreams.] "Though it was but one continued dream, it contained divers scenes of affairs, being a description of the succession of the four monarchies which were to continue, under different forms, to the end of the world? Louth.—Rather, the fourth will continue, in one form or other, till all the kingdoms of the world become the kingdom of Christ. (Note, 44:45.)

V. 2. Daniel and his companions did not appear among them; perhaps because the Chaldeans despised them as youths and strangers, and would not have them thought equal in knowledge with themselves? Louth.—Screers.] "This word is always taken in an ill sense by the holy writers, for those who consult evil spirits." Ibid.—The Chaldeans.] "The Chaldeans were so much addicted to the study of the heavenly motions, and to make prognostications from thence; that the word Chaldean is used, both in Greek and Latin writers, for an astrologer." Ibid. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 4:4—7. 5:5-9. Gen. 41:8. Ec. 7:11, 12. 22:18. Deut. 18:9-12.) As Daniel and his friends were not called in on subsequent occasions, when further advanced in years and established in reputation, along with the astrologers and Chaldeans; this shows that their learning was of another kind, and was known to be so. (Notes, 1:8-16, 17-20, vv. 17, 20. 5:10-12.)

V. 3, 4. In Syriac. (4) Or, Chaldee: these were then the same language; or, as some think, the Syriac was a more elegant dialect of the Chaldee, chiefly used by the learned. From this verse to the end of the seventh chapter, Daniel wrote in Chaldee, and not in Hebrew: probably in order to induce the Chaldeans to read the account of those transactions which so greatly concerned them.—The expression "O king live for ever," was a customary salutation, implying a cordial desire of his life, health, and permanent felicity: it was used by Daniel and other pious men, as well as by the heathens, though probably with a more extensive meaning; and was equivalent to "God save the king," as in use among us. (Marg. Ref. g. 6:21. Note, 1 Kings 1:31. Neh. 2:3.)

V. 5-9. Nothing can be conceived more unreasonable than this demand of Nebuchadnezzar, or more tyrannical and cruel than the sentence annexed to it. The whole narration displays the arrogance, impetuosity, and violence of his character; and illustrates the evil tendency and fatal effects of arbitrary power, constant homage and flattery, and uninterrupted prosperity, on the mind of fallen man. Being eager to recover the recollection of his dream; he required of the wise men, what was absolutely impossible, except by immediate revelation from God. (Notes, 10-13, v. 11. 17-23-30.) And he threatened them with the most terrible death, and with the deepest ignominy to their characters and family, if they did not immediately perform what he required: but if they did, he promised to reward them in the most liberal and honourable manner. When they reasonably desired to be informed of the dream, and promised to give the interpretation by the rules of their art, (which they never could have performed;) he construed this into a fraudulent intention of gaining time and opportunity for the execution of some corrupt design. Being terrified by his dream, he perhaps expected some sudden revolution: nay, he might, even suspect them of having formed some treasonable designs against him; so that he supposed, they waited till the time was changed, and the event had deprived him of the power of punishing them: but he was determined to know it directly, or to execute his barbarous intentions.—If they could discover the dream, it would give a sanction to their interpretation of it: but otherwise he should conclude them to be base impostors. (Marg. Ref.)

Gain the time. (8) "Buy," Marg. "Buying or redeeming the time is a proverbial expression, denoting men's using their utmost endeavours to free themselves from imminent danger or difficulty; gaining time being a considerable advantage to that purpose." Eph. 5:16. Col. 4:5. Louth. (Note, Eph. 5:15-20, v. 16.)

V. 10-13. The peremptory words and conduct of the king led the Chaldeans and magicians, not only to confess the impotency of their arts, and to remonstrate that no king

11 And it is a rare thing that the king requireth, and there is none other that can show it before the king, except the gods, whose dwelling is not with flesh.

12 For this cause the king was angry and very furious, and commanded to destroy all the wise men of Babylon.

13 And the decree went forth that the wise men should be slain; and they sought Daniel and his fellows to be slain. [Practical Observations.]

14 ¶ Then Daniel answered with counsel and wisdom to Arioch the captain of the king's guard, which was gone forth to slay the wise men of Babylon:

15 He answered and said to Arioch the king's captain, Why is the decree so hasty from the king? Then Arioch made the thing known to Daniel.

16 Then Daniel went in, and desired of the king that he would give him time, and that he would show the king the interpretation.

17 Then Daniel went to his house and made the thing known to Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah, his companions:

18 That they would desire mercies of the God of heaven concerning this secret; that Daniel and his fellows should not perish with the rest of the wise men of Babylon.

19 Then was the secret revealed unto Daniel in a night-vision. Then Daniel blessed the God of heaven.

20 Daniel answered and said, Blessed be the name of God for ever and ever: for wisdom and might are his:

21 And he changeth the times and the seasons; he removeth kings, and setteth up kings; he giveth wisdom unto the wise, and knowledge to them that know understanding:

22 He revealeth the deep and secret things: he knoweth what is in the darkness, and the light dwelleth with him.

23 I thank thee, and praise thee, O thou God of my fathers, who hast given me wisdom and might, and hast made known unto me now what we desired of thee: for thou hast now made known unto us the king's matter.

24 ¶ Therefore, Daniel went in unto Arioch, whom the king had ordained to destroy the wise men of Babylon: he went and said thus unto him; Destroy not the wise men of Babylon: bring me in before the king, and I will show unto the king the interpretation.

25 Then Arioch brought in Daniel before the king in haste, and said thus unto him, I have found a man of the captives of Judah, that will make known unto the king the interpretation.

26 The king answered and said to Daniel, whose name was Belteshazzar, Art thou able to make known unto me the dream which I have seen, and the interpretation thereof?

27 Daniel answered in the presence of the king, and said, The secret which the king hath demanded cannot the wise men, the astrologers, the magicians, the soothsayers, show unto the king;

28 But, there is a God in heaven that revealeth secrets, and maketh known to the king Nebuchadnezzar what shall be in the latter days. Thy dream, and the visions of thy head upon thy bed, are these:

29 As for thee, O king, thy thoughts came into thy mind upon thy bed, what should come to pass hereafter: and he that revealeth secrets maketh known to thee what shall come to pass.

ever made such a demand on any who professed these sciences; but to declare, that the discovery was beyond the reach of all human or created penetration, and only known and discoverable by the gods, whose dwelling was not with flesh, or among men. This they spake of their gods: but the only living and true God, who alone could reveal the secrets contained in this dream, indeed condescends to dwell among men. (Marg. Ref. r. Notes, Ec 29:42—46. 1 Kings 8:27. Is 57:15,16. John 1:14. 14:21—24. 2 Cor 6:14—18. v. 16. Eph 2:19—22, v. 22. Rev. 21:1—4, v. 3.) and he actually made known the dream to Daniel; and so showed the difference between JEHOVAH and his prophets, and the idols and magicians of Babylon. (Marg. Ref. q. Notes, 5—9, 17—23, 27—30. 5:10—12.)—Nebuchadnezzar was the more exasperated by this decided reply, and immediately issued a decree to destroy all the wise men of Babylon: and whether in his inconsiderate rage, he meant so, or whether he spake in such general terms as to admit of this construction, Daniel and his fellows also were sought for to be put to death. Otherwise, the sorcerers would have been put to death, without rendering the city less wise than before. But the dream would have remained an impenetrable secret; and God had purposed that it should not be so. (Marg. Ref. s—u. Note, 2.)

V. 14—16. As Daniel and his friends had not been summoned, with the other wise men; and yet were supposed to be involved with them in the condemnation pronounced against them; it was most reasonable, that they should have a hearing from the king.—It seems that Daniel had, at times, access to him. Arioch appears to have favoured his application; the king's fury was perhaps abated; and it pleased God to dispose his heart to regard the proposal of his servant. Daniel had, before this, understanding in dreams and visions; (1:17.) but he would not have so confidently promised the desired information to the king, had he not received some intimation from God, that it would in due time be communicated. No doubt he was actuated by a zeal for the honour of God, and of true religion, as well as by a desire of preserving his own life and that of his friends. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. c.)

V. 17—23. In answer to the united, fervent, and persevering prayers of this pious company, the secret was revealed to Daniel, in so distinct and clear a manner, that he had no doubt of its being a divine inspiration, and that it would approve itself as such to Nebuchadnezzar. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. a—d. Notes, Matt 18:19,20. Acts 12:5—11.) He therefore immediately praised God, as the Fountain of all wisdom, knowledge, and might; and the Author of all those revolutions in empires, of which he had so extensive a view at this time before his mind, and which were to take place through a very long succession of ages; and he rendered thanks and praise, in the most exalted language, to him for this extraordinary revelation, in a time of such imminent danger. (Marg. Ref. e—q. Notes, 31—45. 4:10—18, v. 17. 1 Sam. 2:4—8. Ps 75:5—7.)—His wisdom appears in ordering the great affairs of the world; and his might and power in bringing them to pass. To the same purpose Jeremiah styles him "Great in counsel, and mighty in works." Jer. 32:19. Louth.—The revelation made to Daniel gave him, not only "wisdom," but "power," to save many lives, and do immense good to his people.

V. 24. The rash decree of the king had doomed to one common destruction, not only the sorcerers, but all those in Babylon who were considered as wise and learned men: and Daniel was honoured as the willing instrument of preserving all their lives. The Lord, in answer to the benevolent prayers of him and his friends, spared the whole company. (Acts 27:24. Note, Ez. 14:13—21, v. 14,20.)

V. 25. Daniel undertook to do it of his own accord, (24) but this officer, according to the manner of courtiers: takes this opportunity of ingratiating himself to the king: as if the discovery of Daniel's abilities in this kind was owing purely to his diligence. Louth.—Arioch seems indeed to have claimed some merit to himself: yet he also spake as one, who was glad to be excused from the bloody and odious service which had been assigned him. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Note, Prov 24:11,12.)

V. 26—30. (Marg. Ref. u, x. Note, 10—13.) Daniel told the king, in the most express terms, that none of his 43 And whereas thou sawest iron mixed with miry clay, they shall mingle themselves with the seed of men: but they shall not cleave one to another, even as iron is not mixed with clay.

44 And in the days of these kings shall the throne of heaven be set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed: and the kingdom shall not be left to other people, but it shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand for ever.

was cut out of the mountain without hands, and that it brake in pieces the iron, the brass, the clay, the silver, and the gold; the great God hath made known to the king what shall come to pass hereafter: and the dream is certain, and the interpretation thereof sure.

46 ¶ Then the king Nebuchadnezzar fell upon his face, and worshipped Daniel, and commanded that they should offer an oblation and sweet odours unto him.

47 The king answered unto Daniel, and said, Of a truth it is, that your God is a God of gods and a Lord of kings, and a revealer of secrets, seeing thou couldst reveal this secret.

48 Then the king made Daniel a great man, and gave him many great gifts, and made him ruler over the whole province of Babylon, and chief of the governors over all the wise men of Babylon.

49 Then Daniel requested of the king, and he set Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego, over the affairs of the province of Babylon: but Daniel sat in the gate of the king.

mightiest which ever appeared on earth,) have certainly been far more celebrated than any others. The history of them, in fact, comprises the grand transactions of mankind from the days of Daniel to this present time. The church of God likewise has had far more concern with these, than with any other empires; and the countries belonging to them have hitherto been the chief seat of the Redeemer's kingdom, which will be rendered universal by the total subversion of the last of them. It cannot therefore be wondered, that so many more prophecies should be inserted in the sacred oracles, concerning these four kingdoms, than about other nations and empires.

V. 44, 45. "In the days of those kings," or during the prevalence of the Roman authority, "the God of heaven" had determined to "set up" another "kingdom, which shall never be destroyed," or fall under the power of any conquerors; seeing it would "break in pieces, and consume all these kingdoms, and stand for ever." This was represented by "a Stone cut out without hands," (8:25.) which "smote the image" and utterly destroyed it, and "became a great mountain that filled the whole earth," (Note, 34, 35.) "The Stone" was entirely distinct from the image, nay, directly opposite to it and all its interests: it must therefore mean a kingdom set up by the power of God, without the concurrence of human policy or force, and in opposition to all the authority and combined efforts of the princes of this world. The kingdom of Christ was evidently intended: from small beginnings, it has already made an immense progress: it has subverted, and will continue to subvert, Pagan and Anti-Christian kingdoms, and to entirely destroy and disperse them; and at length it will triumph over all opposition, and "become a great mountain, and fill the whole earth." This part of the prophecy yet remains to be accomplished: so that we have in this dream a most extraordinary prophetic abstract of the most signal events, which would take place through all succeeding ages, nearly to the consummation of all things. As far as the accomplishment has proceeded, it has been most exact and undeniable; and future ages shall be filled with astonishment and awe, by witnessing this "Stone, cut out without hands," destroying the remaining toes of this image; and becoming universally triumphant. Thus the great God made known to this heathen prince what was afterwards to come to pass; and "the dream was certain, and the interpretation thereof sure." (Marg. Ref. See on Note, 34, 35. Notes, 7:23—27, v. 27. Hab. 2:12—14, v. 14. Matt. 3:2. 6:10. Rev. 20:1—6.)

V. 46—49. Nebuchadnezzar was so astonished, by Daniel's declaring his dream with such minute exactness, and showing him such wonderful events couched under it; that he thought him a deity, and attempted to render him adoration with sacrifices and incense. (Marg. Ref. p. q. Notes, Matt. 2:9—12. 14:33. Acts 10:24—26. 14:11—18. 28:3—6. Rev. 19:9, 10. 22:8, 9.) Doubtless Daniel withdrew him from this purpose, and informed him more fully, to whom the honour was due: upon which he acknowledged the God of Daniel to be "a God of gods, and a Lord of kings, &c." Yet he does not appear to have been convinced, that it was necessary or him to renounce idolatry, and to become his worshipper and servant. He, however, greatly preferred and enriched Daniel, and at his request he preferred his companions also; but Daniel became one of his chief ministers. No doubt they accepted of these preferments, in hopes of rendering some service to their people and religion, as well as of doing general good to mankind.—Hence it is plain, that hitherto there were no religious tests, or observances required by the king, previous to their admission to places of trust and authority. (Marg. Ref. r—a.)—A revealer of secrets. (47) Notes, 10—13, 27—30. Gen. 41:38—46.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—13. No greatness or prosperity can secure so much as an undisturbed night's sleep: and when the Lord pleases he can render men miserable even by uneasy dreams. He has various methods of making known his purposes; in order to manifest his own glory, to draw men's attention to his servants, and to evidence the authenticity of his sacred oracles.—Men are generally more eager to gratify curiosity, or to dive into futurity, than to learn the way of salvation, or the path of duty: yet all foreknowledge of future events tends to increase anxiety and trouble: except as it is counterpoised by submission to the will, and confidence in the wisdom, truth, and love of God.—They, who attend on the courts of princes, learn the language of benevolence: but the most emphatical wishes of health, or life, or salvation, are frequently unmeaning compliments, which run counter to the real desires of their hearts. Yet Christians may often use the same words in sincerity; "praying for kings and all in authority," that they may properly fill up their high stations on earth, and also "live for ever" in the felicity of heaven.—It is a great evil, when multitudes are subjected to the arbitrary sway of one capricious and haughty tyrant, who may imperiously command the most absurd and impossible things; who, having been long humoured, can brook no denial or delay; and who deals about death, without feeling or remorse, on the most inoffensive of his subjects. Such rulers are in general extremely jealous and suspicious, and apt to misconstrue the most reasonable actions, or expressions, into rebellion and treason: and the rewards, which they confer when gratified, are a very inadequate counterbalance for the miseries that they inflict when enraged; in which they generally involve the innocent with the guilty. We should therefore be thankful to live under a limited monarchy; in which our sovereign is authorized and enabled to do as much good as he will, but has no legal power of doing injustice.—Yet we should remember that God is just, even when men are most unjust; and that they, who fall victims to the cruel jealousy of unreasonable tyrants, often on other accounts deserve their doom. The Lord also orders every event, as may best detect the folly and imposture of those varied delusions, which succeed one another in the world; and the insufficiency of all human power, wisdom, and penetration: that by the confession even of those, who oppose his truth, when baffled in their devices, it may appear that the discoveries which he makes, and the operations which he performs, are impossible to all others. (Notes, Ex. 8:18, 19. 9:11.) But the views of the most sagacious of ungodly men are strangely confused, in respect of the glorious Lord of all: they have a faint idea of his pre-eminence, and of some of his perfections; but his majesty and mercy, his exaltation and condescension, his "dwelling with" human "flesh" to save and bless sinful men, and all the glories displayed in the great work of redemption, are wholly hidden from them: and they are more apt to conceive of God as distant, and as not interfering in the affairs of men; than to conclude that not "a sparrow falls to the ground," nor "a hair from our heads, without him."

V. 14—30. The furious rage of men who cannot, or will not, distinguish between "the pure, peaceable," and he

CHAPTER III.

Nebuchadnezzar sets up a golden image, and commands all his ministers of state, and officers, when they hear all kinds of music, to fall down and worship it, on pain of being cast into a fiery furnace, 1-6. His orders are almost universally complied with, 7. Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego, are accused of disobedience, 8-12. The king vehemently threatens them, if they persist in refusal, defying any God to deliver them, but they answer calmly and resolutely, 13-15. They are cast into the furnace, the flame of which kills those who threw them in, 19-23. The king is astonished, at seeing them walk unharmed in the fire, with "a fourth like to the Son of God," 24, 25. They come forth; and all the immense company see that the fire has not touched them, 26, 27. Nebuchadnezzar blesses God, and decrees severe punishment on those who spoke against him, 28, 29. "wisdom which is from above," and that "which is earthly, sensual, and devilish," may involve the servants of God under the same condemnation with the basest impostors; but he knows how to rescue them, and even to make their dangers the means of their greatest good. He directs them to a gentle and cautious deportment, in the midst of the greatest injuries and perils: but, whatever methods they adopt, for retarding the purposes or pacifying the rage of wicked men; their grand means is to excite one another to "pray for mercies to the God of heaven," who is able to extricate them from every difficulty, and to keep them from perishing with the wicked.—"The secret of the LORD is with them that fear him." (Note, Ps. 25:14.) and though we do not expect such immediate revelations from God, as Daniel was favoured with; yet he will answer our believing prayers for direction in every perplexity, show us whatever is for our good, and turn our fears and sorrows into grateful praises. Every renewed mercy should lead us to renew our adorations: we should remember, and reverently adore, and joyfully proclaim the glorious perfections of our God, the honour of his kingdom, and the wise and righteous dispensations of his providence, who "changes times and seasons, and removeth and setteth up kings:" we should celebrate him as the Giver of knowledge and wisdom, as "knowing what is in the darkness," and dwelling in inaccessible light; whilst we thank him for the favours bestowed on us, and for granting us the instruction; help, and encouragement, which we sought from him, in our tribulations. But, when the Lord peculiarly honours us before men, we must remember and expressly acknowledge, that it is not for our own sakes, but "for his name's sake," and for the benefit of his church, and for the conviction of his enemies, that there is indeed a God in heaven, who can reveal such secrets and perform such works, as it never entered into the heart of the wisest man to conceive possible: of this the prophecies contained in the sacred Scriptures, and fulfilling through the successive ages of the world, are a full demonstration to every considerate mind. (Notes, Is. 41:21-26.)

V. 31-49. The most powerful and renowned empires, which have been erected on earth, are but as the baseless fabric of a disjointed vision, which vanishes when we awake: they may excel in brightness and be very terrible, but they are only a vain pageant of glory and excellency; for these are substantially to be found in God and heavenly things alone.—The kings and conquerors of the earth have, in every age, kept the nations in a perpetual tumult by their ambitious projects, and the revolutions which they have occasioned. Some have been more eminent for wealth, some for power, some for hardy courage and ruinous success: their delight has been in destroying, subduing, breaking in pieces, and crushing mankind: one form of tyranny has commonly been superseded by another still more base and barbarous; and men in general have been groaning under the effects of their contests and vices, yet willingly concurring to support and encourage them! But all human power and prowess tend to decay: many mighty empires have gradually been weakened, till they have been subverted by open enemies, or by intestine convulsions. In the midst of all these events, "the God of heaven is setting up his kingdom;" not by human might or power, but by his word and Spirit. This does not interfere with the proper exercise of any human authority: but it will, by its secret operation, overturn and destroy all opposing or intervening power, break in pieces every antichrist, fill the earth, and continue for ever. May we be the willing subjects of this kingdom, and spend our lives in seeking its peace and prosperity!—It is natural for men to run into extremes; and either to despise and injure,

3 Then ^dthe princes, the governors, and captains, the judges, the treasurers, the counsellors, the sheriffs, and all the rulers of the provinces, were gathered together unto the dedication of the image that Nebuchadnezzar the king had set up; and they stood before the image that Nebuchadnezzar had set up.

4 Then a herald cried ^ealoud, To you 'tis commanded, ^fO people, nations, and languages, 5 That at what time ye hear the sound of ^gthe cornet, flute, harp, sackbut, psaltery, ^hdulcimer, and all kinds of music, ye fall down and worship the golden image that Nebuchadnezzar the king hath set up.

6 And whoso ⁱfalleth not down and worshippeth shall ^kthe same hour be cast into the midst of ^la burning fiery furnace.

or to idolize, those who speak the word of God to them: but it is our business to direct their attention to the great Author and Giver of every good gift.—Many have some general apprehensions of the power and majesty of God, and that others ought to serve him, who yet have no serious thoughts of worshipping him themselves. He, however, overrules even such convictions, to bring his servants into those stations, in which they are to be usefully employed: and they may consistently accept the favours offered them, when they give them an opportunity of doing good, and are not clogged with any sinful conditions.—It behooves those who are advanced, to be mindful of their former friends; but far more to use their influence in promoting the wise and righteous, that God may be glorified, and the best interests of mankind furthered by them.

NOTES.—CHAP. III. V. 1-7. It is not certain at what time the events of this chapter occurred. The Septuagint indeed says, that it was in the eighteenth year; that is, after Nebuchadnezzar's prophetic dream.—Some think Nebuchadnezzar had a reference in this image to that which he had seen; as if he would have one wholly of gold, and not be contented with being represented by "the head of gold." (Marg. Ref. a.) It seems, however, more probable, that the impression of his dream had worn off, and that his ambition and arrogance were still further increased by success; that his attachment to idolatry was augmented by his victories over the people of JEHOVAH; and that this image was formed from the spoils of the conquered nations. It was of an enormous size, and must have cost immense treasure. The height of it was above thirty yards; but this, being ten times its breadth, or thickness, and out of all proportion, favours the conclusion, that the pedestal also on which it stood was taken in, under the admeasurement. It was perhaps made hollow, but with plates of solid gold; and it was set up in an extensive plain near Babylon, which could contain a vast concourse of people; and probably it was erected in honour of Bel, the chief idol of Babylon. (Note, Is. 46:1, 2.) Having completed the image, in order to render the worship of it more noticed, and to make the greater ostentation of his own magnificence and authority, Nebuchadnezzar summoned all his officers, civil and military, from every part of his extensive dominions, to attend on its dedication. (Marg. Ref. c, d.) When met together upon the plain, they were ordered, by proclamation, to fall down and worship this new made deity, of whatever nation they were: the signal for this act of adoration, by the striking up of all kinds of musical instruments at once, might be intended to allure them by soothing strains to join in the worship, and inspire fervour into their supposed devotion. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. e.) But to secure uniformity in so large a company, it was also proclaimed that every one, who refused compliance, should immediately be cast into a burning fiery furnace. (Marg. Ref. g-i.—Note, Jer. 29:21-23.) It does not appear, that any were obliged to attend who did not hold places under government: others would doubtless be there, and then they must comply; but all employed in the conduct of public affairs were constrained to be present, at very great trouble and expense, from every part of the empire: so that it was a sort of religious test, by which they were to approve themselves proper persons to be employed in the king's service; and, as it is common on such occasions, there was a general conformity observed. Almost all concerned were so over-awed by the menaces and power of the king, or so allured by the hopes of ingratiating themselves with him; or so devoid of principle, knowledge, or conscience; or so attached to a pompous and soothing and fascinating idolatry, that they unanimously observed the signal, and prostrated themselves in adoration of the golden image. (Marg. Ref. ..)

and worshipped the golden image, that Nebuchadnezzar the king had set up. [Practical Observations.]

8 ¶ Wherefore at that time certain Chaldeans came near, and accused the Jews.

9 They spake and said to the king Nebuchadnezzar, "O king, live for ever.

10 Thou, O king, hast made a decree, that every man that shall hear the sound of the cornet, flute, harp, sackbut, psaltery, and dulcimer, and all kinds of music, shall fall down and worship the golden image :

11 And whoso falleth not down and worshippeth, that he should be cast into the midst of a burning fiery furnace.

12 There are certain Jews whom thou hast set over the affairs of the province of Babylon, Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego; these men, O king, have not regarded thee: they serve not thy gods, nor worship the golden image which thou hast set up.

13 ¶ Then Nebuchadnezzar in his rage and fury commanded to bring Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego. ¶ Then they brought these men before the king.

14 Nebuchadnezzar spake and said unto them Is it true, O Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego, do not ye serve my gods, nor worship the golden image which I have set up?

15 Now if ye be ready that at what time ye hear the sound of the cornet, flute, harp, sackbut, psaltery, and dulcimer, and all kinds of music, ye fall down and worship the image which I have made; well: but if ye worship not, ye shall be cast the same hour into the midst of a burning fiery furnace; and who is that God that shall deliver you out of my hands?

17 If it be so, our God whom we serve is able to deliver us from the burning fiery furnace, and he will deliver us out of thy hand, O king.

The several words by which the different officers, and the various kinds of musical instruments, are enumerated, do not seem to admit of any satisfactory explanation: for, without referring to ancient usages, they cannot be distinctly made intelligible, except to those few, who are fully acquainted with those usages, and perhaps scarcely even to them.—"The idol is not known for an idol, so long as he is with the workman: but when the ceremonies and customs are recited and used, and the consent of the people is there; then of a block they think they have made a god." No instance, that I recollect, occurs before this, of idolatrous conformity, or any religious conformity, enforced by penal statute: but the example has been abundantly copied by the New Testament Babylon, and by many others who in this respect have in some measure imitated her. On this account she is probably called "Babylon the Great, the mother of harlots, and of abominations of the earth." (Notes, Jer. 51:7. Rev. 13:11-17. 14:9-11. 18:3-6.)

V. 8-12. Many opinions have been held concerning the way in which Daniel escaped on this occasion. The silence of the Scripture, as well as the excellency of his character, sufficiently prove that he did not worship the golden image: for the same impartiality which caused David's adultery and murder, and Solomon's idolatry, to be recorded, would have reported Daniel's sin, if on this occasion he had been overcome by temptation.—He might be elsewhere employed about the king's business, and be dispensed with in his absence: or he might refuse to worship the image: yet his enemies might fear to accuse him in the first instance, choosing to prepare the way for his ruin, as they supposed, by first attacking his friends. It seems, however, that Shadrach and his two companions chose rather to make this public protest against idolatry, than to absent themselves. The Chaldean accusers appear to have been influenced in part by enmity to the Jewish religion, and zeal for idolatry; but still more by envy and indignation at the preferment bestowed on strangers, and by a hope of succeeding to their preferments. It is probable, that no other Jews were employed in offices under the king: or it must be supposed, degenerate as they were, more would have been found, who refused compliance with the decree.—The accusers represented, that three of the captive Jews, who had been graciously promoted by the king, had proved themselves ungrateful for his favour, by contemptuously disobeying his will: as if they had despised the king's authority, and were influenced by a spirit of obstinate rebellion, rather than by conscientiousness, in refusing to worship the golden image. Thus the accusers both paid court to Nebuchadnezzar, and misrepresented the behaviour of these young men, in order to irritate him against them.—"This is the more intolerable, for that they have dared to affront thee in that very province, the charge of which thou hast committed unto them." Bp. Hall. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Note, 2:46-49.)

V. 13-15. Nebuchadnezzar had formerly found these persons "ten times better, than all his magicians and astrologers;" and he had employed them, and found them faithful and able. (Notes, 1:17-20. 2:46-49, v. 49.) He could not but know, that the laws of their religion forbade them to worship any image, and that they acted consistently in refusing obedience. Yet his imperious temper would not endure the least opposition; but he was enraged even to jury, when he heard of their conduct: and having cited them before him, and renewed his menace of the fiery furnace, if they disobeyed his orders, that when the music should again play, they should prostrate themselves in worship before the golden image: he said, "their God, and all that was called god or worshipped," at defiance, by emphatically inquiring, "Who is that God that shall deliver you out of my hand?" though he had before acknowledged JEHOVAH to be a God of gods, and a Lord of kings!—Thus Nebuchadnezzar exalted himself above God almighty, as Sennacherib had done before him; ... notwithstanding that he had before made an ample confession of the true God, 2:47. Lowth. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Ex. 5:2. 9:17. 2 Kings 18:28-35. 19:13-22. 2 Chr. 32:9-16. v. 15. 2 Thes. 2:3,4.)—The question which he proposed to them means, "Did ye on set purpose, and with deliberate determination?" (14. marg.)

V. 16-18. This anwer is stamped with a peculiar beauty and propriety. The accused persons uttered no outrageous language against the idols of Babylon, or the iniquity of this sanguinary edict; nor did they use any soothing address, mean supplications, or flattering expressions, to mollify the king's displeasure: but they calmly assured the king, that they were no way perplexed about the answer, which they should return to him; they had made up their minds; they did not want time for deliberation; they were not anxious about the consequences; yet they were ready in few words to state their determination. (Marg. Ref. z. Notes, Matt. 10:19,20.) If it were so, that he should cast them into the furnace, that God whom they worshipped was able to deliver them. Of this it seems they had some expectation; either because of the numbers, who would witness the contest between JEHOVAH and this haughty idolater; or because of the bold defiance of God which he had uttered. (Marg. Ref. a. Notes, 6:18-23, vv. 20-22. 25-28, v. 27. 1 Sam. 17:34-37,45-49. 2 Kings 19:14-19, v. 19. Acts 12:5-11.) If therefore the Almighty saw good he would deliver them out of the hand of the king: but if he should not please thus miraculously to interpose, they were not solicitous about the event; but desired the king should know for certain, that they would on no account, at any time, worship his gods, or on the present occasion adore his golden image.—When we consider the situation of these men; that they were strangers and captives, at a distance from the land and ordinances of God, and without any person to countenance or encourage them; that they had been under great obligations to the king; that most of their countrymen, even when in their own land, were given up to idolatry, that they were not required to abjure the God of Israel, or to enter upon a constant course of idolatry, but merely in one instance to comply with the king's humour; and in such remarkable circumstances, when the whole empire was against them, and the fiery furnace before them: I say, when these things are duly considered, we shall perceive, that this instance of heroic constancy, and intrepidity in a good cause, was scarcely ever equalled, and certainly was never exceeded, by a mere man, since the beginning of the world. (Marg. Ref. b. Notes, Prov. 28:1. Jer. 26:12-15. Acts 4:13-22, vv. 19,20. 5:29-31. 7:51-60.)—The language commonly used, and the pictures formed on this subject, have led numbers to conceive of these persons as children: but it seems far more probable, that they were in the full vigour of manhood, at least thirty or nearly forty years of age, when this event took place.

V. 19-23. The decisive answer, returned by these pious Jews, threw the proud tyrant into the utmost excess of rage, which appeared in the perturbation of his countenance. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. c. d. Notes, 5:5-9, v. 6. Gen. 4:3-5, v. 5.) To show his indignation at the supposed atrociousness of their conduct, he ordered the heat of the furnace to be increased sevenfold; which would merely have shortened and lessened their torture, if the Lord had left them to be consumed in the flames. (Marg. Ref. e-g. Notes, Lev. 26:24. Ps. 90:11. Matt. 10:27,28.) He expected, that mightiest of his soldiers to cast them into the furnace; and bound them with their clothes on, as if he would secure the destruction of all that belonged to them. Thus they were cast bound into this tremendous furnace of fire, at the time when it was heated to that extreme degree, that the executioners themselves were struck dead by the vehement flame which issued out of it. It is not improbable, that these had been forward to comply with the king's orders, and to show their malice against the Jews; and thus they fell victims to their own evil dispositions. Every circumstance, however, served to illustrate the greatness of the miracle, in the preservation of those who "fell down bound into the midst of the burning fiery furnace." (Marg. and Marg. Ref. h—l.)

V. 24, 25. Some think that Nebuchadnezzar was astonished by the death of his mighty men, or by the terrors of his conscience: but it is more likely, that he saw at a distance the young men walking at liberty, and apparently in comfort, in the fiery furnace. It seems that it was large enough to admit of their walking about in it, and was probably formed somewhat like those in which lime is at present burned. Nebuchadnezzar called his counsellors to witness this astonishing incident: they had thrown three men bound into the fire; but now four were walking about, in the midst of the furnace; and the fourth was so glorious, that he was like a son of God, or a holy angel. The fire, it seems, had power to burn the bonds of the young men, though not to singe their garments: they found no inconvenience, and they felt no terror, in the midst of this most vehement fire, nor any desire to come forth from it: they probably were employed in thankful praise and adoration of their great Deliverer, though the song ascribed to them in the Apocrypha is not genuine: and whatever the king might mean by the fourth person "like the Son of God," it is probable, that it was indeed the eternal and coequal Son of the Father, and not a created angel. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, Is. 43:1, 2. Matt. 28:19, 20, v. 20. Acts 18:9—11.)

V. 26, 27. When the king had viewed for some time this surprising scene, he was convinced of his error, and altered his conduct: he called to the pious Jews, by the honourable appellation of "the servants of the most high God," and commanded them to come forth. None could bring them out, nor would they quit their place without being called from it. (Note, Acts 16:35—40.) But on this summons they came forth: and all the multitude of the chief persons, from every part of the empire, who witnessed the transaction, were collected together to examine them; and found, to their unspeakable astonishment, that the fire had no power at all on their bodies, or even any effect upon their raiment. Thus the principal persons, in every part of this extensive empire, would be prepared to return home, and to circulate and authenticate, in the most unexceptionable and decisive manner, the account loose, "walking in the midst of the fire, and "they have no hurt: and the form of the fourth is like the Son of God.

26 ¶ Then Nebuchadnezzar came near to the ^tmouth of the burning fiery furnace, and spake, and said, Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego, ^uye servants of the most high God, ^vcome forth, and come hither. Then Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego, came forth of the midst of the fire.

27 And ^wthe princes, governors, and captains, and the king's counsellors, being gathered together, saw these men, ^xupon whose bodies the fire had no power, ^ynor was a hair of their heads singed, neither were their coats changed, nor the smell of fire had passed on them.

28 Then Nebuchadnezzar spake, and said, ^zBlessed be the God of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego, who hath ^{aa}sent his angel, and delivered his servants ^{ab}that trusted in him, ^{ac}and have changed the king's word, and ^{ad}yielded their bodies, that they might not ^{ae}serve nor worship any god, except their own God.

29 Therefore, ^{af}I make a decree, That every people, nation, and language, which speak any thing ^{ag}unlawful against the God of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego, shall be ^{ah}cut in pieces, and their houses shall be made a dunghill: ^{ai}because there is no other God that can deliver after this sort.

30 Then ^{aj}the king ^{ak}promoted Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego, in the province of Babylon.

of this wonderful interposition of the God of Israel in behalf of his faithful worshippers. And we cannot but suppose, that it had a happy effect upon the minds of many individuals, and tended greatly to check the progress of idolatry, and to promote the worship of the living God. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, 4:1—3, 6:25—28.)

V. 28, 29. This transaction seems to have produced deep convictions in the mind of Nebuchadnezzar: insomuch that, at the time, he rendered adoration before all his princes to the God of Israel, who had "sent his angel to deliver his servants:" he allowed, that they had done right in trusting in the Lord; and in rather yielding up their bodies to the flame, than worship any other but their own God. But (as if he were resolved at all events to be a persecutor) he decreed most terrible punishments to those who dared to speak a word against the God of the Jews: "because no other God could deliver after that manner." His convictions, however, were transient: his pride was unhumbled; and no abiding change at this time took place in his disposition and conduct; as it will appear from the extraordinary narration of the ensuing chapter. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, 2:5—9, 4:34—37, 6:25—28, Ezra 1:1—3.)

Have changed the king's word. (28) 'Have rendered his command of no effect, God having suspended the execution of it.' Louth.

V. 30. (Marg. Ref.) The Septuagint add at the end of this verse, "And he advanced them to be governors over all the Jews that were in his kingdom."—That translation, indeed, contains, in this chapter, several circumstances, which are not in the original; while the death of the mighty men, who cast the three young into the furnace, is omitted.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—7. Ungodly men commonly spare no cost in gratifying their pride and lusts; and the devotees of idolatry and superstition are often equally profuse about their false worship: surely then the servants of God should not be niggardly in showing their attachment to his cause and service!—Pride and bigotry combine in disposing princes to require from their subjects conformity to their religion, whether right or wrong: and alas! there are but few in comparison, even among professed Christians, who can give a much better reason for their religious observances, than the Babylonians could for worshipping the golden image, which the king had set up.—When worldly interest allures, and sanguinary statutes terrify, seldom any great number will refuse compliance; but fear, or hope, or superstition, will procure "the golden image" far more worshippers than will adhere to the God of heaven. Conformity and uniformity of this kind are perfectly easy to the slothful, the careless, the sensual, and the infidel: that is, to a very great majority in most communities; whose worship, if paid at all springs far more from habit, interest,

CHAPTER IV.

Nebuchadnezzar proclaims to all nations the dealings "of the most high God" with him, adding benevolent salutations and admiring praises, 1-3. He states that he had a dream which the magicians could not interpret, 4-7; and that he related it to Daniel, 8-18; who interpreted it, 19-27. The dream is fulfilled, in Nebuchadnezzar's loss of dignity, reason, and almost the human form for a season, 28-33; but, being restored, he humbly and fervently adores and praises God, 34-37.

NEBUCHADNEZZAR the king, "unto all people, nations, and languages, that dwell in all the earth; ¹peace be multiplied unto you.

love of ease, or desire of obtaining the ruler's favour, than from regard to the authority and commandments of God.—Satan has ever studied to entice men into antiscriptural modes of worship, by external splendour, and whatever could enchant the senses, enliven the imagination, or move the affections: and even music, though consecrated to the service of the sanctuary, and capable of good improvement in subservency to devotion, has been, and is often, wretchedly abused to the vilest purposes: it should therefore be used in religious ordinances with jealousy and caution, lest it should produce a false fervour, and subserve the cause of vice, delusion, idolatry, superstition, or enthusiasm. (Note, Ec. 15:1.)

V. 8-23. While the multitude, in every age, nation, and rank in society, are servile in compliance with the will of their superiors, and ready to obey any laws about religion, which conduce to their outward ease, safety, or emolument, without fear of God or regard to conscience; there are a few witnesses for the truth in the most degenerate times, who dare to be singular, and to venture all consequences in "obeying God rather than man." These will be sure to meet with malicious accusers: especially if the liberty, favour, or property which they enjoy, be worth envying or coveting. Their enemies will speciously profess themselves to be the only loyal and dutiful subjects to their prince, and zealous for his welfare, the honour of the law, and the quiet of the realm: and they will represent the pious scruples of the servants of God, as arising from contumacy, contempt of authority, and disaffection to the government: and as deserving the severest punishment denounced by the most cruel laws. They will not, if they can help it, let persecuting statutes remain unexecuted: and they will plead, that if the religious tenets of the persecuted do not deserve punishment, yet their obstinacy and contempt of legal authority do. Thus princes have often been wrought up to the highest pitch of rage and fury, against their most useful and inoffensive subjects, and their most faithful servants: and Christians have been dragged as the vilest malefactors before kings and rulers; and put to the dreadful alternative, either to risk the everlasting wrath of God by deliberate disobedience to his commandments, or to suffer every torture which the infernal rage and cruelty of man can devise.—Those who have been long accustomed to be obeyed with unreserved servility, and to over-awe and crush all opposition, can scarcely conceive of a power above them, or a God able to deliver his servants out of their hands: but their impious boasts and proud menaces are real kindnesses to the persecuted, who need not be careful or fearful, in answering under such circumstances. Indeed these fiery trials will not suit the superficial or hypocritical: the fear of man, and love of the world, and want of fear or love to God; and above all their want of faith, will concur in rendering them apostates in the time of temptation. Nor will every real believer be able to stand, with serene and unshaken fortitude, when first cast into such a trying situation. But the Lord will strengthen his people's faith in the time of need: and firm reliance on the divine wisdom, power, truth, and mercy, together with peace of conscience, and an assured joyful hope of heaven, will gradually compose their minds, and determine them to venture all consequences rather than sin against the Lord. He is as able, as he was in ancient times, to preserve the lives of his servants in the most imminent perils, to support them under the most exquisite sufferings, and abundantly to recompense all their losses for his sake. A firm persuasion of these truths will fortify the soul against temptations to perjure, or to be ashamed of Christ: for no plea of necessity, danger, obligation to gratitude, or example, will be sufficient, if we deliberately break God's commandments for the sake of temporal safety or advantage.—We should be meek in our replies, even when exposed to the most unmerited injuries, "not rendering railing for railing:" for "the wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God:" but we must also be decisive, that we will obey God rather than man, and take the consequences.

V. 24-30. A firm and resolute conduct, however calm and prudent, will greatly enrage proud persecutors, whose furious countenances both show the misery of being the slaves to their own passions, and prove whose children they are, and what master they serve: but this does not render them in any degree the more to be feared; for after all they can only kill the body, and by increasing the intensity, they decrease the duration, of the sufferings which they inflict, and expose their own folly and impotency.—But what incalculable guilt have persecutors to answer for! The crimes of their numerous instruments will in some sense be chargeable on them: and the souls of the murderers, (if not their lives also,) as well as the blood of the murdered, will be required at their hands. It must then be infinitely dangerous to all, whether principals or accessories, to meddle with this diabolical business: and could we look into the eternal world, we should behold the persecuted believer safe from the malice of his foes; and the willing executioners of the unjust rage of persecutors, enduring the wrath of God in unquenchable fire.—The Lord can render every furnace of affliction, and the bed of death, nay, the rack, or the flames, the scene of sweet communion between him and his people. Their sufferings only serve to loosen their bonds, and to set them at liberty from sin and the world: they may be comfortable in any situation, by the manifested presence of the Son of God; and this may be so evident, as even to fill their persecutors with astonishment and dismay.—The Lord can soon convince the most proud that he is above them; and he can show them the madness and folly of their rebellion: and he will effectually "cause the wrath of man to turn to his praise, and restrain the remainder of it;" he can extort adorations even from his enemies; and make all men see how wise, safe, and happy they are, who adhere to his service, in seasons of peculiar danger and difficulty. He can make those, who have no love to him, instrumental in stopping the mouths of blasphemers, and in promoting the knowledge of his great name: and he can render the sufferings of his people conducive to their temporal, as well as to their eternal good. "O LORD God of hosts, blessed is the man who putteth his trust in thee!"—Finally, let us remember, that he, who preserved these pious Jews in the fiery furnace, is able to uphold us in the hour of sharp temptation, to keep us from falling into sin in the most unfavourable circumstances, and "to present us faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy."

NOTES.—CHAPTER IV. V. 1-3. This chapter no doubt contains the exact words of Nebuchadnezzar's proclamation, which Daniel was directed to insert in his prophecy; and thus it became a part of "the oracles of God." Nebuchadnezzar thought it good to send the wonderful narrative of those things which had happened to him, connected with his sentiments concerning them, into every part of his extensive dominions; whilst he was under that impression of divine things, which they had made upon his mind.—We have repeatedly found this haughty monarch under some general convictions, concerning the pre-eminent power and majesty of JEHOVAH: yet it was also evident, that there was no effectual change in his disposition and conduct: (Notes, 2: 46-49, v. 47. 3:28, 29.) but the beginning and the conclusion of this chapter lead us at least to hope, with prevailing confidence, that he was at last made a monument of the victorious power of divine grace, and the exceeding riches of divine mercy. Without any such pompous additions to his name, and style of king, as were generally customary; (Ezra 7:12.) he addressed himself to all the inhabitants of the earth, meaning chiefly, but not exclusively, those of his own dominions. He began by wishing them peace, as the sum of all earthly blessings; which is the more observable, as he had spent his life in embroiling them in wars. (Marg. Ref. b. Rom. 1: 5-7, v. 7. 1 Pet. 1:12, v. 2.) He deemed it good, thus publicly to declare the miraculous dealings of God with him; it was proper, reasonable, becoming, and useful, as an expression of adoring gratitude to God, and of good will to men: (Notes, Rom. 12:1, 2. Tit. 3:8.) and he concluded with breaking out into admiration of the greatness and power of the wonderful works of JEHOVAH, and an acknowledgment of his everlasting authority and kingdom, in language similar to the most exalted adorations of his most eminent servants and worshippers. (*Marg. Ref. d. e. Notes, 1 Sam. 2:1-8. 1 Chr. 29:10-19, v. 11, 12. Ps. 145:9-13. [Practical Observations.]

10 Thus were the visions of my head in my bed; I saw, and behold a tree in the midst of the earth, and the height thereof was great.

11 The tree grew, and was strong, and the height thereof reached unto heaven, and the sight thereof to the end of all the earth:

12 The leaves thereof were fair, and the fruit thereof much, and in it was meat for all; the beasts of the field had shadow under it, and the fowls of the heaven dwelt in the boughs thereof, and all flesh was fed of it.

13 I saw in the visions of my head upon my bed, and behold, a watcher and a holy One came down from heaven;

14 He cried aloud, and said thus, Hew down the tree, and cut off his branches, shake off his leaves, and scatter his fruit: let the beasts get away from under it, and the fowls from his branches.

15 Nevertheless, leave the stump of his roots in the earth, even with a band of iron and brass, in the tender grass of the field; and let it be wet with the dew of heaven, and let his portion be with the beasts in the grass of the earth.

16 Let his heart be changed from man's, and let a beast's heart be given unto him; and let seven times pass over him.

17 This matter is by the decree of the watchers, and the demand by the word of the holy ones: to the intent that the living may know that the Most High ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever he will, and setteth up over it the basest of men.

18 This dream I king Nebuchadnezzar have seen. Now thou, O Belteshazzar, declare the in-records, we must be convinced, that sullen silence or outrageous blasphemy was far more to be expected from him, than such an adoration as this, of that God who had so degraded and abased him.

V. 4-7. 'God's particular judgments often resemble the general one, in their coming suddenly and unexpectedly, when men indulge themselves in their carnal security. (Ps. 20:6, 7. Matt. 24:43, 44. 1 Thes. 5:2, 3.)' Louth.—After Nebuchadnezzar had successfully finished his wars, and the immense improvements and buildings which he made at Babylon, of which many authors have written copiously, and as men filled with astonishment; he had uninterrupted peace, rest, and prosperity in his palace, and probably expected to end his days in tranquil enjoyment: but he was suddenly alarmed by a remarkable dream, and by his thoughts upon his bed concerning it. (Marg. Ref. f-h. Notes, 2:1. Gen. 41:8.) According to custom, therefore, he published an edict, commanding the attendance of all his wise men, that they might interpret the dream to him: but, though on a former occasion they had promised to interpret his dream, if he would declare it to them, yet they were not able at this time to do it; nay, they did not so much as venture to attempt it. (Marg. Ref. i. Notes, 2:2-13. 5:9-9.) Perhaps they thought that some calamity was foreboded: but not being able to determine any thing distinctly about it; they did not choose to risk the consequence of a conjectural interpretation, but rather to submit to the disgrace of not being able to interpret it, as no other punishment was denounced.

V. 8, 9. Whether the king consulted the other wise men to prove them, before he applied to Daniel; or whether he would rather have received the desired information from them, than from him; he could scarcely avoid recollecting that Daniel had on a former occasion shown him both his dream and the interpretation of it. (Notes, 2:24-45.)—In relating this conference he observed, that Daniel was also called "Belteshazzar, according to the name of his god," Bel, or Belus; as he had formerly worshipped this idol as his god, though when he wrote this he "worshipped the God of heaven" (37) and that in Daniel was "the Spirit of the holy Gods," or of the holy God: the name of God being plural in the Hebrew, though generally used with a singular adjective or verb. (Note, Gen. 1:1.)—He next noticed, that he had addressed Daniel, as "the master of the magicians," as being pre-eminent among all the reputedly wise men of Babylon: for he had not at that time learned to distinguish between a prophet of the Lord and these impostors, except as he deemed Daniel more skilful than they. Convinced, however, that he spake by "the spirit of the holy Gods," or the Lord God of Israel, and that no secret was so concealed from him, as to occasion him any perturbation of mind, he earnestly desired him to interpret his visions. (Marg. Ref. 18. Notes, 1:3-7, 17-20. 2:46-49. v. 48. 5:10-16. Gen. 41:38.)

V. 10-18. As the king lay asleep, he dreamed that he saw a tree, in the centre of the earth, (conceiving of it as of an immensely spacious plain,) of so enormous a height and size, that its top reached to heaven, and it was visible to the extremity of the earth. This tree was covered with an exuberance of beautiful leaves, and loaded with immense quantities of fruit: its branches formed a covert for the beasts of the field, and places for the nests of the fowls of the air, and all the inhabitants of the earth fed upon its fruit. represented the exceedingly prosperous condition of Nebuchadnezzar, the height of his exaltation, the extent of his dominions and renown, the splendour of his kingdom, the multitude of his subjects who received protection from him, and the peace and plenty which they enjoyed under his administration: (Marg. Ref. q-u. Notes, Is. 10:28-34. v. 33, 34. Ez. 31:10-13.) He then saw "a watcher and a holy One," either a holy angel, or a divine person, called a watcher, as watching over the affairs of men, (Note, 20-26, vv. 23, 24.) who spake with great authority and energy, and as one giving orders to his servants, to "hew down the tree, &c." Yet, when the branches, leaves, and fruit should be destroyed or scattered, and the beasts and fowls driven away, the stump of the tree would be preserved in the earth, as if girt round with iron and brass; while overgrown with grass, and wet with the dew of heaven. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. z-c. 26. Notes, 20-26, vv. 25, 28-33. Rev. 18:1-3.)—Here a transition was made from the tree, to Nebuchadnezzar who was represented by it. The tree being lost sight of, a person came in its stead; as the imagination in dreams frequently passes from one thing to another, in a wild and incoherent manner. This person was represented as living on the grass of the field, as wetted with the dew of heaven, as having his portion with the beasts; and as having lost the heart or disposition of a man; being estranged from the pursuits, employments, and manners of life, peculiar to the human species, and fitted to associate with the beasts of the field. Thus he would continue, till seven times, or years, passed over him; and then this condition would be terminated, and he restored to his former capacities and situation. (Marg. Ref. d, e. Notes, 20-26, vv. 24, 25, 28-33, vv. 32, 33. 5:18-24.) All this would take place by "the decree of the watchers, and by the demand of the holy Ones;" which some understand of the holy angels, the ministers of Providence; who received from God this decree, and commission to carry it into execution, for the manifestation of the divine glory in abasing this proud man. Others by "holy ones" understand the saints of God, true believers, in answer to whose earnest prayers for deliverance from oppression, this decree was made. But some think that the "Holy, Holy, Holy Lord God of Hosts," the triune JEHOVAH, was meant by the watchers and the Holy Ones; and indeed Daniel's interpretation gives great sanction to this opinion: as he says that "this was the decree of the most High." (23, 24.) By his appointment this event would take place, and be notified to all who lived on the earth, "that the living might know, that the most High ruleth in the kingdom of men;" that he was above the mightiest monarchs, and disposed of them and their dominions as he pleased; and that he frequently placed over them the meanest and basest of men.—This dream Nebuchadnezzar desired Daniel to interpret; as he, and he alone, could do it, by the inspiration of the Spirit of God. (Marg. Ref. f-m.)

V. 19. When Daniel had heard this dream, and perceived what a terrible calamity was coming on his prince and benefactor, for whom he had a benevolent regard; and when he considered the painful, and even perilous, service imposed on him, of declaring this terrible message from God to a man of so impetuous and violent a temper: he was greatly astonished, and kept silence for an hour under perturbation of mind. (Marg. Ref. o. Notes, 8:27. Hab. 3:16.) This he king terpretation thereof, 'forasmuch as all the wise men of my kingdom are not able to make known unto me the interpretation: "but thou art able; for the Spirit of the holy Gods is in thee."

19 ¶ Then "Daniel, whose name was Belteshazzar, was astonished for one hour, and his thoughts troubled him. The king spake, and said, Belteshazzar, "let not the dream, or the interpretation thereof, trouble thee. Belteshazzar answered and said, "My lord, the dream be to them that hate thee, and the interpretation thereof to thine enemies.

noticed, and bade him not be troubled at the dream, or its interpretation; intimating that he would not be offended at him, for declaring the heaviest tidings to him. Accordingly Daniel introduced the subject with a very courtly, yet doubtless sincere, expression of his good-will: had the matter rested with him, the dream and its interpretation would have concerned only his enemies; but the most High God had otherwise determined.—"He was troubled for the great judgment of God, which he saw ordained against the king: and so the prophets used, on the one part, to denounce God's judgments, for the zeal they bare to his glory; and on the other part, to have compassion upon man, and also to consider, that they should be subject to God's judgments, if he did not regard them with pity." (Marg. Ref. Note, Jer. 29:4-7, v.)

One hour | The word hour, as measuring time, occurs first in the writings of this prophet. (3:15.)

V. 20-26 The application of the dream to Nebuchadnezzar was very obvious. He was the flourishing tree; which in various respects was emblematical of his power, fame, wealth, and prosperity. The hewing down also of this tree, with the circumstances attending it, showed his loss of these advantages, through that judgment of God which was coming upon him: for, being smitten with a most extraordinary madness, and becoming for a time like a brute, he would be utterly incapable of all the functions of government. Being consequently set aside, others would assume the direction of public affairs: while no remedy being found for his malady, and he discovering in every thing the propensities of an animal, he would be driven from the dwellings of men, and left to associate with the beasts, feeding with them upon grass, and exposed, without shelter or covering, to the inclemencies of the weather. This would continue for seven times or years; till at length he would be made to know, that the most High ruled in the kingdom of men, and gave it to whom he pleased. It is observable that Daniel omitted the last expression used by the king, "And setteth up over it the basest of men;" thinking perhaps the application mortifying enough without repeating it. He also showed him that the kingdom would be ensured to him, after he was convinced, that, however high any of the kings of the earth might be exalted, the heavens, or the God of heaven, alone ruled with independent and absolute authority.—This dream and its interpretation would soon become known in the court of Nebuchadnezzar: and as Daniel was in great authority there: when the former part of it received so remarkable an accomplishment, he would use his influence to lead all parties concerned to expect the fulfilment of the latter part also: and thus God wonderfully inclined their hearts to wait for that event, managing the affairs of the empire by a regency, and not advancing any other person to the throne; that it might be open for Nebuchadnezzar's restoration, when he recovered the use of his rational powers. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 10-18, 28-33, 2:38.) —The heavens, &c. (26) 32:37. Luke 15:18, 21.

V. 27. Daniel concluded, by entreating the king to take in good part the counsel which he was about to give him: and in good earnest to repent, and renounce his sins, and begin to lead a life of righteousness; to cease from all oppression and injustice; and to show mercy to his poor subjects and captives, especially the poor oppressed worshippers of JEHOUAH: that so, renouncing idolatry, he might become the servant of the most High God; for perhaps this might prove "a lengthening of his tranquillity." Daniel could not be sure but that this judgment was conditionally denounced, (as the destruction of Nineveh by Jonah,) or it might at least be retarded or alleviated. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Jer. 18:7-10, Jon. 3.) "Wherefore, O king, . . . regard the counsel, which I . . . give thee: . . . be thou careful to turn away from those sins, wherewith thou hast provoked God, unto a holy and righteous carriage before him; . . . resolve now to demean thyself religiously towards God, and mercifully towards his afflicted people: and if there be any possible means to continue thy peace and welfare, this is it which I have now prescribed thee." Bp. Hall.—"Cease from provoking God any longer by thy sins: that he may mitigate his punishment, if thou show by thy upright life, that thou hast true faith and repentance. —"If it may be a healing of thy error," Marg. "Suffer the errors of thy former life to be redressed."—The LXX render the first clause, "Redeem thy iniquities by alms-deeds: but the translation no more accords to the original, than the doctrine does to the constant tenor of Scripture.

V. 28-33. It pleased God to give Nebuchadnezzar a year's respite and space for repentance; but he did not repent; he neither repented nor profited by Daniel's plain dealing; and probably the impression wore off in a continual succession of business and pleasure. (Notes, Rom. 2:4-6, 2 Pet. 3:14-16, v. 15, Rev. 2:20-23, v. 21.) So that after the expiration of the year he was exceedingly elated in his mind by reflecting on his great success and achievements. He is generally supposed to have been walking in a terrace of those hanging gardens, which were annexed to his most magnificent palace: these were raised to a great height in the air, with surprising art, labour, and expense; and from the uppermost of them he had a view at once of the whole city, and all its sumptuous edifices. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. i, k.) With these objects before his eyes, he said, (probably in soliloquy), "Is not this great Babylon, which I have built, &c."—The city had indeed been founded many ages before: but he had seven times shall pass over thee, 'until thou know that the most High ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever he will.

33 The "same hour was the thing fulfilled upon Nebuchadnezzar: 'and he was driven from men, and did eat grass as oxen, and his body was wet with the dew of heaven, till his hairs were grown like eagles' feathers, and his nails like birds' claws.

34 ¶ And 'at the end of the days I Nebuchadnezzar 'lifted up mine eyes unto heaven, and mine understanding returned unto me, and 'I blessed the most High, and I praised and honoured 'him that liveth for ever, 'whose dominion is an ever exceedingly enlarged, beautified, enriched, replenished, and fortified it; so that it became the wonder of the world, for its walls, temples, palaces, and decorations: and therefore he spake, as if he had built it from the ground. The end he proposed in these works was, that it might be "the house of his kingdom," his royal city, the centre of his kingdom, and the seat of his government: this he supposed he had done by his own power; and he aimed in doing it to promote "the honour of his majesty." Thus he took all the glory to himself, and overlooked entirely his obligations and accountableness to God, and his dependance on him; he regarded the whole as his own, to be used according to his own will, and for his own glory, without any respect to the will and glory of God.—This was the language of a proud apostate rebel, of one who aspired to the throne of God and was his rival, according to the first temptation, "Ye shall be as gods;" and according to the character of the ambitious tempter, who aspires to be the god and prince of this world. (Marg. Ref. 1—o. Notes, 1 Chr. 29:10-19. Is. 10:8-14. Ex. 28:2-5, 30:2-3. Acts 12:20-23.) But while this proud word was in the king's mouth, and probably known to none but God and himself; a voice came from heaven directed to him by name, and denouncing the immediate execution of the sentence predicted in the dream. These seem to have been the last words which he understood, before he was deprived of his reason; and they were attended with such terror, as might concur in bringing the judgment upon him; he, however, well recollected them, when at length he recovered his senses. Immediately the sentence was carried into execution; and he continued brutalized, so to speak, till his hairs (probably over his whole body) were "grown like eagles' feathers, and his nails like birds' claws."—It is not necessary or useful to inquire particularly into the nature and causes of this strange malady, or to show that aught of the kind ever befell any other person. "Is any thing too hard for the Lord?" It was immediately from him, in execution of his righteous sentence, for the display of his own glory, and for the most merciful purposes, though it had the appearance of severity. The previous notice, given by the dream and its interpretation, would tend to dispose the persons concerned to concur with the divine appointment, and to leave the king, for the time, to the life of a brute.—(Marg. Ref. p-y. Notes, 20-26, 5:18-24.)

V. 34-37. At the end of the predicted season, Nebuchadnezzar was restored to the perfect use of his reason, and all his powers of body and mind. He then "lifted up his eyes to heaven," as a rational creature, and in adoration of the glorious majesty of God, who there reigned over all the kings of the earth: and (instead of raging "like a wild bull in a net," as so proud a man under such a mortifying dispensation would have been apt to do) he "blessed" and praised "the most high God;" acknowledging the justice, wisdom, and mercy of his dealings with him; thanking him for sparing and recovering him; and giving him honour and worship, as the living and true God, the universal, almighty, and everlasting Sovereign; in comparison of whom all the inhabitants of the earth, even the mightiest monarchs and conquerors, are reputed as nothing; who "does according to his will" both in the glorious armies of heaven, and "among the inhabitants of the earth;" and as none can withstand his power, or defeat his counsels; so none may find fault with any thing he does, or call him to account; seeing he has an unalienable right to do what he will, and cannot deviate from the most perfect wisdom, justice, truth, and goodness. (Marg. Ref. x-h. Notes, 1-3, v. 3. 2:44, 45. 1 Sam. 2:1-8. 1 Chr. 29:10-19, v. 11, 12. Job 1:20-22. 33:12, 13. Ps. 33:10-12, 145:9-13. Is. 40:12-17, 21-24. Rom. 11:33-36.)—This acknowledgment was the first evidence that his reason was restored to him; and it showed that he was far more rational than he had ever before been: and more fit for ruling others, seeing he understood his subordination to God, as his Ruler, and Lord. Accordingly he was reinstated in his honour and prosperity, that his kingdom might be rendered more glorious and renowned than ever: his counsellors and princes, (induced probably by Daniel,) perceiving the predicted change, sought to him, and replaced him on his throne; and he was more honoured and prospered than he had been before, as he no doubt ruled more in righteousness, and for the general good of his subjects. And now he declared to the whole world, that, instead of seeking his own glory, or worshipping Belus, it was his business and constant practice to worship and honour the King of heaven; all whose works verified his holy word; all whose dealings with his creatures were in justice and wisdom; and who knew how to humble in repentance, or to abase in contempt and destruction, those who walked in pride, and had been most habituated to it, or most odious in it. (Marg. Ref. i-o. Notes, 28-33, 5:18-24. Ex. 9:13-17, 18:6-11. Deut. 32:4. 2 Chr. 33:12, 13, 18, 19, 21-25. Job 40:9-14. 42:1-9. Ps. 138:6. Is. 10:12-14. Luke 18:9-14. Jam. 4:4-10. 1 Pet. 5:5-7.)—No better words could possibly have been spoken on the subject, nor can any comment reach their energy and full meaning; and though we cannot perhaps certainly conclude any man's conversion from his words, without we witness his works coincident with them; yet there can be no reasonable doubt, that he was a true penitent, a convert to God, and an accepted believer. The simplicity and humility, with which he recorded his own proud and vainglorious language, and the diligence with which he circulated this humiliating narrative throughout his empire, concur with his excellent discourse of God and his works, and his dealings with him, in establishing this conclusion. (Note, Ps. 51: title.) Nor should the exceeding riches of God's mercy and grace, in rendering such a proud tyrant, idolater, and oppressor, one of his children and servants, be veiled from our view. (Notes, Luke 23:39-43. Rom. 5:20, 21. Eph. 1:3-8. 2:4-10. 1 Tim 1:12-16.) Indeed this instance does not materially differ from the case of other sinners, who have given evidence of their humiliation, repentance, faith, reconciliation to God, love to him, and zeal for his glory, even when connected with their own disgrace: for "where sin hath abounded, grace much more abounds."—Nebuchadnezzar exposes himself to shame before the whole world, that he may glorify God. This is the true way of praising God.—It is computed that Nebuchadnezzar did not live above a year after this restoration: and though the imperfect histories which remain of those times give no distinct account of these events; yet they expressly mention, that he prophesied of the conquests of Babylon by the Medes and Persians, and of other remote transactions. This must have arisen from the attention which he paid, towards the close of his life, to the prophecies of Daniel, and the assurance, with which he declared his expectation concerning the accomplishment of them.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-9. The dispassionate language of those, who have most disturbed the earth by their ambition, implies that "peace" is the greatest of all blessings: and that they are the best friends to mankind, and the most honourable characters, who do most towards promoting and "multiplying peace," temporal and spiritual, between God and man, between man and man, and in men's hearts and consciences.—When a sinner "comes to himself," whatever his previous character and conduct have been, he will think it good to promote the welfare of mankind, by diffusing the knowledge of God, and of his glorious perfections and wonderful works: and, if occasion require, he will be ready to declare the very things, which most discover the sinfulness and folly of his own conduct, and the pride of his own heart.—The more men get acquainted with God and his works, the higher their admiration will be of his greatness and glory; and the less will they think of their own attainments and exaltation: and we should all count it our privilege to propagate our discoveries on such interesting subjects, according to our measure of ability, influence, or authority.—When worldly men have accomplished their projects, and have arrived at the degree of prosperity and affluence to which they aspired; when they are at rest in their houses or palaces, and flourishing in their external circumstances: when they are saying to their souls, in vain-confident security, "Sou, take thine ease, eat, drink, and be merry:" then there is reason to conclude, that some heavy calamity impends over them.—If at any time terror seizes on ungodly men, they generally first seek direction or relief from sinful measures or worthless delusions: nor do any of us at all times apply to God, or his servants, for counsel or comfort, till other counsellors and comforters disappoint our expectations. The more these are proved, the more evidently is their worthlessness discovered, and the plainer it appears that they promise only to deceive. But it is happy, if at last we are willing humbly to hearken to those, who are taught by the Spirit of our holy God, to make known to us his truth and will. Yet many have general convictions, as well as repeated instructions, concerning the divine perfections, authority, and majesty; and concerning a discrimination of characters between the faithful ministers of Christ, and deceivers of every kind: whose views remain strangely indistinct, whose hearts still cleave to their idols, superstitions, and lusts, and who seek, in their perplexity, information only, without any disposition to yield an obedient ear to the commandments of God.

V. 10—18. The utmost worldly prosperity and exaltation, is but as that of a tree growing out of the earth, to a great height, very conspicuous, covered with leaves and branches, and such fruit as may profit men in their temporal interests; and which must soon be cut down, destroyed, or "cast into the fire;" but "the trees of righteousness," which the Lord has planted, when they cease to flourish and bear fruit on earth, shall be transplanted to heaven, and be fruitful and flourishing there for ever.—Monarchs should use their power to protect and diffuse good among their subjects; but how feeble is their protection, and how trivial their good compared with that of Christ our Prince and Saviour!—The degree and continuance of human prosperity depends entirely on that glorious Lord, who orders all things "according to the counsel of his own will," for the honour of his great name; often by the ministration of angels, and in answer to the prayers and for the good of his people. He mercifully corrects, when he might justly destroy: and the most severe and durable of all temporal calamities is unspeakable mercy to a sinner, if it conduce to the salvation of his soul. And though every kind and degree of insanity is justly dreaded, as the most terrible affliction to which we are here exposed; yet should the most entire madness, idiotism, or even degradation to the rank of a brute, for years, preserve a sinner from multiplying crimes, and treasuring up wrath, there would be in it a degree of mercy; and it would eventually be preferable, in the judgment of unbiassed reason, to an unrestrained course of prosperous vice; and if at last it should be overruled to his salvation, it would be the subject of eternal praises. Nay, if the Lord should see good, by such means, to keep a believer from dishonouring his name, by any folly or wickedness to which he was powerfully tempted; the dreadful prevention would be far preferable to the evil thus prevented. So that we know not what is best for us, when all things are duly considered.—No honour, dignity, wealth, abilities, learning, or usefulness can ensure a man from the most degrading situation, in which human nature has yet been placed: and it would be easy for the Lord to reduce any person to the extremest indigence and misery, which ever were experienced in an hospital, a dungeon, or a madhouse; or even to drive him forth among the beasts of the field, to feed and herd with them, and grow like them. We should therefore be thankful for our reason and advantages, and make a good use of them, while we enjoy them; and we should diligently seek the assurance of those blessings, which can never be taken from us: we should especially beware of pride and forgetfulness of God, and study to be influenced by the conviction, that "the most High ruleth" over the whole world, and "giveth it to whom he pleaseth." We have indeed no reason to covet or glory in those outward distinctions, which are often conferred on "the basest of men;" but we ought earnestly to seek those blessings, which are peculiar to the saints, who are the excellent of the earth.

V. 19—27. It may well astonish and trouble a benevolent mind, to reflect on the miseries which impend over the ungodly; and even over many of those, with whom we are most nearly connected, and to whom we are under the greatest obligations.—We should, as opportunity offers, be faithful to the greatest of men: yet recollection and caution should precede our addresses, as they must give pain or offence: and they should be delivered with such expressions of good-will, as may evince, that we are grieved to speak what we dare not conceal, and would gladly avert what we cannot but perceive to be coming upon them.—Those who are in superior stations, should encourage the servants of God to deal plainly with them; as they will be strongly tempted to the contrary, which will be the heavy loss of both parties.—A great proportion of the minister's faithfulness consists in applying general truths to particular persons or characters; that every sinner may discern himself to be intended, and not others only, as his self-love would otherwise suggest. (Notes, and P. O. 2 Sam. 12:1—14.) This should be so clearly stated, that men may see how the case and character, described in the word of God, agree with their own; and how the doom works are truth, and his ways judgment: and "those that walk in pride he is able to abase.

1.2. o 30.31. 5:20—24. Ex. 18:11. 2 Chr. 33:11,12,19. Job 40:11,12. Ez. 19:56,63. Jam. 4:6,7. 1 Pet. 5:5,6.

denounced belongs to them, except they repent: for "the decree of the most high God" will be executed upon kings as well as upon their meanest subjects.—It may be doubtful, whether temporal calamities can by any means be averted; but final misery will certainly be escaped by all, who "repent and turn to God, and do works meet for repentance." And if it be "the Father's good pleasure to give us the kingdom," it will be made sure to us, as with a band of iron and brass: all our trials and losses will work together to prepare us for it, and to put us in possession of it; and to bring us to that knowledge of God, that submission to his righteousness teaching, and authority, and that humble love of his name and zeal for his glory, which constitute the mettle for that inheritance.—It behooves those who declare the judgments of God against sinners, to call them to repentance: and to show them what they must cease from, and what they ought to do; what to renounce, and what to choose: for there can be no true faith, or forgiveness, where men do not "break off their sins by righteousness," and learn justice, equity, and mercy, to the poor and afflicted. (Notes, Is. 58:5—12. Matt. 6:12, 14,15. 18:21—35. P. O. 23—35. Note, Jam. 2:8—13, v. 13.) These things, duly attended to, may lengthen our temporal tranquillity; and if they spring from an upright heart, they will evidence our interest in heavenly blessings.

V. 28—37. When the Lord gives time for repentance, as well as warnings and calls to repent, and men grow hardened in pride; when they persist and increase in self-sufficiency and idolatry, in contempt of God, and his authority, justice, and mercy, and in sacrilegiously robbing him of his glory; the sentence, which has been long suspended over them, must be executed "suddenly and without remedy." (Note, Prov. 29:1.)—The voice of his condemning word will silence all the proud speeches, which sinners are uttering to themselves, or to one another.—Whatever dreadful misery men fall into on earth, they will in one way or other get out again: but those who "lift up their eyes in hell," will never be able to pass that gulf, which separates between them and "the heirs of salvation."—The Lord can increase, extend, limit, and terminate our troubles, as he pleases: and as he can deprive men of their understandings, and restore them; as he can disqualify and again fit them for every place and service; as he can renew, humble, and soften the heart, and bring the proudest enemy to become his most devoted suppliant and thankful worshipper and servant: so he can restrain the ambition of men, and lead those who know him not, to fulfil his purposes; even where that requires such an exactness in their conduct, as seems only capable of being produced by the most conscientious, unreserved, and self-denying obedience.—When sinners recover from that state of infatuation, to which they are reduced by Satan and their lusts, and through which they pore and grovel upon the earth, like the beasts that perish; they will first show it, by "lifting up their eyes to heaven," adoring and expecting help from God, and "setting their affections on things above;" and when believers are delivered from sanctified affliction, instead of repining at the Lord's dealings with them, they will, with their restored health and faculties, "bless the most high God" for his gracious chastisement, as well as for the removal of it; and endeavour to "honour him who liveth and reigneth" for evermore.—In proportion to our near and distinct views of his holy and righteous sovereignty and almighty power, the meanness will all the inhabitants of the earth appear in our estimation; for they are all reputed as nothing before him. As "he doeth what he will in heaven and on earth, and none can stay his hand," or call him to account for his conduct; we should learn to receive every thing as his appointment, to submit to his will, to seek his favour, and to rejoice, that "his counsel shall stand, and he will do all his pleasure." Thus our trials and deliverances will prove mercies; and we shall use every gift of God to promote the glory of the Giver. This is our highest privilege, and the sure path to immortal happiness, in which "excellent majesty will be added to us." In every circumstance of life and death, we should bless, praise, and honour our God and Saviour, and excite others to do the same; for "all his works are done in truth, and his ways are judgment;" "he knoweth how to abase those who walk in pride;" but "he giveth grace" and consolation "to the humble" and broken-hearted sinner, who calls upon him.

NOTES.—CHAP. V. V. 1—4. Belshazzar signifies Bel is his riches. He was the grandson of Nebuchadnezzar, and not his immediate successor. (Marg. and Ref. Notes, Ezra 1:1—4. Is. 14:21—23.) He reigned seventeen years: and all that time he was engaged in unsuccessful wars with Cyrus and the Medes and Persians, having succeeded to it along with his kingdom. Cyrus had driven the Chaldean armies out of the field, and at this time besieged Babylon: but the king and people, confiding in their impregnable fortifications, the abundance of provisions stored up in the city, and the extent of cultivated lands within the walls, derided his attempts. (Notes, 30.31. Is. 13:7,8. 44:25—28, v. 28. 45:1—6. Jer. 51:30—32.) Indeed it seemed scarcely possible that Cyrus should succeed: but he was raised up by God for this Belshazzar feasts with his lords, &c. they drink wine out of the sacred vessels of God, and join in praising their idols, 1-4. A hand is seen writing on the wall; and the astrologers being unable to read what was written, the king and his nobles are exceedingly terrified, 5-9. Daniel, by means of the queen, is brought in, 10-16. He rejects the king's proffered reward; and shortly reproves his pride, idolatry, and impiety, 17-24. He explains the handwriting, as denouncing the immediate death of the king, and the translation of his kingdom to the Medes and Persians, 25-28. The promised honours are ordered him, 29. That very night Belshazzar is slain, and Darius the Medo-takes the kingdom, 30, 31.

service, and was endued with extraordinary capacity, vigour, and perseverance; while Belshazzar was a feeble and negligent prince, given up to pleasure, and leaving the affairs of his kingdom to others.—Cyrus had already formed his plan, and had privately made preparation, for draining off the waters of the Euphrates into adjacent lakes and reservoirs, that he might march his army on its channel into the city; and he waited for this feast, as the proper time for the execution of his design. It was a stated festival, probably observed in honour of some idol; on which it was customary for the people of all ranks to give a full loose to their appetites, in every kind of indulgence; and Cyrus reasonably expected on that occasion to find them off their guard, and in the utmost confusion; nor was he disappointed. For, regardless of so potent and vigilant an enemy at the gates, Belshazzar set his subjects the example of riot and excess, and they copied it. He entertained a thousand of his nobles at his own table; and it was considered as a great condescension that he would eat and drink with them; for these princes did not generally mix with their subjects. Whilst they were thus regaling themselves with generous wines, he proposed to fetch the sacred vessels of the temple to drink out of, from contempt to JEHOVAH and his worshippers.—The seventy predicted years of the captivity, from Jehoikim's first reduction, drew near to an end; and Belshazzar might intend this to show his disregard of the prophecies respecting the restoration of the Jews. The vessels seem to have remained hitherto unmolested in the treasury of the temple of Belus: some indeed think, that they had been dedicated to that idol, and used in his worship; but this does not appear from the history. (Marg. b, c. Notes, 1:1, 2. v. 2. Ezra 1:7-11.) Belshazzar, however, at this time determined to appropriate them to his own use, and to pollute them by idolatry and intemperance. For, while the company drank out of these sacred vessels, they celebrated the praises of their idols, which were mere lifeless gold, or silver, or of other inferior materials: probably singing songs concerning their pretended exploits, and to their honour; pouring out libations to them; and ascribing all the victories of their ancestors, and the greatness of the city, to their assistance; especially praising them as the authors of their success against the worshippers of JEHOVAH. Thus they seemed ambitious of carrying impiety and blasphemy to the greatest extreme. (Marg. Ref. d, e. Notes, Judg. 16:23-25. 1 Sam. 5:1, 2. Hab. 1:11. Rev. 11:7-12, v. 10.) Many expositors seem to consider sacrilege as almost exclusively Belshazzar's crime. But the spoiling of the sacred treasures by Nebuchadnezzar, and no doubt appropriating them to his own use, was sacrilege in the same sense, as Belshazzar's employing the sacred vessels to common purposes: and the peculiar heinousness of Belshazzar's sin evidently consisted, in studiously and publicly insulting the God of Israel, by using the sacred vessels of his temple, when feasting in honour of the idols of Babylon.

V. 5-9. While the king, his nobles, and women, were rejoicing with impious mirth, in defiance of the power, providence, and word of God; there appeared on the wall of the room, the fingers of a man's hand, employed in writing, over against the candlestick, that it might be more distinctly seen. This, no doubt, was effected by the ministration of an angel. The king not only saw the hand, but the writing afterwards remained on the wall; and though he did not understand what was written, yet conscious guilt led him to forbode some dreadful meaning. "His thoughts troubled him," his remorse of conscience caused him to turn pale, his whole frame was disordered, so that the joints of his loins were loosed through terror, and his knees smote against each other. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. f-1. Notes, Ps. 69:22-28, v. 23. Is. 13:7, 8. 21:2-5. 45:1-6, v. 1.) In great anguish and agitation, therefore, he called to his servants to bring in the astrologers and soothsayers; and, with large promises of honour and preferment, he allured them to exert their utmost skill to read and interpret the handwriting. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. m-p. Notes 2:5-9. 4:4-7.) But they were not able to do it; and some not very probable conjectures have been formed concerning the reason of their inability: but we only know, that God was pleased, for the honour of his own name, to hide it from them. This renewed or increased Belshazzar's consternation: and his nobles also, notwithstanding their numbers, mirth, and wine, were dismayed and astonished exceedingly. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. r, s. Note, Joel 2:6.) ¶ It was probably writ in the old Hebrew letters, now called the Samaritan character, which the Chaldeans were ignorant of. Louth. It is, however, wholly incredible, that there should not be one learned man in Babylon, acquainted with the old Hebrew alphabet. Probably the difficulty lay, not in knowing the characters, but in finding out any consistent meaning in them. (Note, 25-28.)

V. 10-12. The queen, here spoken of, was not the queen-consort; for Belshazzar's wives and concubines were present at the feast. The queen-mother, Nitocris, the widow of Evil-merodach, the son of Nebuchadnezzar and the father of Belshazzar, is generally supposed to be meant. (Notes, 2 Kings 25:27-30. Ezra 1:1-4.) She was a woman of great capacity and reputation: and her active and prudent management had been for some time the chief stay of the empire. She had not attended this riotous banquet: but, hearing the tidings of the hand writing, and the terror of Belshazzar, she came into the room; and, after the customary salutation, exhorted the king to resume his courage, and not to yield to dread or despondency; for, though the wise men of Babylon could not read the writing, he had a man in his kingdom who could. She spoke of Daniel in ledge, and underst^{and}ing, interpreting of dreams, and showing of hail sentences, and dissolving of doubts, were found in the same Daniel, whom the king named Belteshazzar: now let Daniel be called, and he will show the interpretation.

13 Then was Daniel brought in before the king. And the king spake and said unto Daniel, Art thou that Daniel, which art of the children of the captivity of Judah, whom the king my father brought out of Jewry?

14 I have even heard of thee, that the Spirit of the gods is in thee, and that light and understanding and excellent wisdom is found in thee.

15 And now the wise men, the astrologers, have been brought in before me, that they should read this writing, and make known unto me the interpretation thereof: but they could not show the interpretation of the thing:

16 And I have heard of thee, that thou canst make interpretations, and dissolve doubts; now if thou canst read the writing, and make known to me the interpretation thereof, thou shalt be clothed with scarlet, and have a chain of gold about thy neck, and shalt be the third ruler in the kingdom.

17 Then Daniel answered and said before the king, Let thy gifts be to thyself, and give thy rewards to another; yet I will read the writing unto the king, and make known to him the interpretation.

language similar to what Nebuchadnezzar had used, and which she probably had learned from him: for she was aged, and Nebuchadnezzar had not been dead above twenty-four years; so that she no doubt well remembered the extraordinary events which occurred towards the close of his life. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. v-x. Notes, 4:8, 9.) Having mentioned, that "in him was the Spirit of the holy Gods," she spake with admiration of the variety of knowledge and wisdom which he possessed, like those of the gods, according to her confused ideas on that subject: she mentioned his being advanced above all the other wise men of Babylon; as having been repeatedly proved superior to them in excellency of knowledge and disposition, and in interpreting dreams, or solving difficult questions; alluding, no doubt, to the instances which have been considered: (2: 4) and she observed, that if he were called, he would certainly read and interpret the handwriting. Probably, she knew where to find him, though Belshazzar did not; and might tacitly intend to censure his neglect of so extraordinary a person.—Though Nebuchadnezzar called Daniel Belteshazzar, from the name of his idol, he was it seems more generally called by his original name. He was not among the magicians, when called by Belshazzar: and both these circumstances show, that he was well known as a zealous worshipper of Israel's God, and as entirely estranged from the practices of the magicians; though erroneously considered by Nitocris as the master of them. (2:18. Note, 4:8, 9.)

V. 13-16. Some infer from Belshazzar's ignorance of Daniel, that he had not been employed under him: but this rather proves that the king minded pleasure more than business; and was better acquainted with those who ministered to his sensuality, than with such as managed affairs of state. Belshazzar knew nothing of him; (Daniel;) who argues him to have been a weak and vicious prince, according to the character historians give of him; and that he left the care of the public affairs to his mother, minding nothing but his pleasures. Louth. It is certain that Daniel did "the king's business" in the former years of Belshazzar; (8:27) and it seems probable, that he was never quite laid aside, though comparatively neglected. Indeed Belshazzar spake to him with less respect than Nebuchadnezzar had been used to do; and seems even to have reflected on him as a stranger and a captive, whilst he acknowledged his extraordinary endowments. As, however, the wise men could not read the writing, and he had been informed that Daniel could, he was willing that he should on that condition have the promised recompense. (Marg. and Marg. Ref.)

V. Daniel evidently behaved in a very different manner to Belshazzar, on this occasion, than he had formerly 19 And for the majesty that he gave him, all people, nations, and languages, trembled and feared before him: whom he would he slew, and whom he would he kept alive, and whom he would he set up; and whom he would he put down.

20 But when his heart was lifted up, and his mind hardened in pride, he was deposed from his kingly throne, and they took his glory from him:

21 And he was driven from the sons of men; and his heart was made like the beasts, and his dwelling was with the wild asses: they fed him with grass like oxen, and his body was wet with the dew of heaven; till he knew that the most high God ruled in the kingdom of men, and that he appointeth over it whomsoever he will.

22 And thou his son, O Belshazzar, hast not humbled thy heart, though thou knewest all this;

23 But hast lifted up thyself against the Lord of heaven; and they have brought the vessels of his house before thee, and thou, and thy lords, thy wives and thy concubines, have drunk wine in them; and thou hast praised the gods of silver, and gold, of brass, iron, wood, and stone, which see not, nor hear, nor know: and the God in whose hand thy breath is, and whose are all thy ways, hast thou not glorified.

24 Then was the part of the hand sent from him; and thus writing was written.

done to Nebuchadnezzar; both omitting the customary expressions of respect and good-will, and slighting his offers of honour and preferment. (Notes, 4:19-27.) But it should be considered, that Nebuchadnezzar was his senior, as well as his superior in authority; and his benefactor: whereas he spake to Belshazzar, as a very aged and eminent person (being at this time almost ninety years old) to one much younger. He had in former instances known from prophecy, that the Chaldean monarchy would continue for some time, and his preferment gave him an opportunity of being useful: but he was now assured that Belshazzar's reign and life, and the Chaldean monarchy, were about to terminate together. Probably, he was at this time nearly, if not fully, as high in authority as Belshazzar proffered to advance him; and he could scarcely avoid despising one, who was so extremely ignorant concerning even the affairs of his own kingdom. Nebuchadnezzar was a very faulty character: yet he had great abilities, applied them to business, and was in many respects eminent, as a monarch: but Belshazzar was every way base, odious, and contemptible. Above all, he had that night been insulting the God of heaven, in the most daring manner, by profaning the sacred vessels in his revels, and extolling his own idols. (Note, 1-4.) Daniel therefore knew that his doom was irreversible, and immediately to be put in execution: and he did not speak to him, as a subject to his prince: but, as the delegate of heaven, he denounced sentence against him, as a condemned criminal. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, 29. Jer. 36:27-29. Matt. 23:29-39. Acts 7:51-53. 8:18-24.)

V. 18-24. Daniel in addressing Belshazzar called his attention to the singular case of Nebuchadnezzar, (his father, or grandfather,) and thus solemnly introduced his interpretation.—Nebuchadnezzar had received all his power from God; he had become terrible to all the nations of his extensive empire; and he had very frequently used his unlimited authority, in an arbitrary, oppressive, and cruel manner. (Marg. Ref. i-l. Notes, 2:37. 3:1-23. 4:10-18. Jer. 27: 4-9.) Yet the immediate cause of that well-known judgment, to which he was exposed, was the hardness of his heart, through pride and presumption, in arrogant contempt and defiance of God: for which diabolical sin, he was degraded as it were to a brute, till he was brought to submit and worship the Lord; which at length he did in language almost angelical. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. m-p. Notes, 4:1-3, 28-37.) But Belshazzar, though fully acquainted with all these facts, had not humbled himself before God: but had been guilty of an insult on him, more flagrant than any of Nebuchadnezzar's crimes; having sacrilegiously and contemptuously used the consecrated vessels, in honour of his base idols; and thus refused to glorify the God, "in whose hand his breath was, and whose were all his ways." (Marg. Ref. q-b.) And it was at the very time, when he was thus setting JEHOVAH at defiance, that the handwriting was seen on the wall. (Notes, 1-9.)

V. 25-28. The literal meaning of the words written seems to be: "He hath numbered, He hath numbered; He hath weighed, and they divide." This Daniel interpreted to signify, that God had certainly numbered the years, or days, of the Chaldean monarchy, and of Belshazzar's life; and they were now fully accomplished: (Gen. 41:32.) the measure of his days was finished, and that of his iniquity was filled; so that God would no more spare him. "Tekel," "He hath weighed;" this signified, that the king was weighed in the impartial balances of divine justice, and found deserving of the deepest condemnation; as base metal and counterfeit money are detected by the scales, being weighed and found deficient.

—"Peres" is the same as "Upharsin," without the prefix and the termination, and signifies, "he hath divided;" but the similarity between Peres, and the original word for Persians, seems also referred to; and it was therefore interpreted to mean, that his kingdom was taken from him and given to the Medes and Persians, who would possess it between them. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 30, 31. Jer. 6:27-30. Ez. 22:18-22.)

—It is remarkable, that Daniel never exhorted Belshazzar to repentance, for he knew that his doom was fixed. (Notes, 17. 1 Sam. 28:12-19.)

V. 29. Belshazzar does not seem to have understood, that the sentence was to be executed immediately; but, whether he believed Daniel or not, he made a point of showing no resentment, and of ordering him the promised recompense; and though Daniel had previously expressed his contempt of the honours intended him, yet he did not refuse them; (Notes, 17.) notwithstanding he foresaw the immediate termination of that authority, by which they were conferred.—Some however suppose, that the orders were indeed given immediately; but the execution of them was necessarily deferred till morning, which the intervening transactions of course prevented.

V. 30, 31. While these things were transacting in the palace, two divisions of Cyrus's army had marched on the channel of the river into the city, from each end of it: and finding the gates of brass, intended to bar the entrance from the river into the streets, left open, through the carelessness and intoxication of the besieged; they met, and marched into the heart of the city without opposition, and surprised the palace before the alarm was given. So that, having broken in, and slain Belshazzar, and proclaimed peace and safety to all who laid down their arms; a general submission followed, the city was taken, and the empire reduced, almost without further bloodshed. (Marg. Ref. g. Notes, 1-4. Is. 13:2-5. 45:1-6. Jer. 51:38-40, 61-64.)—Cyrus was son-in-law and nephew to Darius, or Cyaxares the Mede; to whom the title of king and the civil authority belonged till his death, which happened about two years after; but Cyrus still retained the command of the army, and great power over the whole empire.—It is computed, that Darius was born that very year in which Jeconiah was carried captive to Babylon, and a fatal blow given to the kingdom of Judah. (Note, Ezra 1:1-4.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-9. Carnal men are often most secure, and given up to excessive indulgence, when destruction impends over their heads. Ostentation and studied magnificence unite with sensuality, in stupefying their consciences and hardening their hearts; and if we could see how soon such joyous and luxurious revels are changed for "weeping, wailing, and gnashing of teeth," we must view those who frequent them, with a mixture of pity and aversion; as we should a company of condemned malefactors, whom we saw intoxicated, and dancing in their chains, immediately before the hour appointed for their execution. Such intemperate carousals were indeed consistent in the worshippers of lifeless images and of unclean spirits: for it might be expected, that these objects and ordinances of religious worship would lead men to impious and blasphemous defiance of the God of heaven; as well as into every excess in sensual gratification. But what have Christians to do with such "revellings, banquetings, and abominable idolatries?" And what better are the songs used in many modern feasts, extolling intemperate indulgences and licentious amours, than the praises formerly sung to Bacchus, and Venus, or any other of the filthy group of Pagan deities? Or what are these things but a direct insult on that true God, in whose name we have been baptized? Yet many "think it strange, that we will not run with them to the same excess of riot, speaking evil of us!" (Note, 1 Pet. 4:3-5.) Nay, some apparently think, that no pleasures have their highest relish, unless seasoned with impiety or sacrilege: and they not only sin for the gratification of their sensual passions, but for the sake of sinning; as if their oaths, blasphemies, and profaneness were pleasant to them, in proportion as they are provoking to God! and the greater the number who join together in these outrages, the bolder they grow in them. But how easily can the Lord dismay such daring transgressors! He has no need to commission thunders, lightnings, or earthquakes: he can do it effectually by a handwriting on a wall, or by showing them what he has written in his holy word. One glimpse of his glorious and holy majesty, one realizing apprehension of "his wrath revealed from heaven against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men," is sufficient to appal the heart, to change the countenance, and to agitate the whole frame, of the stoutest rebel on earth. But no bodily pain or anguish can give an adequate conception of that inward agony, which sometimes seizes the sinner, in the midst of mirth and jovial company, when enjoying all the delights of sense, with all the magnificence of a palace, or the exhilarations of a banqueting-house. For if God be pleased merely to let a man's conscience loose upon him, his own "thoughts will so trouble him," that his feelings will be an anticipation of the sorrows of death and of the pains of hell. How important then is it, that we, above all things, seek to be at peace with him, and with our own consciences!—Sometimes, indeed, such terrors are salutary, and cause a man to cry out, "What must I do to be saved?" and so lead him to Christ for pardon and peace. But many cry out, through horror of conscience and fear of wrath, who are not humbled for their sins, and who seek relief from anguish by lying vanities. These will liberally reward such as can help them to forget their misery, or amuse them with vain hopes, or gratify their curiosity, or pride, or sensuality.—But when the Lord lays his hand on men, these expedients do not afford so much as a temporary relief: and he often blinds and infatuates the wise men of this world, that he may bring into notice those whom he has endued with heavenly wisdom; nor can all human sagacity develop the plainest matter, which he is pleased to conceal. Yet the ignorance and uncertainty, which professedly wise men manifest concerning the meaning of the sacred Scriptures, are suited to drive awakened sinners to despair; as if no satisfactory answer could be given to the infinitely important question, "What must I do to be saved?"

V. 10-17. In this evil world, the most excellent and useful persons are often left in obscurity, like diamonds in the rubbish of the quarry, because their value is not perceived: yet, if the Lord have work for them, he will, by one means or other, bring them forth to do it.—The encouragement given, by persons in other respects of great abilities, to alarmed sinners, not to "let their thoughts trouble them," often goes upon as erroneous principles, as those on which the queen comforted Belshazzar. Alas! what did it avail him, that Daniel could read the writing, when that writing contained his irrevocable condemnation? And what else can the holy law do for transgressors, when men are taught to seek righteousness and salvation by their own obedience?—Many have heard of the light, understanding, and wisdom, of some eminent servant of God, and have been led to extol them; to ascribe his attainments to a divine influence, and to consider him, as of a more excellent spirit than other men; who yet wish to consult him, only as a superior kind of magician, to interpret their dreams, to solve curious questions, and to explain difficult and controverted subjects, without inquiring after the way of salvation, or the path of duty! But if any one has, even by such means, access to the great and powerful, when under tribulations or convictions, at whatever distance he may be kept, or however they may sooth him by promises or flatteries; he must remember his own character and office, and not be content with gratifying the humour of princes or nobles, or his own love of lucre or honour. In some cases it is right to reject their proffered kindness with decision, or even disdain; at all times to show an indifference about these matters, and to be far more earnest to do them good, and declare the whole counsel of God.

V. 18-31. When sinners have long neglected to profit by the judgments of God on others, their own aggravated destruction may be supposed to approach. Their ancestors or neighbours have prospered and forgotten their Maker, they have been intoxicated with exaltation, and have abused it in tyranny and oppression; they have become terrible in proportion as they have been powerful; and they have been hardened in proud contempt of God; instead of being rendered thankful to him. Perhaps he has made examples of them in the view of others, by some signal judgments, till they have learned to submit and to adore: yet the persons, who have known all this, have in similar circumstances imitated and exceeded their pride, tyranny, and impieties, regardless of that God, ^kin whom they live, and move, and are.^l Thus men fill up the measure of their iniquity, and bring upon themselves "the judgment that is written." Whatever be their rank or situation, persons of this description cannot reasonably expect to hear any thing, except severe rebukes and awful denunciations, from the servants of God.—Soon will every impenitent sinner find the handwriting of God's word, that now stands out against him, executed upon him; whether he be weighed in the balance of the law as a self-righteous Pharisee, or in that of the gospel as a painted hypocrite. His days will soon be numbered and finished; he will be judged and condemned, and all he seems to have will be taken from him, and divided among his enemies or successors; whilst nothing will remain for himself, but "indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish," for evermore.—Ere the uncertain term of life then be finished, let us judge ourselves, according to the word of God: let us weigh our characters in his impartial balances: that, though the law condemns us as sinners, yet we may not be adjudged unbelievers by the gospel, but may obtain a share of those blessings, which will be perfected in a kingdom that cannot be moved, or taken from us. Having these good things, we may despise the honour that comes from man; and we shall rejoice and be exalted, whilst sudden and inevitable destruction overtakes all the workers of iniquity.

CHAPTER VI.

Daniel is highly preferred by Darius, and envied by his courtiers, who can find no occasion against him except concerning his religion, 1-5. Darius is prevailed on, to sign a decree, prohibiting every one, during thirty days, to present any petition to either God or man, except to the king; under pain of being cast into the den of lions, 6-9. Daniel prays three times a day to God as usual; is accused before Darius; the execution of the sentence is urgently demanded, and Daniel is cast into the den of lions, 10-17. The king shows much grief; but Daniel is miraculously preserved; and his accusers are devoured by the lions, 18-24. Darius commands all his subjects to fear before the almighty God, whom Daniel serves, 25-27. Daniel's subsequent prosperity, 28.

NOTES.—CHAP. VI. V. 1. 'These' (hundred and twenty provinces) 'were afterwards enlarged to a hundred and twenty-seven by the victories of Cambyzes and Darius Hystaspis. (Esth. 1:1.)' Louth.

V. 2. 'Darius came not to Babylon, but tarried at Ecbatane in Media, whither he sent for Daniel, that he might be always near him.' Louth. The words translated "that the king should have no damage," may be rendered "that the king should not be troubled." (Marg. Ref.)

V. 3. It must be supposed, that Daniel's interpretation of the handwriting, just before the taking of Babylon, made him known to Darius. His renown, however, for wisdom and integrity was very great, and he was found upon trial to deserve all the reputation, which he had acquired: (Note, Ez. 28:2-5, v. 3.) so that Darius, when he made a new arrangement of his dominions, upon this vast accession of territory, under three presidents, thought good to make Daniel the chief of them, and as it were the viceroy of the whole empire. 'He had great experience in the public affairs, it being now sixty-five years since he was first advanced by Nebuchadnezzar. (2:48.)' Louth. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Gen. 41:38-44.)

V. 4, 5. The great reputation and preferment of a stranger, who had also been a minister of state for many years under the kings of Babylon, could not but give great umbrage to Darius's own subjects. The nobles of his court, especially the princes and presidents, would envy his prosperity, disdain subjection to him, and covet his high station; as well as hate him for his religion: and probably his circumspection, integrity, experience, and penetration, would preclude many of the courtiers from those fraudulent advantages which they had expected; and would tend to expose their iniquitous practices. Thus various passions would concur in producing a combination against him. But such was his unexceptionable conduct, such his unbiased impartiality, his strict inte-fault, forasmuch as he was faithful, neither was there any error or fault found in him.

5 Then said these men, 'We shall not find any occasion against this Daniel, except we find it against him concerning the law of his God.'

6 Then these presidents and princes 'assembled together to the king, and said thus unto him, 'King Darius, live for ever.

7 'All the presidents of the kingdom, the governors, and the princes, the counsellors, and the captains, 'have consulted together to establish a royal statute, and to make a firm decree, that whosoever shall ask a petition of any God or man for thirty days, save of thee, O king, 'he shall be cast into the den of lions.

8 Now, O king, 'establish the decree, and sign the writing, that it be not changed, 'according to the law of the Medes and Persians, which 'altereth not.

9 Wherefore king Darius 'signed the writing and the decree. [Practical Observations.]

grity, and consummate prudence, that they could find no hard-against him, or discover so much as a fault or mistake, ⁿwhich to accuse him before the king. And they were constrained to confess to each other, in their secret cabals, that they should never be able to substantiate any accusation against him, except they could render his religion criminal: and in this they knew him to be very exact, and one who would not deviate from his plan, for any interest, or to avoid any danger. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Ps. 37:32, 33 Matt. 22:15-22.)

V. 6-9. We can scarcely imagine a more absurd decree, than this proposed to Darius, to be by him rendered irreversible! At first sight, it appears almost inconceivable that any man could be induced, by influence and persuasion, and without the shadow of an argument, to pass such an edict. But power and prosperity are intoxicating: this decree seemed to make the king, for a month, the sole deity and benefactor in his empire; and thus it addressed itself to his pride and vainglory. His nobles would doubtless avow, that it was thought a proper honour to be conferred on so illustrious a prince, and that it would conduce to the public tranquillity. At the instance therefore of so many chief men, perhaps merely deeming it a sort of compliment, and having but faint impressions of a Supreme Being, to whom all men have constant need to present their petitions, he heedlessly signed the decree without suspecting the malice concealed under it.—They stated expressly, that all the presidents were consulted, and had concurred in proposing this counsel to him: but Daniel the chief of them knew nothing of it; and so all signified no more than two of them! Probably, the rest of the persons mentioned had yielded assent to it, some heedlessly, others maliciously.—Thus, not only was all the exercise of every kind of religion suspended by law, through this extensive empire, for the space of a month; (except any chose to worship the king, who thus inconsiderately or impiously suffered himself to be regarded as the sole deity of his subjects;) but no request might be made by one man to another: nay, the edict was so worded, that a child might have been condemned by it for asking bread of his father, or a starving beggar for craving relief. But they who framed the law had one object in view, and did not mean to make any further use of it.—We have consulted, which way we may do thee most honour, and most ingratiate thee with thy subjects, now at thy first entrance on thy throne; and we have found no way more . . . plausible than this; . . . we have decreed that none of thy subjects shall, for the space of thirty days make any petition, to any god or man, save to thee, O king; that by this means, they may be . . . injured to an awful and divine conceit of thy greatness, and be more encouraged to have access to thee, for the more endearing of thee to them by the granting of their suits.' *Bp. V. 10, 11. Either Daniel was absent from court when this business was transacted, or it was studiously concealed from him; for it does not appear that he heard of it, till it had been signed by the king and made public. And when he knew what had been done; he did not complain to Darius of hard usage, or exclaim against the absurdity, impiety, and iniquity of the edict, or make interest to have it repealed, or dows being open in his chamber towards Jerusalem, 'he kneeled upon his knees 'three times a day, and prayed, and 'gave thanks before his God, 'as he did aforetime.

11 Then these men 'assembled, and found Daniel praying and making supplication before his God.

12 Then 'they came near, and spake before the king concerning the king's decree, Hast thou not signed a decree; that every man that shall ask a petition of any God or man within thirty days, save of thee, O king, shall be cast into the den of lions? The king answered and said, 'The thing is true, according to the law of the Medes and Persians, which altereth not.

13 Then answered they and said before the king, 'That Daniel, which is of the children of the captivity of Judah, 'regardeth not thee, O king, nor the decree that thou hast signed, but maketh his petition three times a day.

14 Then the king, when he heard these words, 'was sore displeased with himself, and set his heart on Daniel to deliver him: 'and he laboured till the going down of the sun to deliver him.

15 Then these men 'assembled unto the king, and said unto the king, 'Know, O king, that the law of the Medes and Persians is, That no decree nor statute which the king establisheth may be changed.

16 Then 'the king commanded, and they brought Daniel, and cast him into the den of lions. Now the king spake and said unto Daniel, 'Thy God whom thou servest continually, he will deliver thee.

17 And 'a stone was brought, and laid upon the mouth of the den; and the king sealed it with his own signet, and with the signet of his lords; that the purpose might not be changed concerning Daniel.

[Practical Observations.]

18 ¶ Then the king went to his palace, and passed the night fasting; neither were 'instruments of music brought before him: 'and his sleep went from him.

19 Then the king 'arose very early in the morning, and went in haste unto the den of lions.

20 And when he came to the den, he cried with a lamentable voice unto Daniel: and the king spake and said to Daniel, O Daniel, servant of the living God, 'is thy God whom thou 'servest continually, 'able to deliver thee from the lions?

request a dispensation in his favour. He perfectly knew that he was aimed at, and his people through him: and therefore as a public and eminent person, he determined to set a decided example of his religion, without fearing what man could do to him. (Note, Neh. 6:10-14, v. 11.) He thought himself called on to protest against the law in this manner, either disregarding his life in so good a cause, or expecting a miraculous deliverance. He therefore continued his stated devotions in his chamber, morning, noon, and evening, with his windows open, and probably his door also; for his accusers entered without interruption, and found him presenting his supplications to his God. Though the city and temple were desolated, yet he prayed towards Jerusalem, as it was customary, with reference to the temple, which had been a type of Christ; (Notes, 1 Kings 8:28-30, Jon. 2:3, 4.) and though he was very old he prayed upon his knees. Whatever he had done at other times, or whatever other Jews might do in this emergency, he would by no means conceal his religion; and though he was a man of much business, it appears that he had three stated seasons of devotion every day.—It is generally supposed, that in this, he had reference to the hours of prayer, which were commonly observed by the Jews.—He would not by silence show, that he consented to this wicked decree. He set open his windows toward Jerusalem when he prayed; both to stir up himself with the remembrance of God's promises to his people, when they should pray toward that temple; and also that others might see, that he would neither consent in heart nor deed, for these few days, to any thing that was contrary to God's glory. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Ps. 55:16, 17, 95:6. Acts 10:9-16, v. 9, 21:1-6, v. 5.)

V. 12-17. Whe Daniel's enemies had obtained the decree against him, and undeniable evidence of his disobedience to it, they seemed still to have doubted of success: being aware how much the king valued so able and upright a servant, and how evidently he would perceive their malice in this machination against him. They therefore first reminded him that he had passed such a decree; seeking to draw from him an acknowledgment that it was irreversible by the law of the Medes and Persians. Having succeeded in this, they copied the example of those who accused Shadrach and his friends before Nebuchadnezzar: and instead of mentioning Daniel, as a man of great dignity, wisdom and excellency: they described him contemptuously, as "that Daniel," the captive Jew, who had been favoured and preferred. They accused him of disregarding the king and his decree; as if his worship of God had resulted from pride, ingratitude, and rebellion against Darius; and they reported that he made his petition three times a day, so that his offences were multiplied: but they did not mention the Object of his worship, perhaps lest that should suggest a vindication of his conduct. (Marg. Ref. z-c. Notes, 3:8-12, Acts 16:19-24, v. 20, 21, 17:5-9, v. 7.) The king, however, at once perceived, for what purpose the decree had been solicited; and was exceedingly displeased with himself that he had suffered himself to be so deluded: as under pretence of honouring him above all that was called god, or worshipped, they had devised to render him accessory to the murder of the most eminent and excellent person in his dominions. Under this conviction, he was very earnest to deliver Daniel: and he spent the day in considering how it might be done, and in trying to effect it; either by evading or dispensing with the edict, or in persuading his nobles not to insist on the execution of it. (Marg. Ref. d, e.) But the foolish constitution of this government, (exactly the reverse of the happy rule for our monarch's conduct,) allowed indeed their kings to be as tyrannical as d mischievous as they pleased; but tied them up from pardoning any person who had broken one of their decrees, however capricious and arbitrary. They might be cruel and unjust; but in many cases they might not be merciful, and in some they were restrained from doing justice! (See on Note, 6-9, Note, Ps. 94:20, 21.) Thus the ringleaders of this faction turbulently assembled before Darius, and demanded the execution of this most iniquitous sentence, as their constitutional right: so that Daniel was at length given up to their implacable rage. In this Darius was greatly to blame: for he should have refused his consent to so palpable an act of injustice, whatever had been the consequence. He however entertained some expectations, that the God whom Daniel had so long and devotedly worshipped, would rescue him in this emergency; having probably heard of the preservation of the three pious Jews in the fiery furnace. (Notes, 3:19-23.) Thus he allowed that Daniel had done right, and had pleased God in violating his decree; and in that very action, for which he consented to cast him into the den of lions: as Pilate afterwards justified Christ, when he delivered him to be crucified. (Marg. Ref. g, h. Notes, Matt. 27:19-26.) Daniel was therefore thrown into the den of lions; and it might have been expected, that they would devour him at once. Yet, either it was seen, that the lions did not seize on him; or some expectation of a miraculous interposition induced them to close the den with a stone, sealed with the king's own signet and that of his lords: that there might be full security against all collusion, and that he might be confined all night among the lions. (Marg. Ref. i. Note, Matt. 27:62-66.)

V. 18-23. No doubt Daniel spent a far more pleasant night among the lions, whilst employed in fervent prayer and admiring grateful praise, than either his malicious prosecutors, or the king himself did. As for the latter, he was so grieved, and ashamed of his folly; so affected with the consideration of having cast his faithful servant into the den of lions, and so anxious about the event; that he spent the night fasting, and without any of his ordinary recreations nor could he close his eyes to sleep. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. j, k. Notes, 2 Sam. 3:31-35, Esth. 6:1, 2, Ps. 77:4.) And as soon as the morning allowed him, he repaired to the den, having yet some hope that Daniel had been miraculously preserved.—The decree having been now complied with, we may suppose, that he ordered the stone to be removed; and then, through fear and conscious misconduct, he dolefully ventured to speak to Daniel, as if yet alive; inquiring whether "the living God, whom he served continually" had shown himself able to deliver him. (Marg. Ref. l-o.) Some indeed think that he saw Daniel before he spake, but the contrary seems more probable: and his expectation of a miracle shows, that he had strong convictions of the power of Israel's God; though w^holly motives retained him among 23 Then was the king exceeding glad for him, and commanded that they should take Daniel up out of the den. So Daniel was taken up out of the den, and no manner of hurt was found upon him, because he believed in his God.

24 And the king commanded, and they brought those men which had accused Daniel, and they cast them into the den of lions, them, their children, and their wives; and the lions had the mastery of them, and brake all their

the worshippers of idols. (Notes, Acts 26:24—32.)—To this inquiry, Daniel, being safe and easy both in body and mind, answered with the utmost composure, without any complaint of unkindness, but with a respectful expression of good-will. (21.) Not only was the God of Israel able to protect him from the lions; but even a single angel, when commissioned by him, had power effectually to shut all their mouths. In this manner God had seen good to attest his innocency, in that conduct for which he had been condemned, seeing that he had approved himself upright before his heart-searching Judge; and he could appeal to the king also, that he had done him no wrong; having been actuated by a sense of duty, and not by any contempt of him or his laws. (Marg. Ref. p-u. Notes, 2 Sam. 22:21—28. Ps. 91:11—13. Acts 25:9—11. 27:20—26, v. 24, 25. Heb. 11:32—34, v. 33.) This answer was very welcome to Darius, who now ordered Daniel to be taken up out of the den: and he was found entirely unhurt; "because he had believed in his God," and trusted in his protection while he obeyed his commandments. (Marg. Ref. u, x. 1 Chr. 5:18—22, v. 20.)

V. 24. The law of the Medes and Persians forbade the king to pardon Daniel; but it did not restrain him from casting his accusers into the lion's den in his stead: nay, perhaps malicious prosecutors and false accusers were legally exposed to the same sentence, which they sought to bring upon the innocent; for this has been a salutary provision in many nations. (Note, Deut. 19:15—21.) The ringleaders, however, of the conspiracy were cast into the den: for we cannot suppose that all the great men before mentioned were thus condemned, (7) nor indeed could the lions have devoured so great a number at one time. If Darius had thus punished the criminals alone, and had not cast their wives and children with them into the den, the sentence would have been unexceptionable: but that which he actually pronounced was both unjust and cruel. Yet, by this measure, the reality and greatness of the miracle wrought in Daniel's deliverance were evidenced: for the lions soon mastered and destroyed them all; by which it appeared, that they were exceedingly fierce and ravenous, and only restrained by a supernatural power; which being removed, they became through hunger the more voracious. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Esth. 2:2—4. 7:10. 8:8, 11—13.)

V. 25—28. After this, Darius, perhaps by Daniel's counsel, and in imitation of Nebuchadnezzar's example, published an account of these facts to all his subjects in their several languages; and decreed, that they should all "tremble and fear before the God of Daniel." He spake, in this address, very honourably of the Lord, as "the living God," of the immutable steadfastness of his purposes, laws, and authority; and of his power to work miracles, and to deliver his servants; and he required his people to do him honour. But it does not appear, that he renounced idolatry, to become the worshipper of JEHOVAH: and his language is not comparable to that of Nebuchadnezzar, after his restoration to his reason and his throne; especially it wants that savour of humiliation and self-abasement, which appears in the other. (Marg. Ref. b-k. Notes, 2:46—49. 4:1—3, 34—37.)—These events, this authoritatively made known through so many nations, must have exceedingly tended to prepare the way for the diffusion of further light, by the Jews who went to sojourn in different countries, and at length by the preaching of the Gospel.—After this, Daniel continued in authority and prosperity under Darius, and his successor Cyrus who reigned seven years. Daniel was living in the third year of Cyrus; but probably he died not long after. (Marg. Ref. l. 10:1.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—9. Piety, wisdom, and integrity are profitable to a man in all possible circumstances; and often induce others to favour such as possess them, merely from regard to their own interests.—In large kingdoms numbers must be employed in managing public affairs; but alas! how seldom are many bones in pieces, or ever they came a: the bottom of the den.

25 ¶ Then 'king Darius wrote unto all people, nations, and languages, that dwell in all the earth; Peace be multiplied unto you.

26 I make a decree, That in every dominion of my kingdom men tremble and fear before the God of Daniel: for he is the living God, and steadfast for ever, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed, and his dominion shall be even unto the end.

27 He delivereth and rescueth, and he worketh signs and wonders, in heaven and in earth, who hath delivered Daniel from the power of the lions.

28 So this Daniel prospered in the reign of Darius, and in the reign of Cyrus the Persian.

of them decidedly of "an excellent spirit!" And how seldom do kings prefer men entirely on that account! Yet nothing else can fully prevent damage to both prince and people.—In some cases, men may continue in favour and power, notwithstanding repeated and entire revolutions; not by a criminal fickleness, but through an immovable adherence to integrity and prudence, and a readiness by every lawful means to do good to mankind.—Extraordinary honour, wisdom, or exaltation always excite envy and enmity; but especially where one man's inflexible honesty disappoints or detects the iniquity and avarice of numbers. Those who are thus exposed to the view, malice, and severe scrutiny of multitudes, who are their competitors and enemies, need to act with great circumspection and wisdom; that no fault or error, no evil "or appearance of evil," may be found in them: and it is very honourable to God and religion, when the most enraged and pertinacious opponents can find no fault with any part of the conduct of an eminent believer, except they can convert his piety and steadfastness in the faith into an accusation against him. He who enabled Daniel thus to "walk in wisdom towards them that were without," in his difficult situation, and thus wrought more powerfully than when he protected him in the den of lions, is equally able to give us wisdom and "grace sufficient for us," that we may copy his example, and "by well-doing put to shame" and silence, "those that falsely accuse our good conversation in Christ." Yet this conduct of believers often drives their enemies to open persecution, as their only weapon.—How commonly are powerful princes surrounded by designing men, whose flatteries are the covering of their malice and selfishness! and how do pride and vainglory lay men open to be imposed on by the grossest artifices! They, who affect to be honoured as gods, are proved to want the understanding of men: and the palpable absurdities, which have been sanctioned by the authority of renowned monarchs, and by the approbation of senates and councils, appear like a libel on human nature, as if intended to expose the folly and impiety of our fallen race.—It is well that no human laws can deprive us of the privilege of asking petitions of the God of heaven: for except he continually uphold, protect, and supply us with all things needful for soul and body, we must sink into extreme misery. Were the Lord as regardless of men, as they are of him, and did he withhold his communications as long as they do their petitions and thanksgivings, they would speedily be left without comfort or hope. Yet how little is this considered! Indeed it is to be feared, that those who (without any prohibitory decree) present no hearty and serious prayers to God, for more than thirty days together, are far more numerous, than they who serve him continually, and worship him with bended knees, and humble, thankful hearts, praying and giving thanks to him three times a day. No wonder then that laws have been more frequently made to restrain, than to encourage, serious piety: for alas! a very great majority hitherto, even of legislators, have been strangers to the truth and will of God; and numbers have hated them for interfering with their worldly pursuits and pleasures.

V. 10—17. Persecuting and sanguinary laws are always enacted on false pretences, and are replete with absurdity, impiety, and injustice: but it does not beehove Christians to make bitter complaints, or use sarcastical revilings. We should quietly obey God rather than man, and commit the keeping of our lives and souls to him in well doing; and, instead of intermitting the exercise of our religion to escape the cross, we should count ourselves called on to make a more open profession of it: for that conduct, which in ordinary cases might appear ostentatious, becomes in other circumstances a proper protest against prevailing impiety, and an edifying example to our brethren. (Note, Matt. 6:1—4.) Such Christians and ministers especially as are of eminent reputation, should deem themselves, on these emergencies, called on to stand forth in the most intrepid and decided man-

CHAPTER VII.

Daniel has a vision of four great beasts arising out of the sea; the fourth having ten horns; among which a little horn comes up, 1-8; and of the Messiah's kingdom, 9-14. An angel interprets the vision, of four kingdoms which would succeed each other; and shows the nature of the fourth kingdom, with the mischiefs done by the little horn, and the destruction of that kingdom, to make way for the kingdom of God, 15-28.

IN the first year of Belshazzar king of Babylon, Daniel had a dream and visions of his head upon his bed: then he wrote the dream, and told the sum of the matters.

2 Daniel spake and said, I saw in my vision by night, and behold, the four winds of the heaven strove upon the great sea.

ner; and to risk all consequences, by a conduct which may not be required of more obscure persons. But the most eminent servants of God will see cause to prostrate themselves before him, with every expression of the most profound reverence, humility, and self-abasement; and the most entire reliance on his mercy through the mediation of Christ.—Those who fill the most exalted stations, and are most extensively useful, must not only find time for communion with God, but should abound in it more than others; having more to pray and to return thanks for: and with advancing years, men ought to grow more fervent and constant in their devotions; that the consolations of God may make up the loss of other comforts, or the want of relish for them; and that they may constantly be in a proper frame of mind for joining the worship of “the saints in light.” But in this evil world, that conduct which most accords to the will of God, will often be turned into matter of accusation against us. It is, however, far “better to suffer for well-doing than for evil-doing.” for though pious persons cannot place much confidence in the protection even of those princes whom they have most faithfully served, and who are most convinced of their wisdom and uprightness; yet they may in all cases be assured of the divine favour and consolation. Various personal and political interests may render kings irresolute in defending their best friends against the assaults of their enemies. They may inconsiderately give the occasion of injuring them; and how-ever displeased with themselves, or earnest in labouring to extricate them from danger; they may with sorrow find, that they cannot do it, without hazarding such consequences, or making such sacrifices as they dare not venture on. Thus fear of man, iniquitous laws, foolish and rash measures, and malignant accusers, may concur in extorting the sentence of condemnation against those who deserve all possible honour and reward. But that God, whom believers serve continually, is able to deliver them out of every danger and temptation; and to defeat all the purposes of their persecutors to destroy them; and it is far better to “trust in him than to put any confidence in princes.” (Note, Ps. 118:9.)

V. 18-28. The most powerful man on earth may pity, where he cannot deliver, and mourn over those oppressions which he cannot redress; (Note, Ec. 3:16, 17,) and be constrained or seduced into those measures which fill his heart with anguish, and his conscience with remorse, and mar all his enjoyments. So vain is all earthly greatness! and so unavailing all the materials of earthly satisfaction!—But the persecuted believer may be happy in the most dreary dungeon, or the most perilous situation; as nothing can exclude him from “the throne of grace,” or from that “peace of God which passeth all understanding.” “Through faith even the mouths of lions may be stopped.” if temporal safety be good for us, we shall be preserved in the very jaws of destruction: hungry lions shall be harmless as lambs, and their presence shall only serve to increase our admiration of the Lord’s power, and our gratitude for his goodness: nay, even Satan, that “roaring lion, who goeth about seeking whom he may devour,” shall be so restrained, that he shall not be able to harm us, or even to frighten us, while we rest on the promises of our God, and attend to his commandments. We should then “exercise ourselves to have a conscience void of offence towards God and man,” that we may rejoice in its testimony in difficult circumstances; and we should be ready to answer with meekness and kindness, even those who have injured us, especially if they are sensible of their fault. (Notes, 2 Cor. 1:12-14. 1 Pet. 3:13-16.) However our temporal trials may end, we shall come forth of them all: and no hurt will be found on those who have believed in God, and kept his way. But whilst their troubles terminate in their greater honour, comfort, and felicity; the shortlived “trimming of the wicked” will end in their unpitied and irreversible ruin; in which their relatives are often involved along with them. Thus “the Lord taketh the wise in their own craftiness;” and their devices against him give him an occasion of making known his own eternal power and Godhead among the nations, and of bringing such as were far off to adore and tremble before him. He is the living and unchangeable God, who alone “is steadfast for ever,” his decrees, purposes, and laws are, and ought to be established, — nat none can change them: “His is the kingdom, the power, and the glory for ever:” and “he delivereth and rescueth, and worketh signs and wonders in heaven and earth.” These things are sometimes made evident, even to such as are not influenced to worship and serve him: and many are employed as his instruments in making known his perfections and wonderful works to others, who themselves remain strangers to his saving grace. May we then be believers and doers of the word; and not merely hear, preach, or write about it, lest we should be found at last to have “deceived our selves.”

NOTES.—CHAP. VII. V. 1. The preceding chapter concludes the historical records which Daniel was directed to transmit to posterity: in this he begins to relate his own prophetic visions. In the first year of Belshazzar’s reign, or seventeen years before the events just recorded, a visionary representation was made to his mind in a dream, which he committed to writing, and communicated to his people. It contains for substance the same prophetic intimations with Nebuchadnezzar’s dream, (Notes, 2:31-45.) but under different allusions, and with many additional circumstances. (Marg. and Marg. Ref.)

V. 2, 3. The great sea, agitated by the four winds, represented the earth and its inhabitants, as thrown into perpetual convulsions by ambitious princes and mighty conquerors, and the confusion and wild uproar excited by their furious contests for victory and dominion. The “four beasts” signified the same, with the four constituent parts of Nebuchadnezzar’s visionary image. To his carnal mind mighty conquerors and extensive flourishing empires would have a show of glory, which was represented by a splendid and immense image: to the spiritual mind of Daniel, they would appear terrible, odious, and destructive, which was more aptly denoted by devouring beasts. (Notes, 2:31-35.)—They arose out of the sea, not all at once, but one after another: which signified that these kingdoms would subvert and succeed each other, as well as acquire dominion over other nations. They were also “diverse one from another,” and like the image whose head was of gold, the first was the more noble, the last more terrible.—The prophetic dream of Nebuchadnezzar, and the vision of the four beasts, equally predict, that, from the era of the Babylonian monarchy to the commencement of the millennium, there should be four, and no more than four empires: universal so far as the church is concerned. Faber. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Rev. 7:1-3, v. 1. 13:1.)

V. 4. The Chaldean empire, as advanced to its summit of prosperity under Nebuchadnezzar, and as declining under Belshazzar, was intended by this beast. The “lion” was an emblem of Nebuchadnezzar’s courage and success in acquiring dominion over his neighbours; and perhaps of the superior generosity and magnanimity with which he ruled over the nations. The “eagle’s wings” denoted the rapidity and unabated vigour with which he prosecuted his victories. But while the prophet contemplated this, he observed, “that the wings thereof were plucked.”—After the death of Nebuchadnezzar, the Chaldeans made no more conquests: several of the subjected nations revolted; the Medes and Persians soon began to straiten them; till at length Babylon was besieged and taken: and in this manner that monarchy was terminated. No longer did this beast appear rapid in conquest, as an eagle, or courageous and terrible as a lion: but it was changed, as it were, into a human creature; it “stood on its feet as a man, and had a man’s heart given to it.” After Nebuchadnezzar’s death, the kings of Babylon became less terrible to their foes and subjects, and more cautious, and even timid: till at length Belshazzar shut himself up in Babylon, not daring to face Cyrus as “a man” would not venture to face a raging bear, which “a lion” would despise. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Jer. 51:30-33.)

V. 5. Whilst Daniel beheld how the first beast was weakened, he saw another beast come up out of the sea, to subvert and supplant him. This represented the kingdom of the Medes and Persians. Its emblem was “a bear,” less noble and courageous, but more voracious and savage than a lion. (Note, Hos. 13:5-8.) This beast “raised up itself on one side,” for the Medes and Persians extended their conquests almost wholly to the west of their own countries: or, “it raised up one dominion,” (Marg.) that is, the Medes and 6 After this I beheld, and lo another like a leopard, which had upon the back of it, four wings of a fowl; the beast had also four heads; and dominion was given to it.

7 After this I saw in the night-visions, and behold a fourth beast, dreadful and terrible, and strong exceedingly: and it had great iron teeth:

p 2:39, 8:5-7, 20:21, 10:20, 11:3, &c. Hos. 13:7, Rev. 13:2, q 4, Ez. 17:3, r 8:22, 11:4, &c. s See on 2:13, t See on 19:23, 2:40, 8:10, u Sam. 22:43.

Persians united to form one kingdom; or the Persians who were the inferior people, acquired the chief dominion. It had also "three ribs . . . between its teeth:" this is interpreted of the three kingdoms of Babylon, Lydia, and Egypt, which the Persians conquered, and grievously oppressed; thus taking the prey, as it were, out of the mouth of the Chaldeans. And there were those standing by who called on the beast to "arise and devour much flesh;" this may be explained of the providential dispensations which excited the Medes and Persians to attempt extensive conquests; and of the cruelty of the Persian kings, which hardly ever was exceeded or equalled: but may it not also denote their attempts to subdue the Thracians, Macedonians, Greeks, and other European nations, which at length occasioned the ruin of their monarchy? Their success made them still more greedy of dominion.^u Louth. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 2:39, 8:3, 4.)

V. 6. This bear having disappeared, the prophet saw an extraordinary "leopard" rise up in its stead. This was the emblem of the Grecian or Macedonian empire, which for the time was the most renowned in the world. It was erected by Alexander the Great, on the ruins of the Persian monarchy, and it was continued in four divisions under his successors. The leopard being exceedingly fierce and swift, represented that kingdom, and especially Alexander its founder. But the swiftness of a quadruped was not an adequate emblem of the rapidity with which he made his conquests; as he subdued nations more speedily than others could march their armies through them. The leopard had therefore four wings of a fowl upon his back.—When Alexander died, his kingdom was, after many severe and long-continued contests among his captains, divided into four parts, Egypt, Syria, Macedonia, and Thrace with some regions of Asia Minor. These were the "four heads" of this third beast; and under them dominion was given to it, till it was gradually reduced by the Romans.—"By the swiftness of Alexander's progress, and the victories which he obtained by small forces, it appeared that Providence gave him the empire of the world."^v Louth. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 2:39, 8:5-8, 11:2-4, Rev. 13:2-4, v. 2.)

V. 7. Some expositors have explained this fourth beast of the successors of Alexander, and have endeavoured to make out that Antiochus Epiphanes was the "little horn." But were any of Alexander's successors, or even all of them together, more powerful and dreadful than he had been? Were their conquests more extensive and destructive than his? For it is most evident that those of this fourth beast were. The "ten horns" were "kings," or kingdoms, (according to the language of prophecy,) all existing at once, and not individual princes rising in succession. "The little horn" was not one of the ten, but arose among and after them; and this beast in one form or other was to subsist, till the establishment of the kingdom of Christ, nay, to the universal success of his religion; as it is afterwards predicted. These reasons have induced almost all modern protestant expositors, to look elsewhere for this "fourth beast;" and the emblems are so apposite, that there can be little danger of mistake, or reason for hesitation, as to the grand outlines. This "fourth beast" evidently accords with the legs and feet of iron, which were seen by Nebuchadnezzar in his visionary image, and which were at length divided into ten toes. It far exceeded, in power, fierceness, and destructive rage, all that had gone before it, as well as in the extent and long duration of its dominions: and no animal could be found so terrible and furious as to lend it a suitable name. This was doubtless an emblem of the Roman state, the invincible fortitude, hardness, and force of which perhaps were never equalled. By wars and conquests, the Romans bore down all opposition, and reduced almost every kingdom or state in the known world, into some kind or degree of dependence; drew all the spoil and wealth of many conquered nations to enrich their proud capital; and tyrannised over all that did not quietly yield obedience to their authority. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 19-27, 2:40-43.)—"That which the Romans could not quietly enjoy in other countries, they would give to other kings and rulers; that at all times when they would they might take it again: which liberality is here called 'the stamping of the rest under their feet.'"

—This fourth empire was governed in another manner, and by other maxims, than any of the preceding; and in process of time, it was divided into ten kingdoms. These are indeed reckoned up in several ways by different writers; according to the date assigned to the enumeration: but in general it is clear, that the principal kingdoms in Europe at this day, sprang from them, and comprise them; excepting some of the more northern regions, and those possessed by the Turks.—The various ways, in which these ten kingdoms have been enumerated, as the catalogue has been formed for different periods, is indeed an interesting subject to a student of history, and of prophecy but the full discussion of such a learned subject by no means suits this publication. Mr. Faber's remarks on this point are well worthy the accurate student's attention, and his conclusion from it seems well grounded. "The historian Machiavel, . . . little thinking what he was doing, reckons up the ten primary kingdoms as follows. 1. The Ostrogoths in Mesia. 2. The Visigoths in Pannonia. 3. The Sueves and Alans in Gasgoine and Spain. 4. The Vandals in Africa. 5. The Franks in France. 6. The Burgundians in Burgundy. 7. The Heruli and Turingi in Italy. 8. The Saxons and Angles in Britain. 9. The Huns in Hungary; and 10, the Lombards at first upon the Danube, afterwards in Italy. The same catalogue is exhibited by that excellent chronologer Bp. Lloyd, who adds the dates, when these ten kingdoms arose. 1. The Huns about A. D. 356. 2. The Ostrogoths, 377. 3. The Visigoths, 378. 4. The Franks, 407. 5. The Vandals, 407. 6. The Sueves and Alans, 407. 7. The Burgundians, 407. 8. The Heruli and Rugi, 476. 9. The Saxons, 476. 10. The Lombards in the north of Germany, 483: in Hungary, 526.—These taken upon the concurring testimony of a historian and a chronologer, are "the ten kingdoms," into which the Roman empire was originally divided; and consequently they are the first "ten horns," of which we are in quest. Faber, Vol. I. pp. 170, 171.—The western empire was at first divided into ten kingdoms; as the regions conquered by Alexander the Great, were into four; and whatever alterations took place in subsequent ages; the one still continued, in the language of prophecy, the ten horns of the fourth beast, and the other, the four heads of the third beast.—The western empire was broken into ten kingdoms; This therefore must be exclusively intended; and St. John, before he enters on the state of the church in the west, during the reign of the ten-horned beast and the two-horned beast, gives an account of the eastern empire, and the subversion of it, by the Saracens and Turks, in a distinct chapter. (Notes, Rev. 9:11-13)—It is, however, certain, that the Roman empire was divided into ten kingdoms; and though they might be sometimes more and sometimes fewer; yet they were still known by the name of the ten kingdoms of the western empire, which suffices for our general purpose. For, though the Romans subdued those countries in the east, which had successively belonged to the Chaldeans, the Persians, and the Macedonians; yet their empire (or the body, head, and horns of the beast) was in the west. 'All the four beasts are still alive, though the dominion of the three first be taken away. The nations of Chaldaea and Assyria are still the first beast. Those of Media and Persia are still the second beast. Those of Macedonia, Greece, Thrace, Asia Minor, Syria, and Egypt are still the third; and those of Europe, on this side Greece, are still the fourth.' Sir Isaac Newton.

it devoured and brake in pieces, and stamped the residue with the feet of it: and it was diverse from all the beasts that were before it; and it had ten horns.

V. 8. While the prophet was considering these ten horns, he saw "another little horn" springing up among them. This evidently points out the power of the church and bishop of Rome, which from small beginnings, long before it became a temporal dominion, thrust itself up among the ten kingdoms, and at length got possession of three of them, having turned out those who held them. 'If ever three kingdoms were "plucked up" before a little kingdom, which arose imperceptibly among the ten primary kingdoms, they must be three, the names of which occur in the preceding list of Machiavel, and Bp. Lloyd. Accordingly we find that the kingdom of the Heruli, the kingdom of the Ostrogoths, and the kingdom of the Lombards, were successively eradicated before the little papal horn, which at length became a temporal, no less than a spiritual power, at the expens of these three depressed primary states.' Faber.—This seems better founded, than the opinion, that the Exarchate of Ravenna, the kingdom of the Lombards, the state of Rome, and the authority of the Roman Pontiff, of which two, the Exarchate of Ravenna and the state of Rome, were not among the ten primary kingdoms. In this horn, were "eyes like the eyes of a man." This circumstance denoted the policy, sagacity, and watchfulness, by which the little horn would spy out occasions of extending and establishing its interests, and advancing its exorbitant pretensions; and the court of Rome has ever been remarkable for this, above all the states in the world, as every person at all acquainted with history must know. It had also "a mouth speaking great things;" and we shall have frequent occasion to speak of the arrogant claims, blasphemous titles, and great swelling words of vanity, of this horn. The style of "his holiness," "Our Lord God the Pope, another god on earth," and the claim of infallibility, and of a power to dispense with God's laws, to forgive sins, and to sell admission into heaven, may serve for a specimen of the great things which this mouth has spoken. (Marg. Ref. c. Notes, 23-27, 2 Thes. 2:3, 4.)

9 ¶ I beheld 'till the thrones were cast down, and the Ancient of days did sit, whose garment was white as snow, and the hair of his head like the pure wool: this throne was like the fiery flame, and his wheels as burning fire.

10 A fiery stream issued and came forth from before him: thousand thousands ministered unto him, and ten thousand times ten thousand stood before him: the judgment was set, and the books were opened.

11 I beheld then, because of the voice of the great waters which the horn spake: I beheld, even till the beast was slain, and his body destroyed, and given to the burning flame.

Hence we find that Daniel, 'who largely describes "the little horn," makes no mention of "the two-horned beast," while St. John who describes "the two-horned beast," styling him "a false prophet," makes no mention of the little horn.' Faber, Vol. I. p. 143. (Notes, Rev. 13:11,12. 19:17-21. v. 20.)

V. 9-12. The prophet continued to contemplate the scene, till at length all "these thrones were cast down;" and "the Ancient of days," or the eternal God who existed from everlasting, was emblematically represented as placed on his throne. "His garment, white as snow" was the emblem of his most perfect "justice and holiness;" "the hair of his head like the pure wool," denoted his unerring wisdom and awful majesty; "his throne like the fiery flame" signified his terrible vengeance on the wicked; and "his wheels" (on which it was fixed as a chariot) "as burning fire," showed that his providence would execute the awful sentence of his justice on his enemies. (Marg. Ref. z-d. Notes, Ps. 68:17,18. Is. 6:1-4. Ez. 1:15-28. 10:18,19. 11:22-25. Rev. 4:1-5.) This was also denoted, and its terror illustrated, by "the fiery stream that came forth from before him." An immense multitude of angels ministered unto him; and unnumbered millions of his creatures were gathered before his tribunal: for "the judgment was set, and the books were opened;" the book of his law, and of these prophecies, and the register of the offences of the criminals to be judged, &c. (Marg. Ref. e-g. Notes, Deut. 33:2. Jude 14-16. Rev. 20:11-15.)—This language is especially applicable to the general judgment; but that cannot be the prophetic meaning of the passage; for it is plain that God the Father is here spoken of as the Judge; whereas the Son will appear as the sole Judge in the day of final retribution: the fulfilment of this prophecy will precede the introduction of the millennium: the final judgment will succeed to the consummation of all things here on earth. In short, this was spoken of the coming of the Lord, to destroy the kingdom of the little horn, and to set up the kingdom of God on earth. For the great God, being filled with indignation at the blasphemous words of this proud and impious usurper, will destroy all the remains of the power of the fourth beast, to which it belongs; that is, of the Roman empire, as inimical to the cause of Christ: and his body shall be destroyed and given to the flames; because the little horn was the ring-leader to the beast, in tyranny, cruelty, and idolatry; and because of the close connexion between it and the other ten horns. Rome will be wholly desolated, and her hierarchy abolished; every antichristian power will be crushed; and the whole will be reduced under the government of Christ, and those who rule under him and for him. (Marg. Ref. h. i. Notes, 15-22. Rev. 18:19.)—The other beasts had indeed been deprived of dominion, yet "their lives were prolonged for a season;" the countries, which had been governed by the Chaldeans, Persians, and Macedonians, though no longer in possession of empire, yet continued under the government of idolaters, or enemies to true religion; for "a beast" in the prophetic language is an idolatrous or persecuting power; but when the fourth beast shall lose his authority, his life also shall be taken away, and no idolatrous or antichristian power shall remain in any nation; for at that time the other beasts shall be slain, which is clearly intimated by "their lives being prolonged for a season."—If the existence of these idolatrous empires is to be continued through the millennium, and to the end of the world, as some expositors state, what can be the meaning of the words, "for a season?" (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Note, Rev. 20:7-10, conclusion.)

12 As concerning the rest of the beasts, they had their dominion taken away: yet their lives were prolonged for a season and time.

13 I saw in the night-visions, and, behold, one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of days, and they brought him near before him.

14 And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages, should serve him: his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed.

V. 13, 14. The prophet further saw "one like the Son of man, coming with the clouds of heaven," that is, with divine majesty and glory: this must point out Christ to us, as the eternal Son of God, appearing in human nature, ascending to heaven, the throne of God, to receive the kingdom covenanted to him. (Note, Ps. 2:7-9.) He came to "the Ancient of days," who sat on the throne, and was brought in before him by the angelic attendants; and he received a glorious, universal, and everlasting kingdom, which would never vanish, or be subverted, or succeeded by any other.—'This passage not only shows, that the setting up of the everlasting kingdom, was to happen in the times of the fourth, or Roman, monarchy; but also, that it would happen when the Son of man would ascend from earth to heaven.... The prophet does not represent him, as coming in the clouds, from heaven to earth, (as at the general judgment,) but as coming with the clouds of heaven from his former residence, towards the throne of God; which according to the Scripture-style is heaven. And this is confirmed by the words immediately following; that "they brought him near before him," viz. before the Ancient of days.... Though the immediate Ruler of this kingdom is called "the Son of man;" yet it is obvious, that there is something very amazing in the prophetic description of the high honour and glory, that should be given to him! Whoever considers these expressions! (in the fourteenth verse,) "with impartiality, ... whatever be his sentiments otherwise about the Person spoken of, must own, that there is at least some difficulty, in conceiving how such everlasting glory and dominion should belong to any one, who should be no more than the Son of man, or a mere creature; and particularly in conceiving how such magnificent things should be ascribed to one, who was no more than the Son of man, by ... the prophets, who inculcated so strongly and justly, that all mere creatures are before God as nothing, and less than nothing.' Maclaurin.—When Christ was about to ascend into heaven, he said, "All power is given to me, in heaven and earth." (Notes, Matt. 28:18. Eph. 1:15-22. Phil. 2:9-11.) Then his kingdom began to be set up, and the power of the fourth kingdom to decline: but it is plain from the eleventh verse, that the grand event predicted in this passage is, his glorious coming to destroy the kingdom of every Antichristian power, and to render his own kingdom universal upon earth. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 23-27. Rev. 11:15-18. 20:1-6.)

V. 15-18. When Daniel had considered these emblems of future times, he foresaw that idolatrous empires would occasion great and durable calamities to the church of God, before a happy event could be expected: yet he did not fully understand what was meant, nor how matters would end; and he was therefore much grieved and troubled in mind. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. r, s.) So that, desiring information from one of the numerous attendants "of him that sat on the throne," he received the following interpretation. In general, the four beasts, signified "four kings," or kingdoms, that were to arise up on earth, which would oppose the church of God: yet the saints would at length "take the kingdom, and possess it for ever," not only personally in heaven, but collectively on earth, after the ruin of the fourth kingdom; for they would rule with Christ to the end of time, and nothing would succeed this kingdom on earth, but the everlasting glory of heaven. (Marg. Ref. y. Notes, 19-22. 2:34,35,44,45. Is. 2:2-5.) It is with reference to this, probably, that the apostle says, "The promise that he should be the heir of the world was given to Abraham." (Note, Rom. 4:13.)

Out of the earth. (17) 'Shall be of the earth, earthly, and have nothing of a heavenly spirit in them; whereas the kingdom of Christ is a heavenly kingdom, which the saints shall possess.' Louth. (Marg. Ref. x.) and asked him the truth of all this. So he told me, and made me know the interpretation of the things.

17 These great beasts, which are four, are four kings, which shall arise out of the earth.

18 But the saints of the most High shall take the kingdom, and possess the kingdom for ever, even for ever and ever.

19 Then I would know the truth of the fourth beast, which was diverse from all the others, exceeding dreadful, whose teeth were of iron, and his nails of brass; which devoured, brake in pieces, and stamped the residue with his feet;

20 And of the ten horns that were in his head, and of the other which came up, and before whom three fell; even of that horn that had eyes, and a mouth that spake very great things, whose look was more stout than his fellows.

21 I beheld, and the same horn made war with the saints, and prevailed against them;

V. 19-22. Daniel seems to have been satisfied with knowing in general, that the three first kingdoms would resemble such monarchies as he had seen: but he was anxious to learn more about the kingdom, intended by the fourth beast, which was so different from all the rest, and so formidable with "teeth of iron, and nails of brass." (Note, 7.)—The "nails of brass" were not before mentioned. Brass was the emblem of the third kingdom in Nebuchadnezzar's dream, (2:39.) and some suppose this to intimate, that the fourth kingdom would employ the power of the third kingdom in the east, to oppress other nations; though the seat of the fourth kingdom, the body of the beast, was in the west!—The prophet, however, supposed this to represent some more formidable enemy of the church than any of the others; as well as far more powerful and oppressive in its conquests. He wanted also to know more concerning the ten horns; but especially "the little horn," of which he had further observed, that "his look was more stout than his fellows." The Roman court and Pontiff, from very inconsiderable beginnings, for many ages domineered over those kingdoms intended by the ten horns, in the most audacious manner; laying them under interdicts and excommunications, levying heavy taxes on them; deposing kings, and disposing of their dominions; absolving their subjects from their oaths of allegiance, and exciting them to rebellions and insurrections; claiming a supremacy in all causes; and so trampling on the greatest monarchs, as never was done by any other power. Daniel had also noticed, that this horn had "made war with the saints, and prevailed against them;" and accordingly the persecutions, massacres, and religious wars, excited by the church and bishop of Rome, have occasioned the shedding of far more blood of the saints of God, than all the persecutions of professed heathens from the foundation of the world. (Marg. Ref. c. Notes, Rev. 11:7-12, 13:5-7, 17:9-14.) This is the character of the same power, described by St. John as "the great harlot, who was drunk with the blood of the saints and martyrs of Jesus." (Note, Rev. 17:6.)—It was predicted also that this horn would prevail against the saints, "until the Ancient of days should come," to give judgment against it, in favour of his saints; and till they should be put in full possession of the kingdom, as one with Christ their glorious Head; and this certainly refers to future times. (Note, 8.) These were the particulars which Daniel wanted to have interpreted to him; and there was a great propriety, in matters of this nature being thus fully revealed to him, whose chief concern must be about the affairs of the church and of true religion: whilst Nebuchadnezzar's dream, of the same four monarchies, related wholly to their temporal dominion. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. z-b, d, e.)

V. 23-27. The answer of the angel to Daniel's inquiry, has been particularly adverted to in the preceding interpretation. He informed the prophet, that "the fourth beast should be the fourth kingdom," which should arise upon earth; and this could be no other than the Roman empire. This would be "diverse from all kingdoms:" the kingdoms of Alexander's successors were not remarkably different from those which had preceded them; but the Roman state was entirely dissimilar from them all, in its forms of government, and in various particulars. It would "devour the whole earth, and tread it down and break it in pieces." If we should explain this only of the land of Judah, it is obvious that the Chaldeans caused more grievous and permanent calamities to that land, than ever the successors of Alexander did: yet and the time came that the saints possessed the kingdom.

23 Thus he said, The fourth beast shall be the fourth kingdom upon earth, which shall be diverse from all kingdoms, and shall devour the whole earth, and shall tread it down, and break it in pieces.

24 And the ten horns out of this kingdom are ten kings that shall arise: and another shall rise after them; and he shall be diverse from the first, and he shall subdue three kings.

25 And he shall speak great words against the most High, and shall wear out the saints of the most High, and think to change times and laws; and they shall be given into his hand, until a time, and times, and the dividing of time.

26 But the judgment shall sit, and they shall take away his dominion, to consume and to destroy it unto the end.

27 And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting nothing comparable to those inflicted by the Romans: but it evidently refers to their extensive conquests in every part of the known world. When this kingdom had been divided into ten horns, or kingdoms, "another should come up after them," "diverse from the first," who should "subdue three kings," or three of the kingdoms before mentioned. (Marg. Ref. f-h.) But how was Antiochus Epiphanes different from his predecessors? Or how could he subdue three of the kings, which were in order of succession before him? Or how could he come up, "after the ten horns," if he were one of them? We can therefore find this little horn nowhere, but within the Roman empire. The monstrous power of the church and bishop of Rome, has been far more different from every other species of tyranny, than the Roman empire was from all other monarchies: and it has been seen how this power subdued three of the ten kingdoms.—This little horn would "speak great things against the most High;" let it be noted how much emphasis is laid on this circumstance: and we have noticed, and shall have frequent occasion to mention, some of the blasphemous and impious words of the Roman Antichrist. (Note, 8.)—He would also "wear out the saints of the most High." The persecutions of Antiochus Epiphanes were only for a few years: whereas those of the pope and its instruments have continued through many centuries; and, though now somewhat suspended, are probably not terminated: so that their duration and severity have "worn out the saints" of God, more than any other persecutions ever did.—He would also "think," or devise, "to change times and laws." It could not be considered as anything very singular, for a king to alter the laws in his own dominions, or as to secular matters; and no change, greatly for the worse, could be made in the religious laws and customs of the idolatrous nations: but that the little horn should presume to change the laws respecting religion, (not excepting the laws of God,) and this through the dominions of the other ten horns, as well as in his own kingdom, would be wonderful indeed. The close connexion, however, of this little horn with the other ten horns; its influence over them, and their destruction, as well as his, in consequence of this connexion; evidently show, that this was what the prophet beheld with astonishment. And has not the papal power arrogated the prerogative of making times holy or unholy, contrary to the word of God? Has it not commanded men every where to abstain from meat, and cease from work, when God required no such thing? Has it not multiplied its holy days, till scarcely four of the six working days have been left for man's labour at the same time, has it not licentious temperance and excess on its festivals and carnivals, and authorized licentious diversions on the Lord's own holy day? This power has pretended to change God's laws, or to dispense with obedience to them, that its own new laws might be observed, forbidding to marry, and licensing fornication, and many things of this sort. (Marg. Ref. l. Notes, 11:36, 37, 1 Tim. 4:1-5. Rev. 13:1-17.)—Thus matters would be left in his hands, "till a time, and times, and the dividing of time," that is, for three years and a half, or forty-two months, which, reckoning thirty days to a month, (and this was the general computation,) make just one thousand two hundred and sixty days; and those prophetic days signify one thousand two hundred and sixty years: a number which we shall repeatedly meet with in the Revelation of St. John. (Marg. Ref. m. Notes, 12:5-9, v. 7. Rev. 11:1-6, v. 2, 3. 12:3-6, v. 6, 12-17, v. 14. 13:5-7, v. 5.) At the expiration of this term, the dominion of this horn will cease: he will be judged, condemned, and consumed, and his authority never revived to the end of the world. Then, "the kingdom, under the whole heaven, will be given to the people of the saints." (Notes, 13-18.) The most High will set up his everlasting and universal kingdom; all other rulers and governors will serve and obey him.—Can this mean any thing less than a universal prevalence of true religion, under the countenance of Christian princes, even to the end of the world, without any remarkable declension, or successful opposition? And has not enough of this extraordinary prophecy been already fulfilled, to warrant our assurance, that the remainder will be so too, as well as to demonstrate the divinity of the Scriptures?—Thus the second, as well as the first, prophecy of this book, relating to the four empires, reaches down below the end of the Roman empire, and to the universal empire of the Messiah. . . . The great things said to be done by the little horn, and the continuance of his power to the time of the universal conversion of the nations, put it beyond all question, that it is not one particular person that is meant, but a very long succession. . . . He is never called any other than "a little horn." . . . His greatness is chiefly placed in great words and looks, joined with singular penetration and cunning; which is of itself a presumption, that the great things he was to accomplish, would be owing to the power of others, voluntarily giving their power to him, after having been seduced by him. . . . The following small number of characters, to be gathered by plain and easy reasoning from a few passages in one prophet, (Daniel,) 'make up a singular description, not applicable to any power, that ever was or will be, but one. . . . A seducing power that was to arise, after the conversion, the downfall, and division, of the Roman empire, established in the western parts of that empire, when divided into so many' (ten) 'sovereignties; little, in comparison of these others as to secular authority; but claiming and obtaining an universal spiritual authority over the body of the western kingdoms; acquiring and maintaining this through policy and craft; . . . procuring a voluntary surrender of power from really superior sovereigns; improving it so, as to be a ringleader to these others in apostasy, persecution, and various kinds of opposition to the truth; and continuing to exert such power for such ends, under a considerable number of ages.' MacLaurin. (Note, Rev. 17:9-14.) From carefully comparing what different expositors have stated concerning this "little horn," and the time at which the predicted term of 1260 years began, with the prophecies themselves, I am led to conclude, that "the little horn" was in existence for a considerable time before he was possessed either of ecclesiastical or temporal dominion. That he sprang up soon after the empire was divided into ten kingdoms. (Note, 2 Thes. 2:5-7.) That, though the bishop of Rome even then, nay, before, made arrogant claims; yet the little horn was comparatively harmless, till by the decree of Phocas he was constituted 'UNIVERSAL BISHOP, and SUPREME HEAD OF THE CHURCH,' A. D. 606. That by this decree, "the saints, and the times and laws, were given into his hands." (25) he had the power of persecuting and domination, whether he immediately exercised it, or not. And that the 1260 years are to be dated from his being thus invested with absolute ecclesiastical dominion, and not from his becoming a temporal potentate, which did not occur till a later period. This is indeed the abstract of Mr. Faber's copious argument on this subject; in which he very successfully shows, that several other computations are inconsistent with themselves, as well as with each other; and imply, that the little horn, in many ways, was active and successful, before the time at which they date his beginning to exist. (Faber, Vol. I. pp. 139-170.) From the obscurity, however, of prophecy, previous to its fulfilment, we are cautioned not confidently to assign the date of future events; but, probably, at the end of 1260 years from A. D. 606, the glorious events predicted will begin to receive a remarkable accomplishment.

V. 28. Daniel, from this interpretation, foreseeing the calamities of the church, for so long a season previous to the joyful termination of them, was greatly troubled in mind, which affected his body also. He, however, laid up the matter in his memory and heart, that he might meditate on it, and derive instruction from it. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 15-18. 8:27. Hab. 3:16.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-14. Those splendid achievements, and that extensive authority, which excite admiration, applause, envy, or ambition, often rank men with destructive hurricanes and savage beasts, in the judgment of God and of his saints. These are the instruments of divine vengeance on a guilty world, which is kept in perpetual agitation by their contest; as the great sea is by the raging of the conflicting winds. They are indeed diverse from each other; but agree in their aim to aggrandize themselves, and to gain the dominion, by making havoc of the human species, and trampling men under their feet: and many around them, by their flattering encomiums and delusive oratory, call on them to "arise and devour much flesh."

for me Daniel, 'my cogitations much troubled me and my countenance changed in me: 'but I kept the matter in my heart.

1 Gen. 37:10, 11. Mark 9:10. Luke 2:19, 51. 9:44.

The greater renown such chieftains received, from posterity, the more mischievous were they to their contemporaries: and whilst our youth are taught to admire the exploits of the Greeks and Romans, they are seldom led to reflect on the dire carnage, and widely spread desolations, which their wars occasioned. No savage beast, nor even the worst qualities of them all put together, can equal the odious constituents of an ambitious conqueror's character: and an Alexander, or a Julius Cesar, may be considered as a compound of pride, ambition, selfishness, rage, and cruelty; whilst he can glory in the slaughter of a million of his own species, for the sole purpose of advancing his own reputation and greatness, or of extending the dominions and wealth of his idolized country. But when we look at such beasts as dreadful and terrible, and exceedingly strong, and consider their fatal successes; we should recollect, that they are under the secret direction of God, whose "counsel shall stand, and he will do all his pleasure;" and thus we shall be preserved from either admiring or dreading them. For these lions and monsters of more savage breed, are all chained: the dominion given them has its appointed extent and duration; their wrath shall turn to the praise of the Lord, and "the remainder of it he will restrain." Whilst he has work for them as his executioners, they have rapid success; when that is done they disappear, or are broken in pieces; and as one of them after another is removed, and the earth seems to be at rest, being delivered from a scourge and a curse; another rises up perhaps still more outrageous and mischievous. But, in whatever form, age, or place, they "practise and prosper;" or whatever be their courage and sagacity, or their arrogance, impiety, and cruelty, in war, or in persecution; their thrones will be cast down, to make way for the kingdom of "the Ancient of days," the everlasting God, whose works and counsels are all in glorious justice, holiness, wisdom, and majesty; and whose wrath is a devouring fire against all his enemies. He will "put down all authority" which exalts itself against him; and the terrible displays of his power and wrath, in his temporal judgments on the nations, form an emblem of that day, when we must all appear before his tribunal to give an account of our works: "when the books shall be opened, and all, whose names shall not be found written in the book of life, will be cast into the lake of fire;" "when thousand thousands shall minister unto him, and ten thousand times ten thousand shall stand before him." Ere that solemn decisive season shall arrive, for the manifestation of the glory of God to all worlds, in his dealings with his creatures; the doom of each of us will be determined, at the hour of our death; and before the end shall come, the Father will openly and actually give unto his incarnate Son, our Mediator and Judge, the inheritance of the nations, as his willing subjects. Of this he gave a proof, when he "raised him from the dead, and gave him glory;" when the divine Saviour ascended up on high, and was brought by his attending angels before the Ancient of days; and when all "power in heaven and earth was given to him."

V. 15-28. Hitherto it has been permitted, that the depravity of man should be exposed, in the conduct of many rivals and competitors to "the Lord of glory;" of many enemies, who have opposed his cause, and made havoc of innumerable multitudes of his saints; and have prevented the success of their efforts, in spreading that glorious cause, which they loved more than their lives. Yet they have never prevented the eternal felicity of any one chosen vessel of mercy; nor could "the gates of hell ever prevail against the church."—Idolatry, impiety, arrogance, and persecution have generally been concomitants; and have always been odious and pernicious; but never so odious and pernicious, as when covered with a mask of religion. There have been and will be many antichrists; but he "that sits in the temple of God, and exalts himself above all that is called God, or is worshipped," has been more fierce and "stout than his fellows;" and has "worn out the saints of the most High, and thought to change times and laws," more than they all; and his condemnation will be proportionably dreadful for the judgment shall sit, and "the Lord will destroy him with the breath of his mouth, and with the brightness of his coming." (Note, 2 Thes. 2:8-12, v. 8.) Other tyrants and persecutors may be spared for a season, even when dethroned; but this enemy shall be wholly destroyed, and cast into the fire. Then all idolatry and false worship shall cease, and our Redeemer shall receive dominion and glory, and a kingdom over all people, nations, and languages, which shall never pass away nor be destroyed.—We must not indeed be ambitious of temporal power, or use unhallowed means to subvert even antichristian tyranny: but we may pray that God our Saviour would plead his own cause, and fulfil his word, and make his truth victorious: we may desire to be instrumental in forwarding these happy events, in any way in which it may please him to employ us; and we may anticipate with joy those glorious times, when "all nations shall fall down before" our Redeemer, "and all kings shall do him service;" and

CHAPTER VIII.

Daniel has a vision of a ram, and a he-goat that overcame the ram, 1-7. The horn of the goat is broken, and four horns come up in its stead, 8. A little horn springs from one of them and becomes exceedingly great, and does much mischief, 9-12. The duration of these events, 13, 14. Gabriel shows Daniel, that this vision related to the kingdom of the Medes and Persians as conquered by the Macedonians; and to a power that would thence arise, and extensively, and for a long time, prevail against the church, 15-25. The certainty and remote futurity of the events; and Daniel's grief, astonishment, and sickness, 26, 27.

IN the third year of the reign of king Belshazzar a vision appeared unto me, even unto me Daniel, after that which appeared unto me at the first.

2 And I saw in a vision; and it came to pass, when I saw, that I was at Shushan in the palace, which is in the province of Elam; and I saw in a vision, and I was by the river of Ulai.

3 Then I lifted up mine eyes, and saw, and behold, there stood before the river a ram which had two horns; and the two horns were high; but one was higher than the other, and the higher came up last.

when every throne on earth shall be filled by those, who do his will and seek his glory. We should make serious inquiry into these matters, as well as into other parts of God's word; and by proper examination and humble prayer, we shall thence deduce encouragement to our hope, and find strength added to our faith. We should keep them in our hearts, and expect the approaching period, when "the saints shall receive the kingdom," and their cause shall finally triumph over all opposition; and the trouble, arising from the views which we receive of the sufferings to be endured by God's people, will be counterbalanced by the expectation of so glorious an event. May we be numbered with the saints, now they are under the cross, that we may share all their triumphs, and be "numbered with them in glory everlasting."

NOTES.—CHAP. VIII. V. 1. The Chaldeans were not particularly concerned in the subsequent prophecies; and therefore they were written in the Hebrew tongue, as more useful to the Jews.—(Marg. Ref. Notes, 2A. 7:1.)

V. 2. Shushan or Susa, was afterwards the capital city of the Persian empire; and many commentators suppose, that Daniel was there only in vision, (as Ezekiel had been carried to Jerusalem,) and that he was actually at Babylon at the time. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Neh. 1:4. Ez. 8:1-4. 11:22-25. 40:2.) Indeed the language may admit of this interpretation; yet it does not appear why the scene of the vision should be Shushan, if he were not really there. But it is inquired, what he should do at Shushan, when Belshazzar, who employed him, was at war with the Medes and Persians. He might however be there, as employed in some embassy from Belshazzar to Cyrus, or some of the parties engaged in war against him. Indeed it is probable, that Shushan was at this time in the hands of the king of Babylon. Nebuchadnezzar conquered Elam, according to Jeremiah's prediction; (Notes, Jer. 49:34-39.) and it does not appear that Cyrus had at this time retaken it. Elam is indeed sometimes used for Persia; but the province of Elam was only a part of that country.—Daniel's residing in the palace at Shushan shows, that he still continued in those posts of honour to which Nebuchadnezzar had advanced him. (27) Lowth.—Ulai. This river divides Susiana from the province of Elam, properly so called. See Pliny's Lowth.

V. 3, 4. The kingdom of Media and Persia, before represented by a voracious bear, was on this occasion shown to Daniel, under the form of a ram with two horns. (20. Notes, 2:39. 7:5.) The bear aptly described the nature of this monarchy; but the "ram with two horns," was its known emblem in those countries. The original word for "a ram," and that for Elam, or Persia, have a great affinity: it was usual for the kings of Persia to wear a diadem of gold made like a ram's head, and it is said that, "rams' heads with horns, one higher and the other lower, are still to be seen on the pillars at Persepolis." The Chaldean monarchy was drawing near to its end, when Daniel had this vision; and its subversion had been sufficiently predicted; this vision therefore was introduced by the emblem of the Medo-Persian empire. The two horns of this ram, one higher than the other, do not mean Darius and Cyrus, or any two princes; for the ram had two horns, when he was smitten by the goat, or the Macedonians; (7) but they signify the joint power of the Medes and Persians forming one monarchy. The Medes were the most ancient of the two nations, and had been most eminent; but the Persians became most powerful and renowned; so that "the higher horn came up last" (Marg. and Marg. Ref. i.) This ram, though comparatively a feeble animal, was seen "pushing" with his horns, "westward, northward, and southward," so that none could withstand or escape him, or prevent his executing his purposes, and becoming great. Persia lay to the east of Babylon; and the 4 I saw the ram pushing westward, and northward, and southward; so that no beast might stand before him, neither was there any that could deliver out of his hand; and he became great.

5 And as I was considering, behold, a he-goat came from the west on the face of the whole earth, and touched not the ground; and the goat had a notable horn between his eyes.

6 And he came to the ram that had two horns, which I had seen standing before the river, and ran unto him in the fury of his power.

7 And I saw him come close unto the ram, and he was moved with choler against him, and smote the ram, and brake his two horns: and there was no power in the ram to stand before him, but he cast him down to the ground, and stamped upon him: and there was none that could deliver the ram out of his hand.

8 Therefore the he-goat waxed very great: and when he was strong, the great horn was kingdoms extended their conquests westward, as far as the Egean sea; north and northwest, they subdued various people even to the Caspian and Euxine sea: and to the south and southwest, they vanquished Egypt and several of the adjacent regions. Some of the later kings of Persia carried their arms also into the east; but it is not certain, that they made any conquests in that quarter. The kingdom of Ahasuerus indeed is said to have extended "from India to Ethiopia," but this seems only to imply, that it reached to the borders of India, (Note, Esth. 1:1, 2.) The principal successes of the Medes and Persians, however, were "westward, and northward and southward." (Marg. Ref. Notes, 5-7. 11:2-4.)

V. 5-7. Whilst the prophet beheld with astonishment the fury and success of the ram, he observed "a he-goat come from the west" to oppose him: this was afterwards interpreted to mean the kingdom of Greece, or Macedonia, and "the little horn the first king," or, Alexander the Great, and those of his race, who for a short time succeeded him. (21) A Goat was the known emblem of this kingdom; and the Macedonians had long been called the Goats' people; For Caranus their first king, going with a great multitude of Greeks, to seek new habitations in Macedonia, was commanded by the oracle to take the goats for his guides to empire: and afterwards seeing a herd of goats fleeing from a violent storm; he followed them to Edessa, and there fixed the seat of his empire, made the goats his ensigns, and called the city Egeae, or the Goats' town, and the people Egeadae, or the Goat's people. Bp. Newton.—The Persian kings had made some very formidable but unsuccessful attempts to subdue the Greeks, and by repeated injuries they had so exasperated the whole nation, that, laying aside their quarrels with each other, they united against the common enemy. The politics and successes of Philip king of Macedon, and other circumstances, had concurred to make way for Alexander the Great, to accomplish his design of leading an army into Asia, to conquer if possible the Persian empire. With a small body of most valiant and well disciplined soldiers, the flower of Greece and Macedon, he marched into Asia; and his progress and successes were so rapid, that his army seemed, as it were, to fly above, and "not to touch," the surface of "the earth;" and when Darius the Persian king came to meet him, with armies perhaps twenty times as large, he was attacked with such impetuosity, and routed with such immense slaughter; that by the loss of three great battles, his power was utterly broken, he was pursued as a fugitive, and at length slain by his own servants. Afterwards Alexander with unexampled celerity marched his forces into every part of this extensive empire, bearing down all opposition, and receiving the submission of cities and nations; till the ram, the Medo-Persian kingdom, was cast down to the ground, and "stamped upon," or trodden under foot by the victor, and none could deliver it, or any part of it, out of the hands of the Macedonians. (Marg. Ref. Note, 7:6.) When Alexander first menaced Asia with an invasion, Darius treated his proposals and designs with the most affronting contempt. And he afterwards attempted to bribe his physician to poison him: these injuries had so exasperated the king and his troops, that they pursued Darius rather as an assassin, than as a competitor for honour and empire; and the he-goat attacked the ram, as "moved with choler" against him.—It is recorded by Josephus, that this prophecy was shown to Alexander by the Jewish high-priest on the following occasion. Whilst Alexander besieged Tyre, the high-priest of the Jews refused to pay tribute to him, because he had sworn allegiance to Darius; and this refusal so enraged the conqueror, that he set out in great haste to revenge himself on that nation. But, in answer to the prayers of the high priest and people, the former was directed in a vision to forth to meet Alexander, in his pontifical vestments, attended by the other priests in their sacred apparel: and when the enraged victor met this procession, he bowed down before the high-priest with religious awe and veneration. This behaviour astonished all present: but he informed them, that whilst he was planning this expedition, at Dio in Macedon, he had seen in a dream this very person in this very habit, inviting him to come into Asia, and promising him success in his expedition; and that he now meant to adore the God of the Jews, (who had directed and prospered his expedition,) in the person of his high-priest. Accordingly he peaceably entered Jerusalem, and offered sacrifices in the temple, where the high-priest showed him these prophecies of Daniel, in which it was foretold that a king of Greece should subvert the Persian empire. It is certain that Alexander granted many peculiar privileges to the Jewish nation; and this can hardly be accounted for, without admitting the truth of these events as recorded by Josephus.

V. 8. After the Macedonian kingdom had acquired extraordinary greatness and power, Alexander was cut off, when he was in the prime of his life, and in the full career of victory and prosperity; through excessive intemperance, and not without the suspicion of poison. In a few years after, the insignificant remains of his family were extinct; and then the great and noble horn of the goat was broken. Afterwards his captains had fierce contests about his dominions; till at length, four kingdoms arose, which continued for some time, and were "notable," conspicuous and eminent in the world; the kingdom of Egypt was to the south; that of Syria, and its dependencies, to the east; that of Thrace, with Bithynia, &c. to the north; and that of Macedonia to the west. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 22. 2:39. 7:6. 11:2—5.) Thus four horns sprang up from the head of the goat, in the place of the one which had been broken: but the power neither continued in the same family, nor was any one of these kingdoms equal to that of Alexander himself.

V. 9—12. (23—25.) Expositors in general used in former times to interpret this "little horn" to mean Antiochus Epiphanes, of whose persecutions we have an account in the books of Maccabees; but modern interpreters of prophecy have shown that this interpretation is not at all satisfactory; and have given us entirely other views of the subject. According to the first opinion, this part of the prophecy may be thus explained. From one of the four kingdoms, into which the dominions of Alexander were divided, came forth "a little horn;" which represented Antiochus Epiphanes, descending from the kings of Syria. This would occur "in the latter time of their kingdom," and Antiochus lived but a little time, before the Romans subdued the Grecian empire: it would also be "when the transgressors were come to the full" (23) that is, when the Jews had made themselves ripe for judgment by their crimes. This horn denoted "a king of fierce countenance," and Antiochus was a king of a most ferocious cruelty; and one that "understood dark sentences;" or, of designing subtlety. "His power would become mighty, but not by his own power:" (24) for from low beginnings he would arise to great prosperity, by the assistance of allies. After the Romans had conquered his father Antiochus the Great, and exceedingly weakened his dominions; and Seleucus, his brother, had drained all his treasures to pay the sum stipulated to the Romans; Antiochus, who had been a hostage at Rome, returned home in a very obscure manner: but being favoured by Eumenes, king of Pergamus, he obtained the kingdom in preference to his brother's posterity, and became in time powerful and formidable; carrying war into Egypt, "to the south;" and into Persia, and Armenia, "to the east;" and especially he subdued and oppressed the land of Judah, called "the pleasant land," because of the temple and ordinances of God. Thus "he waxed great" and employed his power "against the host of heaven," and "cast down some of the stars to the ground, and stamped on them;" this might figuratively describe his persecution of God's worshippers, and the cruelties which he exercised against many of the excellent and eminent persons among them. And he not only "magnified himself" against the high-priest, and the rulers of the Jews; but against God himself, "the Prince of this host," the Prince of princes: for he set up the image of Jupiter Olympus in the temple, profaned every thing with swine's flesh, compelled the Jews to blaspheme God; put a stop to the administration of all the sacred institutions, and desolated and polluted the whole sanctuary. For, to punish the sins of the Jews, "an host was given him against the daily sacrifices," i. e. God gave him power to prevail against them; so that the truth was by him cast down to the ground, and he heaven; and it cast down some of the host and of the stars to the ground, and stamped upon them.

11 Yea, he magnified himself even to the prince of the host, and by him the daily sacrifice was taken away, and the place of his sanctuary was cast down.

12 And a host was given him against the practised wickedness, and prospered in it: (24) accomplishing his deep and dark machinations, by the most crafty politics; behaving with the utmost arrogance; and making and infringing solemn treaties and agreements, to compass the destruction of multitudes. But at length, when he was coming, full of rage, to execute vengeance on the Jews, who opposed his tyranny; he was seized with a most loathsome and dire disease, and died miserably by the evident judgment of God, without the intervention of any human power. Thus some interpret this prophecy. (Notes, 11:21.—30.) But many insuperable objections lie against this interpretation. "A horn of a beast is never taken for a single person: it always signifies a new kingdom; and the kingdom of Antiochus was an old one. Antiochus reigned over one of the four horns; and the little horn was a fifth, under its proper kings. This horn was at first a little one, and waxed exceeding great; but so did not Antiochus. . . . His kingdom on the contrary was weak, and tributary to the Romans; and he did not enlarge it. The horn was "a king of fierce countenance, and destroyed wonderfully, and prospered and practised;" . . . but Antiochus was frightened out of Egypt by a mere message of the Romans, and afterwards routed and baffled by the Jews. The horn was mighty by another's power; Antiochus acted by his own. . . . The horn cast down the sanctuary to the ground, and so did not Antiochus; he left it standing. The sanctuary and host were trampled under foot two thousand and three hundred days, (14) and in Daniel's prophecies days are put for years; but the profanation of the temple, in the reign of Antiochus, did not last so many natural days. . . . These were to last . . . to "the end of the indignation" against the Jews; and this indignation is not yet at an end. They were to last till the sanctuary which had been cast down should be cleansed; and the sanctuary is not yet cleansed." Sir Is. Newton.—"Antiochus's kingdom was nothing more than a continuation of one of the four kingdoms; and cannot possibly be reckoned as a fifth kingdom springing up among the four. . . . When he stood up "the transgressors in the Jewish nation were not come to the full." . . . The holy city was inhabited "with all peace; and the laws were kept very well; because of the godliness of Onias the high-priest, and his hatred of wickedness." 2 Mac. 3:1. Bp. Newton. These, and other expositors therefore, suppose this little horn to mean the empire of the Romans, from the time when they had got footing in Greece and Macedonia; which formed one horn of the goat. They then entered on that stage, on which these events were to take place. At first they seemed to have little power in the regions which Alexander had governed; yet that increased exceedingly, by the forces brought from Rome and Italy; and as these formed no part of this goat, "the horn grew strong not by its own power." The Roman emperors also became terrible persecutors of the Christian church, putting to death many of the brightest ornaments of the gospel, especially several of the apostles of Christ. Yea, they "magnified themselves against this Prince of the host," the King of kings; both as Pilate the Roman governor ordered his crucifixion, and as they persecuted his followers for three centuries. And after the emperors became Christians, then the church and bishop of Rome arose to great dominion, by power given from others; and they have proved "rulers of fierce countenance, and understanding dark sentences;" being ever notorious for savage cruelty and dark machinations against their opposers. (Notes, 2:40—43. 7:7, 5, 19—27. 11:31—35.) With this interpretation of Sir Isaac Newton and Bishop Newton, the writer of this comment had acquiesced, though not with full satisfaction; till the appearance of Mr. Faber's Dissertation on the Prophecies. But the careful examination of his arguments and statement on the subject has convinced him, that the Mohammedan delusion, and not that of the papacy, is here pointed out. The copious reasonings, calculations, and quotations of this learned writer, cannot possibly be even condensed into so small a compass, as to be here inserted; and the reader must be referred to the work itself. (Faber on the Prophecies, Vol. I. chap. v.) A few hints, however, may be added.—It seems unnatural to make "the little horn" of the he-goat, or the third beast, that is, of the Macedonian empire, exactly the same as "the fourth beast," or the Roman empire; especially in a prophecy, in which the fourth beast is not once mentioned; and the arguments above deduced, in support of that opinion, are by no means conclusive. It appears to me unaccountable, on mature reflection, that there should be, in these concise, yet most comprehensive prophecies of Daniel, so many repeated and particular predictions of the papal delusions in the west; and not a hint of the Mohammedan delusion in the east, the progress and effects daily sacrifice, by reason of transgression, and it cast down the truth to the ground; and it practised and prospered.

13 ¶ Then I heard one saint speaking, and another saint said unto that certain saint which spake, "How long shall be the vision concerning the daily sacrifice, and the transgression of desolation, to give both the sanctuary and the host to be trodden under foot?

14 And he said unto me, "Unto two thousand and three hundred days," then shall the sanctuary be cleansed. [Practical Observations.]

of which have been most extensively mischievous; and are especially and separately noted as such by St. John. (Notes, Rev. 9.) The Holy Spirit, now purposing to describe the exploits of another great enemy to Christianity, recalls, in the vision of the ram and the he-goat, the attention of Daniel, to the second and third empires, whose prophetic history had been already detailed, for the purpose of introducing another "little horn," which was to come up out of one of the principal horns of the Macedonian beast, as the former "little horn" sprang up among the ten horns of the Roman beast. Faber, p. 190. It must be far more natural and reasonable, to look for the little horn of the he-goat, in the regions which formed the Macedonian empire, as broken into four divisions; than in any part of the Roman empire, even when extended to the same regions. It is plain, that the rise of the papal ecclesiastical authority, by which "the saints of the Most High" were delivered into the hands of the bishop of Rome, by the edict of Phocas, constituting him universal bishop, A. D. 606; and the first dawn of Mohammed's religious imposture occurred in the same year; and in all probability, the two delusions will be terminated precisely at the same time. (Note, 23—25.) In neither case, as it appears to me, is the temporal dominion exclusively, or even primarily foretold; but the religious delusion. It does not then remain to be inquired, either when the pope became a temporal prince, or when Mohammed began his conquests. The little horn of the west, and that of the east, seem to have entered on the work of spiritual delusion at the same period. It being carefully kept in mind, that the religious imposture and its effects, in both cases, are primarily meant; and the temporal authority, merely as subservient to them; it will not be any objection to this interpretation, that the dominion of the Mohammedan's began to decline in a few centuries, and probably will be extinct, before the close of the 1260 years: for the effects of the spiritual delusions will nevertheless remain, till dispelled by the triumphant light of divine truth: as will the papal delusion also, however the pope, and the dominion of the Mohammedans supporting his ecclesiastical dominion, may be crushed. The extreme corruption of the professed Christian church, and the worship of images, and angels, and saints, and manifold other corruptions, which had long been gaining ground in the church, gave occasion to the Mohammedan delusion, and plausibility to it as a protest against the idolatry of Christians, as well as of Gentiles: (23) and Mohammedism in an especial manner gained its first successes, and for a long time chiefly prevailed, in the regions which had constituted the corrupt parts of the eastern church. When Christian churches were converted into mosques; "the daily sacrifices" might be said to be "taken away," and the numbers of nominal Christians, who were thus led to apostatize, and of real Christians and ministers who perished by the sword of his warlike persecuting power, fulfilled the prediction, that "he cast down some of the host, and of the stars to the ground, and stamped on them." Mohammed allowed that Jesus was an eminent prophet; but he declared, that he himself was above him, and came to supply his deficiencies, and supersede his gospel. Thus he "magnified himself to the Prince of the host," and "stood up against the Prince of princes;" and his success through an amazing extent of country, in which his religion is upheld to this day, sufficiently showed, that he "cast down the truth to the ground," and that "he practised and prospered." (24) This was to take place in the latter time of the Grecian kingdom; (23) and it is well known, that the remains of the eastern empire, (properly speaking, the Grecian kingdom,) and the power of the Greek church, as distinguished from the Latin, were subverted by the Mohammedans; so that a mere skeleton of the latter has hitherto subsisted in the east. Whoever has read any part of the Koran, remarkable for sententious general obscurity; plausible, yet conveying no precise ideas; suited to impose on the ignorant and credulous, but incapable of enduring enlightened investigation; will see the propriety of the terms, "understanding dark sentences;" and the severe and overbearing requirements of its tenets, expressly enforced by the sword, surely mark out "a king of fierce countenance." Considered as a spiritual delusion, its power has been mighty, but not by its own power; not by the energy of the doctrine, or by a divine power attending it, as Christianity prevailed against all opponents; but by the sword of war. Mohammed cried, with little success, what preaching would do, but he prevailed only so far as to procure a few powerful adherents, by whose influence he raised an army, and by whose valour and prowess he soon accomplished great things. Yet his worldly policy, and that of his adherents and successors, was equal to their valour in war: and never perhaps exceeded, Is.

except by the little horn of the fourth beast, or the papal antichrist. (Note, 23—25.) Neither this little horn of the he-goat, nor the little horn of the fourth beast, sprang up at first, within the regions belonging to the Macedonian empire; in this respect the objections to each interpretation are equal: but Mohammedism soon spread from Mecca in Arabia, into Syria, and occupied locally, as well as authoritatively, the ancient dominion of the he-goat, and does the same to this day: which the popish delusion has never done at any time or in any degree. Mohammed and his successors came on numbers, who suspected no such harm; and while they promised themselves peace he prevailed against them: (25) of this Mr. Faber has adduced several remarkable instances. And finally, whatever human power has effected, or may effect, against the temporal dominion of the Mohammedan empire; the spiritual delusion will certainly be destroyed "without hand," or immediately by God himself, probably at the very time when "the man of sin" also shall be destroyed. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, 2 Thes. 2:8—12. Rev. 11:15—18. 19:11—21.)

V. 13, 14. The word rendered here "certain saint," is translated in the margin, "The Numberer of secrets," or "The wonderful Numberer;" and must mean a person of extraordinary rank, as being able to unfold those secrets which were hid from angels; and is therefore justly supposed to mean the Son of God, called the WONDERFUL COUNSELLOR, (Is. 9:6.) as being acquainted with all God's purposes and designs. John 1:18. Louth.—The difficulty, or impossibility rather, of making these two thousand three hundred years accord with the times of Antiochus, I suppose obliged the ancients to consider Antiochus as the type of Antichrist. . . . The question was asked, not only how long the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, and "the transgression of desolation" continue; but also how long the vision shall last. So the answer is to be understood; and these days, the whole time from the beginning of the vision, to the cleansing of the sanctuary. Bp. Newton.—Some difficulty is found, in determining the precise time, from which to date these two thousand three hundred years; and the case is the same, in respect of the thousand two hundred and sixty years, repeatedly stated to be the term of the desolations of the church, both by Daniel and St. John. (Notes, 12:5—13. Rev. 11:2.) "The abomination that maketh desolate" is mentioned, 11:31. A similar phrase, "for the overspreading of abominations he shall make it desolate," occurs 9:27. In both these passages, the desolating judgments brought on Jerusalem and the Jews by the idolatrous Romans, are evidently meant, and our Lord explains them in this sense, when predicting those events. (Notes, 9:25—27. v. 27. 11:31. Matt. 24:15—18, v. 15.) In those texts, no particular dates or circumstances are mentioned, which interfere with this interpretation. But the words, in this place, "the transgression of desolation;" (Marg.) are so connected with circumstances and dates, which cannot be made in any way to coincide with those events, that it is evident some other are intended. The dates in these verses must be considered in connexion with those in the twelfth chapter. "We are informed by Daniel, that "at the end of a time, and times, and half a time," or "1260 years," the restoration of the Jews will commence; and that all the matters, foretold in his preceding predictions, will be accomplished: that "from the time that the daily sacrifice shall be taken away," and "the abomination that maketh desolate set up, there shall be 1290 years," to some event or another, which however he does not specify; and that "blessed is he that waiteth, and cometh to the 1335 years," after the time when "the abomination of desolation" shall be "set up." (Dan. 12:7,11,12.) . . . Numbers, which by no efforts of calculation can be made to harmonize with the era of the siege of Jerusalem. Faber, Vol. I. 199. (Notes, 12:5—9. v. 7. 11—13.) Much more than 1335 years have passed since the siege and destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, about A. D. 70; but no extraordinary events, either as to the Jews, or in fulfilment of Daniel's prophecies, have yet occurred, or any thing to place those who lived during them in a happy situation. Bp. Newton, compelled, as it may seem, by chronological numbers, explains the prophecy in the twelfth chapter of the Mohammedan delusion: (Note, 12:11—13.) yet "the abomination, that maketh desolate" mentioned in that chapter; (12:7.) is doubtless the same as that here spoken of. "Daniel informs us, . . . that he heard a certain saint inquiring, 'How long shall be the continuance of this vision,' (which treats of) 'this daily sacrifice,' (taken away by the little horn) "and this transgression of desolation, to give both the sanctuary and the host to be trodden under foot?" The answer made to this quesable to place in one view, the reasons which have induced the author to alter his former exposition of the prophecy. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, 9-14. 11:40-43.)—No doubt the character here given of this "little horn," and the prediction of his exploits, as expositors have copiously shown in a variety of circumstances, do accord to those of the Roman Antichrist: but do they accord to him exclusively? Probably, the more any sober-minded man studies the history of Mohammedism, the fuller will be his conviction, that the features of the two delusions (as of twin sisters,) are far more alike than it is generally supposed.—"The Christian churches began very early to degenerate from their primitive purity, and to apostatize in the manner predicted by St. Paul. The apostasy, however, was long confined to individuals, nor did "the transgressors come to the full," until it was publicly authorized and upheld by the spiritual head of the catholic church. But in the year 606, when the "saints were delivered into the hand" of the papal horn, the apostasy became an embodied system; for immediately afterwards idolatry was openly and shamelessly established by the sovereign pontiff. In this year then the 1260 days commenced; "the transgressors came to the full" consequently in this year we must look for the rise of "the king." Accordingly the Mohammedan apostasy commenced in the east in the self-same year that the pope was constituted bishop of bishops, and supreme head of the church in the west. Inasmuch that Dr. Prideaux, struck with this wonderful chronological coincidence, could not refrain from exclaiming that Antichrist seemed at that time to have set both his feet on Christendom together, the one in the east, the other in the west." Faber, Vol. I. pp. 256, 257.—"The coincidence of the rise of Mohammedism, and the commencement of popery properly so called, is thus stated by Mr. Whittaker. "Daniel states the rise of Mohammed to take place, when "the transgressors are come to the full." St. Paul says that "the delusion of the Man of sin" shall be sent as a punishment because men "believed not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness," where surely the same period, (that in which the sins of the people call for judgment,) is characterized for the rise of the two powers. Now St. John assigns to each of them the same duration, and speaks of "the time of their end" as the same; and consequently they must begin at the same time; in exact correspondence with each of the separate declarations of the two former writers. Such coincidences in prophecy, of which the holy penmen themselves do not seem aware, prove, like the same in history, that the writers drew originally from the same source, with this only difference, that in the former case their information must have more than a human origin, even the operation of that "self same Spirit, who divideth to every man severally as he will." Faber, Vol. I. p. 225.

Dark sentences. (23) רִמְזֵי: Riddles, or enigmas. (See on Note, 1 Kings 10:1, 2, v. 2.) The word aptly describes the obscure and affected sublimity of the Koran.

V. 26. "The vision of the two thousand three hundred mornings and evenings, mentioned in the fourteenth verse." Louth. (Marg. Ref. Note, 13, 14.)—"The "shutting up of the vision," implies that it should not be understood of some time: and we cannot say that it was sufficiently understood, so long as Antiochus Epiphanes was taken for the little horn. . . . The vision being "for many days" must necessarily infer a longer term, than the calamity under Antiochus, of three years, or three years and a half.—Such a vision could not be called long to Daniel, who had seen so much longer before.—Two thousand three hundred years, . . . may properly enough be said to be "for many days." Bp Newton. (Marg. Ref.)

tion was "Unto 2300 days," or, as the LXX read "2400 days," or as certain copies mentioned by Jerome read, "2200 days," "then shall the sanctuary be cleansed." Bp. Newton doubts whether these prophetic days are to be calculated from the establishment of the Persian empire, from the invasion of Asia by Alexander, or from the beginning of the history of the little horn.—Whatever doubt there may be upon this point, and whatever difficulty there may be in ascertaining which of the three readings is the true one; I cannot but think, that it is sufficiently evident, both that the 1260 days are a certain part of the 2300 days, and that these two periods exactly terminate together in the self same year.—We are expressly told that the vision of the ram and the he-goat, whenever it begins, reaches to "the time of the end," "or to the last end of the indignation." (17:19.) and we are no less expressly informed that to the end of the wonders, predicted by Daniel, there shall "be three times and a half, or 1260 days." (12:7, 9.) Hence it necessarily follows, that since the period of 2300 days, and the period of 1260 days, both equally reach to "the time of the end," or to the end of the predicted wonders; they both exactly terminate together. Thus it appears that the period of 1260 days is in fact the latter part of the greater period of 2300 days. Faber, Vol. I. pp. 207-211. "The prophet represents the two-horned Medo-Persian ram, not as rising from the sea, but as standing by his river: in other words, he does not speak of the origin of the monarchy, . . . but of some period, which he does not specify, in the course of its regular and settled government. Now the Medo-Persian ram rose in the year A. C. 536. . . . He continued standing, . . . till . . . A. C. 330. . . . It appears therefore, that the date of the vision must be fixed somewhere between the year A. C. 536 . . . and the year A. C. 330." Faber, Vol. I. 228, 229. If the 1260 years, so often spoken of, began A. D. 606, they must end A. D. 1856. . . . And 2300 reckoned backward from that period, will bring us to the year A. C. 334. And though we must not place too much confidence in the exactness of such calculations, yet the main points in this argument seem unquestionable. (Note, 23-25.) It may perhaps be worthy of notice, that it is now about two thousand three hundred and seventy-three years, since Daniel had this vision; and, no doubt the end of the two thousand and three hundred days or years is not very distant.

V. 15-19. The eternal Son of God seems to have stood before the prophet, in "the appearance of a Man," and with a human voice to have called unto the angel Gabriel, to explain the vision to him. "The power to command the angel showed it was God."—But the glory of what he saw, and the overpowering influences of the prophetic Spirit, filled Daniel with terror and astonishment: so that he fell on his face and sunk into a deep sleep; till he was awakened, and raised up, and made to know what would come upon his people, in "the last end of the indignation," and about the time appointed for the termination of it. (Note, 13, 14.)—But in what sense could Antiochus's persecutions be called "the last end of the indignation," seeing the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans was to follow, and all the calamities of the Jews to this day? (Marg. Ref.)

V. 21. Grecia. Javan, Heb. whence Ionian. (Note, Gen. 10:2-5.) Greece was the chief province of this empire, from whence it had its original and name. Louth. (Note, 9-12.)

V. 22. "Four kingdoms shall be set up by Alexander's generals, who shall be of the same nation with him, although not of his posterity; nor shall they have that power or extent of dominion which he possessed." Louth. (Notes, 8. 11: 2-4.)

CHAPTER IX.

Daniel, being assured that the end of the captivity was near, fasts; and earnestly prays for the restoration of Jerusalem, 1-19. Gabriel is sent to inform him, that the city, being rebuilt, shall continue for seventy weeks of years; when the Messiah, having been cut off for the sins of his people, and the covenant confirmed with many; the legal sacrifices would be terminated, and desolating judgments overwhelm both the city and nation, 20-27.

V. 27. Daniel's fainting, sickness, and astonishment, at the prospect of the evils which he saw coming on his people and on the church, are circumstances, which confirm the supposition, that calamities of very long continuance were predicted. He, however, at length recovered his health and composure, and attended to the business, about which the king had employed him: though it seems he had only a very imperfect understanding of this extraordinary vision.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-8. As the Scriptures were written in the language of the people, to whom they were especially addressed; so ought they to be faithfully translated into the language of every country to which they are sent; that men may have free access to them, and be made wise to eternal salvation. Indeed every thing, in religion, should be made as plain as possible to the meanest capacity, and to the most illiterate; and whatever contradicts this intention savours more of the subtlety of Antichrist, than of the wisdom and simplicity of Christ.—“When holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost,” they declared future events, as if they had been eyewitnesses of the performance of them. To “this light, that shineth in a dark place, we shall do well to take heed,” until the day of glory dawn in our hearts, and “the witness in ourselves” establish at once our belief of the truth of the Scriptures, and the assurance of our own interest in the blessings there revealed. (Notes, 2 Pet. 1:19. 1 John 5:9, 10.)—The most feeble of the creatures become formidable enemies, if God be pleased to employ them against us; and it often happens, in providence as well as in grace, that “the first become last, and the last first.”—Powerful men commonly employ themselves in pushing down their neighbours, and trampling upon them: they are not willing that any should stand before or escape them; for they desire to do their own will, and become unrivalled in greatness, whatever mischiefs they bring upon others. But such men lay the axe to the root of their own greatness: they multiply enemies along with their successes; and thus others avenge the cause of the oppressed; and fulfil the righteous judgments of God; even when urged forward by their own impetuous ambition, rapacity, or resentment. When prosperous warriors thus drive furiously, and carry all before them, and millions admire their consummate valour and conduct, or their good fortune; perhaps their enterprises are little better than madness, though rendered successful by Providence, till they have reached their appointed limits; and then in the midst of their career of prosperity, they are suddenly removed; and while men dispute about the second causes of the disaster; it is plain that the great first Cause of all had no more of his plan for them to execute, and therefore he cut them off, to make room for other instruments. We perceive this clearly by comparing these prophecies with the records of their accomplishment; and we shall see it as evident in the case of others, as in that of Alexander, if we steadily exercise our faith on the word of God, and judge of every character, action, and event, by that rule.

V. 9-14. When turbulent conquerors are “suddenly broken” without remedy, the earth might be quiet, but that others arise in their stead, to keep the nations in perpetual tumult, and to drench the earth with the blood of its inhabitants.—This is an abstract of the history of mankind; nor have the pleasant lands, where the light of heavenly truth has most clearly shined, escaped these desolations.—Those who fill the earth with war, are frequently disposed to vex the church with persecution; and they often scarcely think themselves mighty in power, till they have declared war against the armies of the living God, and trampled down those, who are burning and shining lights on earth, and who shall shine as stars in the kingdom of God for ever. Whether they intend it, or not, they “magnify themselves against the King of kings, the Prince” of the holy army of martyrs, when they persecute his people. They may indeed so far prevail, as to put a stop to the public preaching of the gospel, and administration of divine ordinances; they may silence the ministers and trample on the truths and sanctuary of Christ; they may “destroy wonderfully the mighty and holy people” of God; they may unite fierceness with policy and power, “and practise and prosper;” yet their successes will have an appointed period: and when the hypocrites are detected, or cut off, and the believers are sufficiently proved and purified, they will “be broken without hand.” Many, who for a time had power given them for these purposes, have thus run their course, and perished miserably in their sins.—The two thousand and three hundred days will soon expire, when every enemy shall be destroyed, and the sanctuary cleansed; when the time of the indignation shall come to an end, and the church’s tears shall terminate in joy and praise.

V. 15-27. While some things are exceedingly plain in these prophecies, for our conviction; let us remember that difficulties still remain, among other reasons, to be a touchstone of our modesty and sincerity. If we humbly desire to understand the meaning of them, our great Prophet will lead us into it as far as is good for us: but we may be thankful to be taught by the instrumentality of men, and by the silent teaching of the Holy Spirit: for the glory even of angels, if they were to appear to us sinful worms of the earth, would scarcely be supportable; and the best of us should need much encouragement to endure their visible presence, or to hear their kindest words: at so great a distance has sin placed us from the world of spirits, to which otherwise we should have been most nearly allied! But amidst all our doubts and discouragements, on our own account, or that of the gospel, we may, if true believers, look forward with a cheerful hope of a happy event; and we should thus endeavour to compose our minds for attending on the business, to which we are severally appointed, in the church and in the world.

Astyages had the name of Ahasuerus among the Jews, as appears by a passage in Tobit, (14:15) where the taking of Nineveh is ascribed to Nebuchadanosor and Assuerus, who were the same with Nabopolassar, Nebuchadnezzar’s father, and Astyages.’ Louth.

V. 2, 3. It is probable that Daniel received the answer to his prayer which is recorded in the concluding part of this chapter, a short time before he was cast into the den of lions; and it was an excellent introduction to that trial of his faith and piety. (Notes, 6:—) He learned from the books of the prophets, especially from the writings of Jeremiah, that the desolations of Jerusalem would continue seventy years, which he understood were drawing to a conclusion. (Marg. Ref. b-d.) ‘We may observe from hence, that the prophets studied the writings of those prophets who were before them, for the more perfect understanding of the times when their prophecies were to be fulfilled.’ Louth. These seventy years were dated from the latter end of the third or beginning of the fourth year of Jehoiakim, when Daniel was carried captive, and this was the sixty-ninth of them. (See on Note, 1:1, 2.)—The prophet was considerably above eighty years of age at this time, and chief President of the whole kingdom: yet he diligently set himself to seek from God, by prayer and fasting, with every token of sorrow, humiliation, and self-denial, the performance of his promised mercy to his afflicted people, and his future blessings upon them. He had his regular hours of prayer three times a day, and we may be sure that he did not forget his people on those occasions: (Note, 6:10, 11.) yet he regarded it as a duty incumbent on servants the prophets, which spake in thy name to our kings, our princes, and our fathers, and to all the people of the land.

7 O Lord, 'righteousness 'belongeth unto thee, but 'unto us confusion of faces, as at this day: to the men of Judah, and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem, and unto all Israel, that are near, and that are far off, through all the countries whither thou hast driven them, because of their trespass that they have trespassed against thee.

8 O Lord, 'to us belongeth confusion of face, to our kings, to our princes, and to our fathers, because we have sinned against thee.

9 To 'the Lord our God belong mercies and forgivenesses, 'though we have rebelled against him;

10 Neither have we obeyed the voice of the LORD our God, to walk in his laws, 'which he set before 'us by his servants the prophets.

11 Yea, 'all Israel have transgressed thy law, even by departing, that they might not obey thy voice; therefore 'the curse is poured upon us, and the oath that is written in the law of Moses the servant of God, because we have sinned against him.

12 And he hath 'confirmed his words, which he spake against us, and against 'our judges that judged us, by bringing upon us a great evil: for 'under the whole heaven hath not been done as hath been done upon Jerusalem.

13 As 'it is written in the law of Moses, all this evil is come upon us: 'yet 'made we not our prayer before the LORD our God, 'that we might turn from our iniquities, and understand thy truth.

14 Therefore hath the LORD 'watched upon the evil, and brought it upon us: for 'the LORD our God is righteous in all his works which he doeth: for we obeyed not his voice.

15 And now, O Lord our God, 'that hast brought thy people forth out of the land of Egypt with a mighty hand, and hast 'gotten thee renowned, as at this day; 'we have sinned, we have done wickedly.

16 'O Lord, 'according to all thy righteousness, I beseech thee, let thine anger and thy fury be turned away from thy city Jerusalem, 'thy holy mountain: because for our sins and 'for the iniquities of our fathers, 'Jerusalem and thy people are become a reproach to all that are about us.

17 Now therefore, O our God, hear the prayer of thy servant, and his supplications, and 'cause thy face to shine upon 'thy sanctuary that is desolate, 'for the Lord's sake.

18 O my God, 'incline thine ear, and hear; open thine eyes, and behold our desolations, and the city 'which is called by thy name: 'for we do not 'present our supplications before thee for our righteousness, but for thy great mercies.

19 O Lord, hear; 'O Lord, forgive; O Lord, hearken and do; 'defer not, for 'thine own sake, O my God: 'for thy city and thy people are called by thy name.

V. 4. It may be supposed, that Daniel enlarged very much on these particulars, in his copious supplications, of which he has given a compendium. In these he first confessed the sins of himself and his people, and professed his belief in the terrible greatness and power of Israel's God, and his covenanted mercy and favour to those, who loved him and kept his commandments: for others were only nominal Israelites, who had forfeited their privileges by their crimes, and by impenitence and unbelief. V. 7-10. 'He sheweth that whensoever God punisheth, he doth it for just cause: and thus the godly never accuse him of rigour, as the wicked do; but acknowledge that in themselves there is just cause why he should so entreat them.'—Daniel also recollected, that abundant mercies and forgivenesses, as well as perfect justice, belonged to God: so that even the rebellious might hope in him, when brought to a sense of their guilt and danger.—The kings of Judah and Israel were dead, and there were at that time no inhabitants of Judah or Jerusalem; but the prophet considers not only the generation of Israel then living, but also the several orders of men, who, in former ages, had provoked God to pour out vengeance on the nation. He shows that the whole blame lay on them, and that they had all acted most shamefully. Some had been covered with "confusion of face," as true penitents, and the rest would inherit everlasting shame and contempt. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Note, 12:2, 3.)

the Romans, and the condition of the Jews during almost eighteen centuries, have far more exceeded all the miseries caused by the Chaldeans in taking Jerusalem, and in the Babylonish captivity, than those miseries exceeded the judgments inflicted on other nations: and, is it not then evident, that the guilt of crucifying the Messiah, and rejecting his Gospel, was immensely more atrocious, than all their previous transgressions? (Note, 25-27.)

Yet made we not, &c.] Few of the Jews, comparatively, humbly prayed for deliverance from their troubles, as expecting it from the power and mercy of God: and some, who prayed to him for help in affliction, did not seek for his converting grace, or desire to be turned from all their iniquities, and to stand before his truth and will. (Note, Jer. 31:27, 28.)

V. 15, 16. Marg. and Marg. Ref. h, i, l, n.—Thy righteousness. (16) The Lord had glorified his "righteousness" in punishing the people for their sins; but his justice would also consist with the exercise of mercy towards them, and, as he had promised to deliver and restore them, it was become in some sense an act of righteousness to do it; the honour also of his word and of his holy name required this, and it involved all the interests of truth and righteousness on earth. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Ps. 44:23-26, 79:8-13, 102:12-22. Is. 63:15-19, 64:9-12.)—Perhaps Daniel feared lest the promised blessing should be delayed, through the neglect of the people; supposing that but few of them earnestly prayed for it. (Notes, Jer. 29:11-14. Ez. 36:37.)—The humble, fervent, believing importunity of his prayer, is most admirable, and worthy of imitation.

V. 20. Marg. Ref.—My sin, &c.] Daniel's character stands so fair in Scripture, for wisdom and piety, from early youth to extreme old age, that we should scarcely have known that he was a sinner if he had not told us so: yet doubtless he was proportionably humbled before God for his sins of heart and life; and considered the continued calamities of the nation as a chastisement of his offences, as well as for those of his countrymen. (Notes, Ec. 7:19, 20. Is. 6:5, 53:4-6, v. 6. Jam. 3:1, 2, v. 2. 1 John 1:8-10, 3:4-6, v. 5.)

V. 21-23. While Daniel was thus humbling himself before God, and earnestly pleading in behalf of his people and Jerusalem, and for blessings on the church of God; the angel Gabriel, (called here "the man," because he appeared in human form,) whom he had seen in a former vision, (8:16.) came flying swiftly, as one in haste and earnest, to answer his prayers and relieve his anxiety. He touched Daniel about the time of the evening-oblation, the hour when it had been offered while the temple was standing; or at three o'clock in the afternoon: about which hour Christ our Sacrifice expired. (Marg. Ref. f. Notes, 1 Kings 18:36, 37. Acts 10:3-8, v. 3.) Probably, Daniel had spent all the former part of the day in fasting, prayer, and religious exercises, and was about to conclude for the present: but, whilst he was thus earnestly engaged, the angel "touched him," and excited his attention; informing him that he was commissioned to instruct him in the most important matters, connected with the subject of his prayers: for he had no sooner begun to pray, than the Lord commanded Gabriel to come to him; as he was a man "greatly beloved," a special favourite of heaven, even one in whom the Lord greatly delighted. (Marg. and Ref.) Therefore he should understand the plan of Providence, and be enabled to consider the vision in a satisfactory manner. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. g-k. Notes, Matt. 24:15-18, v. 15. Rev. 1:3, 22:6, 7.)—It is probable that Daniel had prayed, not only for the restoration of the Jews from captivity, and the rebuilding of the city and temple; but also, that it might be preserved from returning to those sins which had brought the calamities upon them; for the continuance of divine favour to them; and for all the blessings which were expected from the coming of the promised Messiah; and the following vision was an answer to these prayers and desires of his heart. (Note, Is. 65:24, 25, v. 24.)—Learned men have observed a near affinity between the prophecy of Daniel, and the Revelation of St. John; and we may take notice, that much the same title is given to them

V. 24. We have, in this and the following verses, one of the most undeniable prophecies of Christ, and of his coming and salvation, which is found in the whole Old Testament; and they contain the true reason, why the Jews are unwilling to call Daniel a prophet; as this prediction demonstrates that Jesus was the promised Messiah, and that they are guilty of the most obstinate unbelief, in expecting another Messiah, so many centuries after the time expressly fixed for his coming, and after the actual and undeniable accomplishment of the other parts of the same prophecy. There are indeed difficulties in expounding the passage, which have occasioned different opinions among commentators; yet all agree in the great outlines. It is universally allowed, that the seventy weeks here mentioned, mean "seventy weeks" of years; that is, four hundred and ninety years.—'Seventy weeks contain ten Jubilees; ... and denote the bringing in of the most complete Jubilee.' Louth. Were it doubted that in this chronological prophecy, express reference was intended to the year of Jubilee; it would subvert the author's opinion and arguments on that subject. (Notes, Lev. 25:8-13, 20-22.) But this is by no means certain.—This period was "determined," or decreed. (Notes, Luke 22:21-23 v. 22. Acts 4:23-28, v. 28.) During this term, the Jews would enjoy the peculiar privileges of the people of JEHOVAH; and Jerusalem being rebuilt, would retain the name of "the holy city;" but about the expiration of these years, a sacrifice would be offered, making effectual atonement for sin, superseding the necessity of the repeated legal sacrifices and sin-offerings; and thus "making an end of sins," (or "the sin-offerings,") "and making reconciliation," (or atonement,) "for iniquity, and bringing in everlasting righteousness" for the complete justification of every believer. Then the time allotted for the law and the prophets would expire: the kingdom of God would be preached: and all the visions and prophecies of the Scriptures, concerning Christ, would receive their accomplishment, in this Holy One of God being anointed by the Holy Ghost, and in all respects perfected and exalted as the Messiah. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, Is. 51:4-8, v. 6, 8. Jer. 23:5, 6. Rom. 1:17. 3:21-26. 5:11. 1 Cor. 1:26-31, v. 30. 2 Cor. 5:18-21, v. 21. Heb. 7:26-28, 9:24-26, 10:11-18.)—The marginal readings vary, in some respects, from the translation; but they do not appear material to affect the meaning.—To finish transgression.] Marg. Perhaps, "to finish transgression," means the commission of that crime by the Jewish nation, when they adopted the counsel, and followed the example of their rulers, scribes, and priests; and demanded the crucifixion of Jesus, exclaiming, "His blood be upon us and upon our children," by which the measure of their guilt was filled up. The original word is not used by Moses for any of the legal sacrifices. (Notes, Matt. 23:34-39.)—To seal up, &c.] 'To fulfil the prophecies of foregoing ages concerning the Messias, and to confirm them, by making the events to answer the prediction, as the setting of a seal confirms the authenticity of any writing.' Louth.—The word, rendered "prophecy," is prophet: (marg.) and may be understood of Christ, the great Prophet of the church, being openly preached to mankind in this character. (Notes, Deut. 18:15-19. Acts 3:22, 23.)—"The most holy," is literally "Holy of holies," an expression which usually signifies the inner sanctuary; and it is very properly applied to the Messias, who was greater than the temple: (Matt. 12:6.) because in him "dwelt the fulness of the Godhead." (Col. 2:9.) whereupon he calls his body "the Temple." (John 2:21.) Louth.

V. 25-27. The former verse gives a general view of the subject, but these enter more into particulars. The prophet ‘Messiah be cut off, but not for himself: and the people of the prince that shall come shall destroy the city and the sanctuary; and the end thereof shall be with a flood, and unto the end of the war desolations are determined.

27 And he shall confirm the covenant with many for one week: and in the midst of the week he shall cause the sacrifice and the oblation to cease, and for the overspreading of abominations he shall make it desolate, even until the consummation, and that determined shall be poured upon the desolate.

was called on to “observe and understand,” that from the “going forth of the commandment to restore Jerusalem unto the Messiah, would be seven weeks, and sixty-two weeks;” during the seven weeks the streets and walls of the city would be rebuilt, amidst much opposition, and in turbulent times. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. t-x. Notes, Neh. 3:—6:—) After the expiration of the sixty-two weeks, (making sixty-nine in all,) or in the seventieth week, the Messiah would be cut off by a violent death, but not for any offence of his own. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. y. Notes, Is. 53:4—12. 2 Cor. 5:18—21, v. 21. 1 Pet. 2:18—25, v. 24. 3:17, 18. 1 John 2:1, 2. 3:4—6, v. 5.) Then the people, of a prince who should come, would destroy both Jerusalem and the temple, and bear down all before them like a deluge of waters; for “unto the end” of that war “desolations” of the most dreadful kind “were determined upon.” (Marg. Ref. z, a, b. Notes, Is. 8:6—8. Matt. 22:1—10, v. 7. 24:6—8, 15—18, 29—31. Mark 13:14—23. Luke 21:20—28.) But before this the Messiah (“the Messenger of the covenant,” who was to be “given as a Covenant to the people,”) would “confirm the covenant with many for one week,” the last week of the seventy, whether ending at the death of Christ, as some compute, or extending to two or three years after that event, as others. For, by his own personal ministry, and afterwards by that of his apostles, multitudes of the Jews would accede to the new covenant mediated by him, and way would be made for the calling of the Gentiles also. (Marg. Ref. c. Notes, 2 Sam. 23:5. Is. 42:5—7. 55:1—3. Zech. 9:11. Mal. 3:1—4, v. 1. Heb. 8:3—6, v. 6. 7—13, v. 10. 12:22—25, v. 24. 13:20, 21.)—And his sacrifice of himself, offered during this week, (perhaps towards the middle of it,) would virtually terminate the Mosaic dispensation, and vacate the ceremonial law: so that all other sacrifices and oblations would thenceforth be in every respect inefficacious. (Marg. Ref. d. See on Note, 24.) But the Jewish nation in general, adhering to these sacrifices, and scornfully rejecting that of the Messiah; would, in consequence, see the idolatrous standards of hostile invaders, (which they justly counted “an abomination,”) appear in the land and about Jerusalem; as a token of the desolations which were about to overspread the whole city and country, and to pursue the devoted inhabitants; till all the vengeance which had been determined and predicted, had been poured out upon them; and by the destruction of Jerusalem and the temple, the sacrifices there offered would actually be caused to cease. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. e, f. Notes, 7:13, 14. 11:31. 12:11—13. Matt. 24:15—18, v. 15.)—They were no longer “shadows of good things to come,” instituted acts of worship, and ‘means of grace.’ Commemoration immediately succeeded to prefiguration; Christian ordinances to Levitical; and from the time when Jesus expired on the cross, when “the veil of the temple was rent,” the dispensation of the Messiah superseded that of Moses, the whole of which became as a cancelled bond. (Note, Col. 2:13—16.) This seems a general outline of the events here foretold; and historical records sufficiently show its general accomplishment, though some difficulty in subordinate matters may still remain.—^a There are four edicts recorded in Scripture, to which these words, (“the going forth of the commandment, &c.”) ‘may seem applicable; viz. the edict in the first year of Cyrus, (Ezra 1:1.) in the second of Darius, (Ezra 6:1. Hag. 1:1.) in the seventh of Artaxerxes, (Ezra 7:7.) and in the twentieth. (Neh. 1:2.)—There are some things in the prediction which, when duly adverted to, give good ground for passing by the two first edicts. And as to the two last, it has been well observed, . . . that Christ’s death happened seventy weeks of solar years after one of them, and as many weeks of lunar years after the other. . . . The two first edicts speak only about the rebuilding of the temple, . . . without one word about rebuilding the city; whereas the prediction speaks about an edict for “rebuilding the city, and the walls and streets of it,” without one word about rebuilding the temple; though in foretelling the second destruction of the city, that of the temple is also mentioned. . . . But the third edict, that of the seventh of Artaxerxes, though it does not contain the very expressions of Daniel’s prediction; yet it contains things to which these expressions are . . . applicable. . . . Sir Isaac Newton justly observes, that the dispersed Jews became a people and a city, when they returned into . . . body politic; and that was in the seventh year of Artaxerxes Longimanus; when Ezra, . . . by the king’s commission, erected magistrates all over the land, to govern the people according to the law of God and of the king; under Ezra they first became a polity or city by a government of their own. . . . But there is another character, which is perhaps yet more decisive. According to the prediction, the edict . . . must be only seven weeks before completing the building of the city: for one and the same event, viz. the appearance of the Messiah, which is placed only sixty-two weeks after the building, is placed only sixty-nine after the edict: which demonstrates, that the distance between the edict and the building could be no more than seven weeks. . . . Now the two first edicts were made long before; . . . for in the twentieth of Artaxerxes, (above eighty years after the latest of those edicts,) it was told Nehemiah that the wall was broken down, the gates burnt with fire, and the place of his father’s sepulchres lay waste.’ Maclaurin. The date of the going forth of the decree to restore and rebuild Jerusalem, cannot therefore be reckoned from the time of Cyrus’s decree, or that of Darius. It is generally fixed to the commission granted to Ezra by Artaxerxes in the seventh year of his reign; though some prefer the commission granted to Nehemiah by the same prince, in his twentieth year, and so reckon the years by the shorter computation. But as the lunar years were made to coincide with the solar by intercalary months; in order to the due observance of the sacred festivals, (Note, Lev. 23:4.) this computation seems inadmissible, and solar years must be intended. The former, therefore, seems much more satisfactory; and is only objected to because Nehemiah’s commission especially related to the rebuilding of the walls of Jerusalem; whereas Ezra’s was of a more general nature. But the expressions here used may be understood figuratively, of resettling the whole Jewish constitution in church and state, which Ezra began and Nehemiah carried on or finished; as well as of rebuilding and fortifying the city. The most eminent chronologers compute it to have been nearly four hundred and ninety years from the commission granted to Ezra, to the death of Christ; and some contend that it was so with the greatest exactness.—This period was divided into three subordinate ones. During seven weeks, or forty-nine years, “the street and wall,” or rampart, (marg.) were to be “built in troublous times.” This takes in the space that intervened between the granting of Ezra’s commission, and the completion of Nehemiah’s work, (as recorded in the last chapter of his book, and which contains the last history in the Old Testament,) or perhaps some time longer. From the return of the Jews, in virtue of Cyrus’s decree, till the days of Artaxerxes Longimanus, (though the temple had been rebuilt, and some parts of the city,) the affairs of the Jews continued in great disorder, both as to the state of the city, and the regulation of their civil and religious concerns. From Ezra’s commission, however, they began to assume a more promising aspect; and, notwithstanding the troubles excited by various enemies, matters were at length brought into better order, both as to the temple and its worship, and as to the police and defence of the city; and the state was guarded with wholesome laws impartially executed. These things were accomplished in troublesome times, as the histories of Ezra and Nehemiah show; but afterwards the nation became populous and powerful, and Jerusalem very strong and almost impregnable. These were the events that occurred in the first seven weeks; and from the expiration of that term to the beginning of the gospel by the ministry of John the Baptist, as some compute, or to that of our Lord, were four hundred and thirty-four years, or sixty-two weeks; and the last week, or seven years, is allotted to the ministry of John and of Christ himself, until his crucifixion: for he was to be cut off after “the seven and the sixty-two weeks,” or in the seventieth week; but as it is said that “in the midst,” or in the half part “of the week,” he would cause the sacrifice to cease; some conclude, that the last week extended beyond his crucifixion, to the time when the gospel began to be preached to the Gentiles also. We cannot, however, be absolutely certain in respect of minute calculations: but whether before, or just after the death of Christ, every thing was done within this last week, or seven years, which was requisite for introducing the gospel dispensation, for confirming the new covenant of grace, and for the calling of multitudes to partake of its blessings. The legal sacrifices then lost their obligation and efficacy; the condemnation of the Jewish nation was denounced and ratified by Christ himself; and preparation was soon made for its execution, though it was not fully completed till about forty years afterwards: these intermediate years being like the time which intervenes between the condemnation and the execution of a malefactor. Those insurrections, however soon began, which induced the Romans to make war upon the Jews. Then their armies under Vespasian and Titus, erected their idolatrous standards in the holy land and sur-

CHAPTER X.

Daniel, after long mourning and fasting, has a vision, the glory of which overpowers him, 1-9. An angel comforts and strengthens him; and, noticing the opposition of the prince of Persia, the assistance of Michael, and the coming of the prince of Grecia, promises him further information, 10-21.

rounded Jerusalem; the city was besieged, taken, and desolated, and left to be trodden down by the Gentiles; immense multitudes perished miserably; the temple was destroyed by the soldiers, contrary to the orders of the general; the remnant of the Jews were dispersed through all nations; and those judgments "were poured out" as an irresistible deluge on that people, which have continued to this day. Thus the general interpretation is plain, notwithstanding some difficulties.—It is very useful to observe, that (supposing all these things to be real causes of some kind of obscurity; namely, of that obscurity which is impenetrable by superficial attention, but is consistent with convincing evidence upon due search,) the veil of apparent obscurity, which distinguishes prophecy from history, is a proof of wise contrivance; ... seeing what on first view increases the obscurity, on due inquiry, increases the evidence, and determines the meaning of the prediction. Maclaurin.—Indeed inattention to the words of the prophecy itself has been the chief cause of those differences of opinion, which prevail in explaining it; it contains internal characters, which, carefully noted, fix the time of its accomplishment very satisfactorily.—It is, however, undeniable, that Daniel foretold that the Messiah would come within less than five hundred years from a decree granted for rebuilding Jerusalem; he showed that he would be put to death by a legal sentence; (for so the word implies;) and he expressly predicted, that in consequence, Jerusalem and the temple would be desolated, and the nation of the Jews exposed to tremendous punishments, of which no termination is mentioned. Within that time, Jesus of Nazareth appeared; he answered in every respect to the description given of him by all the prophets: he was put to death as a deceiver; yet vast multitudes became his disciples, and Christianity gained a permanent establishment. After a time, Jerusalem and the temple were destroyed; and the state of the Jews to this day is a striking comment on this prediction. How can it then be denied that Daniel spake by divine inspiration? or that Jesus is the promised Messiah? Both these important points might be fully demonstrated by this one prophecy, even if it stood single: how much more when it is only one star, so to speak, in a resplendent constellation; or one among a great number of predictions, all of which combine with united evidence to demonstrate the same grand truths!

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-5. Those who were in ancient times most eminent in wisdom and piety, and favoured with most frequent communications from heaven, paid the greatest reverence to the written word of God: and spiritual pride, or enthusiasm, alone renders men regardless of this sacred standard, because of superior knowledge or supposed new revelations; for the genuine Spirit of prophecy would have a directly contrary effect.—The most exalted in rank, and they who are most occupied in important employments, are under greater obligations, and have more urgent need than other men, to spare time for the study of the Scriptures and prayer.—The promises of God are intended to encourage our petitions for their accomplishment. No personal ease or prosperity can render the believer regardless of the desolations, or indifferent about the prosperity of Zion: and no constancy in stated exercises of devotion should prevent us from sometimes setting apart extraordinary seasons for prayer and fasting; that we may more deeply humble ourselves before God for our sins, and those of our people; and with more earnest and undivided attention, seek his blessings on our undertakings and on his cause. Nor will the aged believer, if growing in grace, and not prevented by bodily infirmities, excuse himself from these self-denying and humiliating duties.—Our addresses to the Lord our God should always be attended with humble confessions of our own unworthiness, and reverential awe of his holy, great, and terrible majesty; even whilst we plead before him, as "the God who keepeth covenant and mercy with his people." Love to him, shown by obeying his commandments, is the proper evidence that we are interested in these blessings: nor can those who live in sin, and are conscious that they "have committed iniquity, and done wickedly, and recoiled in departing from his precepts," take comfort from his covenant and mercy till they repent and seek forgiveness, and have their hearts thus influenced to love and obey him. But, such as freely confess their sins, and labour for language to express their sense of the malignity and multitude of their transgressions, give a hopeful evidence, that they are prepared for returning peace, and for a gracious answer to all their supplications.

V. 6-19. No rank or order of men in the community is free from blame, in respect to the accumulation of national guilt; and if kings or princes refuse to hearken to the faithful ministers of God; they render the mercy of God, in thus warning them, an occasion of deeper guilt and condemnation.—In all our sufferings we should acknowledge the justice of the Lord, and that he is glorious even in our punishment; and that shame and confusion of face are our portion, as we have sinned away our mercies and exposed ourselves to his severe rebukes. Yet we must not yield to despondency: for "to the Lord our God belong mercies and forgivenesses, though we have rebelled against him;" nay, his pardoning grace is even greater than all our crimes. He will indeed execute his threatened judgments on guilty nations, and pour out his curse on impenitent sinners, according as it is written in the book of the law: he will thus establish his word, which he has spoken against the wicked, in bringing a great evil upon them, even far greater than befell Jerusalem: and so long as men neglect prayer, or do not pray "to be turned from their iniquities, and to be made to understand the truth" of God, he will "watch upon the evil to bring it upon them," being "righteous in all his works." Yet he is ever ready to deliver those, who humble themselves before him and call upon him, and to exert that power which he so gloriously displayed, when he brought Israel out of Egypt.—When we humbly confess our sins, and plead his promises, and beseech him "for the honour of his name" and the credit of his cause, to help and deliver us, that Jerusalem may not become a reproach, we may confidently expect in due time an answer of peace: and we never pray more acceptably, than when we are satisfied about our own concerns, and earnestly entreat our God and Father to "cause his face to shine on his sanctuary, for the sake" of Christ "the Lord our righteousness;" and when we "present our supplications before him, not for our righteousnesses, but for his great mercies."

V. 20-27. The fervent and importunate cries of zealous Christians are well pleasing to the Lord: he will "forgive, and hearken, and do;" whilst they are speaking he is preparing an answer; and all his angels, though invisible, are his ministering spirits to convey blessings to "the heirs of salvation." They fly swiftly to execute every one of his commands; but they especially delight in performing kind services to praying souls: who, being accepted in Christ, are "greatly beloved," in proportion to the degree in which the resemble him and seek his glory.—The Lord gives skill and understanding in answer to prayer, and they who well consider his words, shall receive instruction in every thing which concerns them.—All blessings bestowed on sinners centre in Christ, and come to them through his all-sufficient atoning sacrifice: and the most eminent believers need frequently to be reminded to look off from forms, and types, and shadows, and outward privileges, unto the anointed Holy One, who was cut off by an ignominious execrating death, "suffering once for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God." Thus he finished whatever the types prefigured, the prophets foretold, or the justice of God and the honour of the law required, in order to the pardoning and subduing of our transgressions, the atoning for our iniquity, our reconciliation to God, our everlasting righteousness and sanctification. Here is the Foundation of our hope, our "Fountain opened for sin and uncleanness," our Way of access to the throne of grace, and our entrance into heaven. This seals the sum of prophecy, and confirms the covenant with many; and whilst we rejoice in the blessings of salvation, we should remember the groans which the purchase of them cost our Redeemer.—But "how can they escape, who neglect so great salvation?" The desolations of Jerusalem, and the slaughter or long-continued dispersion of the Jews, by "the overspreading of abomination," and the pouring out of divine vengeance on the murderers of Christ, not only evince the truth of the Scriptures, but loudly warn others not to copy so fatal an example.—When the Lord commands, the city will be builded, and its prosperity secured, even in turbulent times, and at his word desolations rush in like a flood, from which no outward privileges can defend us: but the streets and walls of the true Jerusalem, which has been so long building in troublesome times, will at length be completed by the ruin of every adversary; and "peace will be

NOTES.—CHAP. X. V. 1. This chapter begins Daniel's last vision, which he had about four years after the preceding one. It is continued to the end of the book; and it is stated, that as the things revealed would certainly take place, so the time would be long before they would all be accomplished. To the death of Antiochus Epiphanes, of whom exclusively many interpret the latter part of the vision; no more than three hundred and seventy years intervened; and Daniel had predicted events vastly more remote; but on another interpretation, which is supported by the highest authorities, and by the most conclusive reasonings, it will appear that many parts of this vision are not yet accomplished, and indeed that they look forward almost to the end of time: and thus Daniel himself seems to have understood them. (Marg. and Marg. Ref.) "And he understood the matter, and knowledge was unto him by the vision." Thus the concluding words may be literally rendered: he acquired much knowledge of these events, in addition to what he had before, by this vision; though some things still remained obscure to him. (12:8.)

The time appointed, &c. צָבַר. The time of warfare was long, or great. (Job 7:1. Marg.) The severe conflict, which the true church of the living God would sustain against successive powerful and malignant enemies, seems peculiarly noted by this term. (Notes, Gen. 3:14,15. 2 Cor. 10:1—6. 2 Tim. 4:6—8.)

V. 2, 3. Daniel had been at this time seventy-three years in captivity, and could not be less than ninety years of age; yet he spent three weeks in mournfully humbling himself before God.—It is probable, that he was greatly affected, at witnessing the backwardness of the Jews to avail themselves of Cyrus's proclamation; perhaps fearing, lest his example, in serving the king of Persia, should be misunderstood by them. He doubtless would also hear, from time to time, discouraging accounts of the difficulties, which his brethren in Judea had to encounter: and many think, that machinations were then carrying on against them in the Persian court, which might throw still greater obstacles and discouragements in their way. (Notes, Ezra 4:.) But, whatever induced him thus to observe so long a season of fasting and prayer, he abstained, during the whole time from all relishing food, and from wine, subsisting on bread and vegetables, drinking only water, and avoiding the use of those ointments and other indulgences, which his station and time of life seemed to render necessary. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, 1:3—16.)

—This was very different from the fads of later ages, in which men indeed abstain from flesh; but eat other delicacies, and drink strong liquors without prohibition or scruple.

Full weeks. (2) "Weeks of days." Marg. This distinguishes them from the weeks of years, in the foregoing chapter. (Note, 9:24.)

V. 4—9. Part of the time of Daniel's fasting must have coincided with the season, appointed for the passover and the feast of unleavened bread, which took up from the fourteenth to the twenty-first of the first month: but the passover could not be observed, in any other place than Jerusalem; and the distressed state of the nation rendered fasting peculiarly proper at that time.—Hiddekel, or Tigris, was near Shushan, where, it is probable, Daniel at that time resided. (Marg. Ref. 1, k.) Whilst he was walking on the banks of that river, or contemplation or devotion, with attendants at a distance, he lifted up his eyes, and saw one in the form of a man, who could be no other than "the Son of God."—The description St. John gives of Christ, as High-Priest of the church, (Rev. 1:15.) seems to be taken from this place of Daniel; which proves that the person here described can be no other than the Son of God; which may be further confirmed by comparing the person described here, and 12:6,7, with Rev. 10:2, 5,6, who is there represented as setting his right foot on the sea, and his left upon the land, as sovereign Lord of both elements. (Matt. 28:19.) Louth. (Notes, 12:5—9. Rev. 1:12—20. 10:2—7.) His priestly garment of linen was an emblem of his purity, and the equity of his administration, and the excellency of his mediatorial work. His girdle, of the finest gold, might denote his faithfulness to his word, and readiness to perform all things which he had undertaken for his church: "his body, like the beryl," might signify his heavenly beauty and excellency: his face as lightning, and "his eyes as lamps of fire," might show the terror of his frown, and his discernment and knowledge of all hearts and all events; "his arms and feet, as polished brass," might imply his glorious power, as engaged to defend and support his people, and to tread down their enemies: and "the voice of his words, like the voice of a multitude," might signify the extensive efficacy of his word to save or to destroy. (Marg. Ref. 1—s. Notes, Ez. 1:15—25, v. 24. 26—28. 10:3—7.)—Daniel alone saw the vision of this glorious Person; for his attendants were so alarmed, that they fled to hide themselves: and even he was so overwhelmed by it, as to be deprived of strength and courage; and his countenance was changed to a pallid and ghastly hue, like that of a corpse. Yet was he not wholly incapacitated for hearing the words of the Lord, though he lay prostrate on the ground in humble adoration of his glorious majesty; his senses and faculties being closed from all other objects as in a deep sleep. (Marg. Ref. 1—a. Notes, 15—19. 8:15—19. Matt. 17:1—4. Acts 9:7—9.)

V. 10—14. Whilst Daniel lay prostrate on the earth, "an hand touched" him; this seems to have been a created angel, and not the Son of God: and the prophet was lifted upon his knees and hands, that he might attend to the vision. The angel encouraged him as before, (9:23,) by assuring him, that he was peculiarly dear to the Lord; and called on him to understand, or attend to, what he was about to speak, and to stand up for that purpose; as he was sent to give him important information. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. b—d.) Thus excited, Daniel "arose, and stood trembling;" and the angel proceeded to encourage him to lay aside his terrors, for which he had no cause: for since "the first day, that he set his heart to understand" the causes of his people's calamities, and what would be the event of them; and to chasten, or rather humble, himself by fasting and mortification; (Marg. Ref. h. Note, Ps. 35:13,14,) his prayers were heard: and the angel was now come to him on that account. But he had been employed during the three weeks of Daniel's fasting and prayer, in warding off the mischief, which was rising against his people in the Persian court.—The "prince of the kingdom of Persia" cannot mean Cyrus, who was friendly to the Jews; but his son Cambyses, who managed affairs in his father's absence upon some expedition, and who was set against the Jews by their enemies, might be intended; and the angel had been so long watching over his designs, in order to defeat them. (Marg. Ref. i, j. Note, Ezra 4:4—6.)—But many think an evil angel was meant, who presided, under "the god of this world," over that department, to watch his opportunity of doing mischief to the church. (Notes, Zech. 3:1—4. Eph. 6:10—13. 1 Thes. 2:17—20, v. 18. Rev. 12:3—6.) Some indeed explain it, of the guardian angel, intrusted with the care of Persia: but it is palpably absurd to suppose one holy angel set to oppose another holy angel: and indeed the interpretation, which introduces presiding angels, holy or unholy, seems to have little or no scriptural ground to rest on. (Notes, 20:21. 11:39.) The angel, however, who spake to Daniel, was detained all this time to defeat the machinations of the enemies of Israel; and yet could 13 But the prince of the kingdom of Persia withstood me one and twenty days: but lo, ¹Michael, one of the chief princes, came to help me; and I remained there with the kings of Persia.

14 Now I am come to make thee understand what shall befall thy people in the latter days: for yet ^mthe vision is for many days.

15 And when he had spoken such words unto me, ¹I set my face toward the ground, and I became dumb.

16 And behold, one like the similitude of the sons of men touched my lips: then I opened my mouth, and spake, and said unto him that stood before me, O my lord, by the vision my sorrows are turned upon me, and I have retained no strength.

17 For how can the servant of this my lord talk with this my lord? for as for me, straightway there remained no strength in me, neither is there breath left in me.

18 Then there came again and touched me one like the appearance of a man, and he strengthened me, 19 And said, O man greatly beloved, fear not: peace be unto thee, be strong, yea, be strong. And when he had spoken unto me, I was strengthened, and said, Let my lord speak; for thou hast strengthened me.

20 Then said he, Knowest thou wherefore I come unto thee? and now will I return to fight with the prince of Persia: and when I am gone forth, lo, the prince of Grecia shall come.

21 But I will show thee that which is noted in the scripture of truth: and there is none that holdeth with me in these things, but Michael thy prince.

not have prevailed, but that Michael, one of the chief princes, (whom many think to denote Christ,) came to his assistance, (Marg. and Ref. i-k. Notes, 20, 21, v. 21. 12:1. Jude 9, 10. Rev. 12:7-12, v. 7.) while employed to watch the measures of the Persian rulers: but he was at that time sent to make known to Daniel what would befall his people in remote future ages, even "in the latter days." (Marg. Ref. l, m.)

V. 15-19. This angel who was helped by Michael, or the whole scene before him, appeared so awful and glorious to Daniel, that he was astonished and struck dumb by what he saw and heard: but one like to a man, touched his lips, and then he was enabled to speak; and he complained, that instead of deriving comfort from the vision, his sorrows were renewed by it, and he was utterly overcome; for how could the poor servant endure to speak with his glorious Lord? so that it was no wonder that he was left fainting and breathless. Again therefore one touched him, in appearance as a man; and communicated strength to him; and then the prophet was enabled to hear the words which he spake to him. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, 4-9. Job 40:3-5. 42:1-6, v. 5, 6. Is. 6:1-7. Hab. 3:16.)

How can, &c. (17) "How can the servant of this my Lord, talk with that my Lord?" that is, the other person that first appeared to me with so majestic a presence, at whose sight I was perfectly confounded. Louth.—This supposes, at least with probability, that the angel mentioned in the preceding verses, is here meant; not that glorious Person before described, but an angel deputed by him.—O man, &c. (19) "Thou needest not be under such terrible apprehensions, as if this vision did portend thee some mischief: . . . for it is a peculiar token of God's favour to thee. (Judg. 6:22. 13:22.)" Louth.

V. 20, 21. The angel next inquired, whether Daniel well understood for what purpose he came to him. Thus reminding him, that he was sent to instruct him concerning the things which would befall his people: but when he had executed this commission he would return back, and continue to counteract the devices of the Persian kings against the Jews, and of the powers of darkness, as working in and by them, even till that monarchy should terminate; by which many fatal effects would be prevented, and many troubles averted. And when that commission was executed, the prince of Grecia would come; or the Macedonian empire, under Alexander and his successors, would be established, and the chief danger and trouble to the Jews would arise from that quarter. But he would proceed more fully to open and enlarge on the prophecies of the former Scriptures to the same effect; or rather to show what was written in the book of God's secret purposes, of which all prophecies are as an abstract.—God's decrees are spoken of, as if they were committed to writing, and registered in a book. . . . (Deut. 32:34. Ps. 56:8. Is. 65:6. Mal. 3:16.) Louth. But Daniel might be assured, that he had not one friend in the court of Persia, who would concur with the angel to forward the prophet's designs in behalf of his people, but Michael their Prince; and that he must depend on him alone to disappoint the devices which were forming against them.—This forms the introduction to the prophecies in the next chapters, which were not proposed as emblems, but in plain language.—A great deal is advanced by respectable expositors on these verses, about tutelary and guardian angels, presiding over different countries, as if they strove one against another, each for his favourite country. This may indeed consist with either paganism or popery, but it is utterly incompatible with Christianity. The passage is allowed to be difficult: but perhaps careful consideration may allow the interpretation above given to be satisfactory. Daniel was chief president in Persia: yet, not one of the princes or counsellors of that empire, cordially united with him in doing good to the Jews: he must therefore look above, to Michael their Prince, and his mighty angels, who would at length effect a revolution, by turning the dominion from Persia to Greece, which would be more favourable to the Jews, than Persia in after times. PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

This world will continue to be a vale of tears, to the greatest and best of men, as long as they live in it; for when they are most exempted from personal trials, they often see most cause to mourn over the calamities of the church, and the sins which occasion them. When we duly lay these things to heart, and diligently seek to understand on what account God contends with us, or his people; and, as consciously guilty, afflict and humble ourselves by self-denial in things lawful, disrelishing earthly comforts, while such important concerns engross our attention; we may expect peculiar answers to our prayers.—The more we delight in communion with God, the less we shall be attached to the pleasures of sense; and the more willing we shall be to forego them; that we may be at liberty for nobler joys.—They, who accustom themselves in youth to self-denial, will find it less grievous when they grow old: and in all cases, fasting, temperance, meditation, and prayer, are happy means of obtaining discoveries of the glory of Christ to our souls. But we are better fitted to receive these discoveries by faith, than to behold, with our bodily eyes, the refulgency of his personal and mediatorial excellences: and the secret defence and support of his providence and grace are more suited to our state in this world; than the thunder of his power manifested in our behalf, or his majestic word audibly spoken to us. (Notes, Ez. 19:16-20. 20:18-20. Deut. 5:22-29. Heb. 12:15-24.) Our frail and vile bodies are not able to support such glorious displays; nor will be, till "mortality shall be swallowed up of life;" the least intimations of the visions of God would fill us with terror; nor could we behold them, (unless supernaturally supported,) without being overwhelmed with astonishment, and even reduced to corruption. We may then be thankful to be spoken to by men like ourselves, and by the small still voice of his teaching and comforting Spirit: and we should learn, from these records, to adore the unseen glorious majesty of God our Saviour, and to be humbled under the sense of our meanness and sinfulness; seeing one of the best beloved of our race could not find courage and strength, even to converse with a ministering spirit of the world above, in whom he saw such superior excellence and glory. The Lord will, however, support his servants under the discoveries of his majesty, and the sense of their own vileness, and he will prepare them to hear his word: when he has cast them down, he will again raise them up, and make them know that he has loved them: and he will gradually turn their trembling and sorrow into holy joy and confidence in him.—When we judge, and humble, and chasten ourselves before God, we are most likely to escape his chastening.—While Satan, and his angels, and various evil counsellors, excite princes to devise mischief against his church; we may rejoice that Christ our Prince, and all "his mighty angels," hold with us in these things, and counteract the machinations of our enemies: but we ought not, by any means, to expect that many others will favour us, in this evil world, or in the courts of the princes of this world. All things, however, which are written in the Scriptures of truth, will certainly be accomplished, and the whole counsel of God shall be established.—Our prayers are often in a way

A prediction of the Persian empire being overthrown by the Grecian, and the Grecian divided into four parts, 1-4. A prophecy of the kings of the south and of the north, through several generations, 5-30: and of the dominion, success, and destruction of powers hostile to the people of God, 31-45.

ALSO I, in the first year of Darius the Mede, even I, stood to confirm and to strengthen him.

2 And now will I show thee the truth. Behold, there shall stand up yet three kings in Persia; and the fourth shall be far richer than they all: and by his strength through his riches, he shall stir up all against the realm of Grecia.

3 And a mighty king shall stand up, that shall rule with great dominion, and do according to his will.

4 And when he shall stand up, his kingdom shall be broken, and shall be divided toward the four winds of heaven; and not to his posterity, nor according to his dominion which he ruled: for his kingdom shall be plucked up, even for others besides those.

5 ¶ And the king of the south shall be strong, and one of his princes; and he shall be strong above him, and have dominion; his dominion shall be a great dominion.

6 And in the end of years they shall join them-of being effectually answered, before we have any assurance of their being accepted: let us then "not be weary of well-doing," but continue in prayer, and we shall certainly prevail if we faint not.

NOTES.—CHAP. XI. V. 1. The angel here continues his discourse; and, to what he had before said of his superintending the affairs of Persia, (Note, 10:20, 21,) he adds, that in the first year of Darius, (when perhaps it was debated whether the Jews should be liberated or not,) he was employed to confirm and establish him in his favourable dispositions. This measure was then in contemplation, but it was not determined on till after the death of Darius, and the succession of Cyrus. (Marg. Ref. Note, Ezra 1:1-4.)

V. 2-4. 'I will show thee the succession of the Persian and Grecian empire, in plain and naked truth, not in symbolical or figurative representations, as it was showed before.' Louth. (Marg. Ref. c.)—The memorable events, which were revealed to Daniel, in the vision of the ram and the he-goat, are here again more clearly and explicitly revealed, in his last vision, by an angel: so that this latter prophecy may, not improperly, be said to be a comment and explanation of the former. Bp. Newton. (Notes, 7:6. 8:5-7.)—The three kings of Persia, here mentioned, were Cambyse, the son of Cyrus: Smerdis the Magian, who falsely pretended to be another of his sons; and Darius Hystaspis who married Cyrus's daughter. (Notes, Ezra 4:4-9, 17-24.) Xerxes the son of this Darius was the fourth king in Persia, after Cyrus, who, having inherited, or acquired, riches immense beyond conception, stirred up all his subjects and allies to invade Greece. For this expedition, he collected the largest army that is read of in history, consisting, altogether, of more than five millions of men; besides the Carthaginians, and others, whom he excited to war against the Grecians in other quarters. But, though this tremendous invasion exceedingly wasted Greece: yet it was resisted by a very small number of the inhabitants, with the most determined valour, and the most decided success. The Persian troops were shamefully routed and dispersed, incredible numbers perished, and Xerxes returned home in disgrace, and almost unattended. This was one of the most memorable expeditions recorded in history: and it gave rise to those long wars, and that inveterate hatred, between the Greeks and Persians, which ended in the subversion of the Persian empire by Alexander. So that the prophecy, touching upon the principal events, passes over the nine subsequent Persian kings from Xerxes to the time of Alexander, as less worthy of notice; and contrasts his successful expedition against Persia, with Xerxes's unsuccessful invasion of Greece. Alexander is here called "a mighty king, who should stand up, and rule with great dominion, and do according to his will;" which implies, not only his extensive conquests and absolute authority; but his capricious tyranny, which cost some of his most faithful followers their lives when they ventured to oppose his inclinations. But when he had acquired the summit of success, power, and renown, he was suddenly cut off; and his dominions were divided into four parts, not to his posterity, but to his captains; who did not equal the honour of his kingdom, which was thus "plucked up," for the benefit of others, and not of his own family.—The natural brother, and the sons, with the mother selves together; for the king's daughter of the south shall come to the king of the north to make an agreement; but she shall not retain the power of the arm; neither shall he stand, nor his arm: but she shall be given up, and they that brought her, and he that begat her, and he that strengthened her in these times.

7 But out of a branch of her root shall one stand up in his estate, which shall come with an army, and shall enter into the fortress of the king of the north, and shall deal against them, and shall prevail:

8 And shall also carry captives into Egypt their gods, with their princes, and with their precious vessels of silver and of gold; and he shall continue more years than the king of the north.

9 So the king of the south shall come into his kingdom, and shall return into his own land.

10 But his sons shall be stirred up, and shall assemble a multitude of great forces: and one shall certainly come, and overflow, and pass through: then shall he return, and be stirred up, even to his fortress.

11 And the king of the south shall be moved with choler, and shall come forth and fight with him, even with the king of the north: and he and wife, of Alexander, in about fifteen years, perished, chiefly by treachery and murder; and then no remains of his family were left: and his captains, after many destructive wars, were all destroyed or reduced, except four, who became heads of four subordinate kingdoms. "Cassander reigned in Greece and the west, Lysimachus in Thrace and the north, Ptolemy in Egypt and the south, and Seleucus in Syria and the east." Bp. Newton. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 2:39. 7:5, 6, 8, 8, 22.)

V. 5. The dominions of Alexander were divided into four parts: but two of these kings soon became more eminent than the others, and often seized upon a great part of their dominions: namely the kings of Egypt and of Syria, called, in this prophecy, the kings of the south and of the north, as Egypt lay to the south, and Syria to the north, of Judea. These two kingdoms alone are noticed in what follows: because Judea lay between them, and was affected by their contests and transactions.—This verse is rather obscure: it is, however, generally allowed to mean, that Ptolemy Lagus king of Egypt would soon become powerful, as one of Alexander's princes: but that another of them, even Seleucus Nicator, king of Syria, would be strong above him; for he was the conqueror of the conquerors, and gained the ascendancy over them, engrossed a very large proportion of Alexander's dominions, and outlived all his competitors. (Marg. Ref.) "The king of the south shall be strong; and one of his princes shall be strong above him, and shall rule with great dominion." Sept.

V. 6. Antiochus Soter succeeded Seleucus Nicator, and was succeeded by Antiochus Theus, in the kingdom of Syria: and Ptolemy Philadelphus reigned in Egypt after his father Ptolemy Lagus. During this time, there were frequent wars between these neighbouring and rival monarchs. But at length they entered into a treaty of peace; to confirm which Antiochus agreed to put away his wife Laodice with her sons, and to marry Berenice the daughter of Ptolemy. Thus "the daughter of the king of the south came to the king of the north," to make an agreement with him, and brought with her an immense dowry. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. n, o.) But she could not retain the power of the arm, the interest which she had acquired: for Antiochus recalled Laodice, and put away Berenice; and Laodice, fearing another change, poisoned her husband, and caused Berenice to be murdered with her attendants. So that Antiochus himself could not stand his ground, or retain his power: and Berenice was delivered to destruction, and those that brought her, and he "whom she had brought forth," or her son: (for so the words are generally rendered;) nor was her father able to defend her, for he died about the same time. Such were the consequences of this disastrous marriage and alliance. (Marg. and Ref. p.)

V. 7-9. Ptolemy Euergetes, brother to Berenice, "a branch out of the same root," standing up in his father's estate, came with a great army to avenge his sister's death on Seleucus Callinicus, son of Laodice, who had succeeded to the throne of Syria. And he entered forcibly into the fortress, or strongest places, of that kingdom, and easily prevailed against Seleucus. So that when a sedition in Egypt recalled him home, he carried away with him many captives; and not only the nobles, but the gods, of Syria were thus brought into Egypt. It is said that he took home with him no less than two thousand five hundred idols; among which were some, which Cambyes had formerly carried out of Egypt; and for this service the superstitious Egyptians honoured him with the title of Euergetes, or the Benefactor. With these captive princes and images, he also carried off immense treasures; and, having avenged himself on Seleucus, he continued more years than he, surviving him four or five years, and remaining unmolested in his own kingdom. (Marg. and Marg. Ref.)

V. 10-12. Seleucus Ceraunus, and Antiochus the Great, the sons of Seleucus Calinicus, were stirred up to war against the king of Egypt, in hopes of recovering the territories which had been taken from their father. But Ceraunus was poisoned by one of his discontented captains; and Antiochus was left to pursue the war alone. This circumstance was marked in the prophecy; for after mention had been made of "his sons," it is added "He," or one of them, "shall certainly come, &c." Ptolemy Philopater had succeeded Euergetes, his father, in the kingdom of Egypt, before these events took place; and Antiochus made war upon him, overran the countries that he held in Asia, and spread desolations like a flood whatever regions he passed through. Then, making a truce with Ptolemy, during which both parties treated of peace, and prepared for war; Antiochus returned to attack Ptolemy's forces and overcame them, and carried the war even to the borders of Egypt, which he threatened with an invasion. This exceedingly exasperated Ptolemy, who marched against him with a great army, gave him battle, entirely defeated Antiochus's numerous forces, obliged him to retreat to Antioch, and thence to send ambassadors to treat of peace. But Ptolemy did not pursue the advantages of this decisive victory; for, being elated with his success, he gave himself up to the most disgraceful debaucheries. After the retreat of Antiochus, he visited the cities of his Asiatic dominions, and Jerusalem among the rest; and being, with great difficulty, restrained from entering into the holy of holies, he was so displeased with the Jews, that he destroyed, some say forty thousand, others sixty thousand, of his Jewish subjects in Egypt by a most furious persecution; and casting down so many tens of thousands of his own subjects did, of course, weaken his kingdom and conduce to its ruin. (Marg. and Marg. Ref.)—Overflow. (10) Marg. Ref. u. Notes, 22,23, 40-43, v. 40. 9:25-27, v. 26. Is. 8:6-8.

V. 13-16. "After certain years," (marg.) that is, about fourteen years afterwards, Antiochus the Great, having recovered from the effects of his late defeat; and Ptolemy Philopater being dead, and succeeded by his son Ptolemy Epiphanes, who was only four or five years of age; Antiochus raised a greater army than before, and amassed very large sums of money to defray the expenses of the war, by which he hoped to deprive Ptolemy of his dominions. And at the same time, that Antiochus marched his army to attack the Egyptian provinces, many other enemies stood up against the king during his minority. For the conduct of his father, and of those abandoned ministers who now governed in his name, had so disgusted the Egyptians, that they were ready to join Antiochus; and Philip, king of Macedonia, made a league with him against Ptolemy, stipulating to divide his kingdom between them. The persecuted Jews also became refractory, and broke off from their allegiance to the king of Egypt, to join Antiochus; for this seems to be the meaning of the words translated, "the robbers of thy people." These revolters exalted themselves against their former masters; and so helped to establish, or accomplish, this vision, or prophecy; but they were reduced by Ptolemy's forces, who under Scopas gained many advantages against those of Antiochus, and recovered possession of Cælo-Syria, and Palestine. The presence, however, of that prince turned the scale in his favour; for he soon recovered what Scopas had taken, and besieged and took the strong city Zidon, and others of Ptolemy's best fortified cities. So that the king of Egypt could not withstand his arms, even with his choicest troops; but he carried all before him, and succeeded in his designs, *cast up a mount, and take the *most fenced cities and the arms of the south *shall not withstand, neither *his chosen people, neither *shall there be any strength to withstand.

and established his authority in the land of Judah, "the glorious land" of God's chosen people, and of his special presence: which was by him consumed, in furnishing subsistence to his troops; or rather it was by him established, as some render the word; for it was favoured, and prospered greatly under his government. (Marg. and Marg. Ref.)

The robbers, &c. (14) מרפרי, rumpere, erumpere, dirumpere. The word commonly means robbers, because they break through all restraints of law, and violently oppose their rulers, as well as violently rob their neighbours: but it may signify revolters, as breaking loose from those, who had acquired dominion over them. Thus the verb in Hithpael is used, 1 Sam 25:10. "The expression of Josephus is remarkable, that the Jews submitted to Scopas by force; but to Antiochus they submitted willingly." Bp. Newton.

Shall be consumed (16) לִכְרֵי. Καὶ τελευτήσει εν τῇ χειρὶ αὐτου. Sept. "Thus Theodoret explains it, "and it shall be perfected by his hand," that is, "it shall prosper;" for so likewise Josephus hath taught us, . . . that the Jews, of their own accord having received Antiochus, were greatly honoured by him." Bp. Newton.

V. 17. Antiochus, after this success, set himself with all the strength of his kingdom, to get possession of Egypt, being assisted by the Jews, called "upright ones," as worshipping JEHOVAH, in contradistinction to idolaters; or, as the phrase may mean, making an agreement with him, that is, with Ptolemy; for Antiochus attempted to circumvent him by treaty, as well as to subdue him by arms. Thus he endeavoured to accomplish his purpose: and to induce Ptolemy to enter into treaty with him, he gave him his daughter Cleopatra in marriage; whose singular beauty is supposed to be intimated by the expression, "the daughter of women," that is, a most accomplished daughter of women. In this he meant fraudulently, for he thought to corrupt his daughter to betray the interests of her husband; but the project failed: for Ptolemy was aware of the artifice, and kept upon his guard; and Cleopatra preferred the interests of her husband to those of her insidious father, and even joined in an embassy to the Romans craving protection against him. (Marg. and Marg. Ref.)—Upright ones, &c.] Εὐθεία πάντα μετ' αὐτου ποιεῖ. Sept. Et recta faciet cum eo. Vulg.

V. 18, 19. Antiochus, not being able to execute this project, turned his arms another way, and attacked many of the isles and cities bordering on the Mediterranean sea. (Marg. Ref. k.) This offended the Romans, who deemed themselves insulted by this treatment of their allies: and in their own behalf, to vindicate the honour of their state, they proclaimed war against him, and in a short time, their consuls and commanders drove him out of Europe; pursued him into Asia; by a most decisive victory deprived him of a great part of his dominions, and compelled him to submit to a very hard and dishonourable peace. He then returned in disgrace to Antioch, his strong hold. Nor did he long survive these defeats, for finding difficulty in raising the very large sums of money which the Romans exacted from him, he attempted to plunder a rich temple of Jupiter Belus, in the province of Elymais, where he was slain by the enraged inhabitants. So that he soon after "stumbled, and fell, and was not found." (Marg. and Marg. Ref.)

V. 20. "Then shall stand up one in his estate, that causeth an exactor to pass over the glory of his kingdom." (Marg.) Seleucus Philopater, who succeeded his father, being obliged to pay a large annual tribute to the Romans, performed nothing memorable, except levying money from his subjects, for this and other purposes. These exactions tarnished "the glory of his kingdom;" and within a few days, or years, (for he reigned twelve years,) he was slain by Heliodorus, whom he had employed to rob the temple of God at Jerusalem. Thus he was destroyed "neither in anger, nor in battle," but by treachery: for Heliodorus hoped to succeed to the throne; as Demetrius the son of Seleucus was a hostage at Rome, and Antiochus his brother was absent from the Syrian court. This project however was disappointed.

bly providing for their common safety, he made war upon them with great impetuosity and success. However, this expedition terminated in a different manner, than either of the preceding: for the Roman state sent ambassadors to him, at the request of the Ptolemies, commanding him to lay down his arms, and not to molest their allies. Perhaps these ambassadors came in Grecian ships, or the name "Chittim" signifies the several European countries that border on the Mediterranean sea. (Marg. Ref. f. Note, Num. 24:23, 24.) These executed their commission in the most peremptory and decisive manner: for one of them, named Marcus Popilius, Lenas, made a circle with his cane round Antiochus, and insisted on his answer before he passed out of that circle; being determined to declare war against him, if he hesitated to comply with his demands: and Antiochus, not daring to bring upon himself the whole power of the Romans, who were then free from other wars, was forced to submit. Thus he was checked in his full career of victory, to his extreme vexation; and returning home, full of grief and shame, he vented his indignation against the Jews, the covenant people of God: for he detached Apollonius with an army of twenty-two thousand men, who coming to Jerusalem, slew great multitudes, plundered the city, set fire to it in several places, and pulled down the houses and walls round about it. Then they builded on an eminence, in the city of David, a strong fortress, which might command the temple; and issuing from thence, they fell on those who came to worship, and shed innocent blood on every side of the sanctuary, and defiled it; so that the temple was deserted, and the whole service omitted; the city was forsaken of its natives, and became an habitation of strangers. "So he did;" and after his return to Antioch he published a decree, which obliged all persons, upon pain of death, to conform to the religion of the Greeks: and so the Jewish law was abrogated, the heathen worship was set up in its stead, and the temple itself was consecrated to Jupiter Olympius. In transacting... these matters, "he had intelligence with them that forsook the holy covenant;" Menelaus, and the other apostate Jews of his party." Bp. Newton. (1 Mac. 1:29-61. 2 Mac. 5:24-26. 6:1-9.)—Indeed the distresses of the Jews in those days arose principally from the machinations of their countrymen, who joined the enemies of their nation and religion. (Marg. and Marg. Ref.) "There is not so complete and regular a series of these things, there is not so concise and comprehensive an account of their affairs, to be found in any author of those times. The prophecy is really more perfect than any history: no one historian hath related so many circumstances, and in such exact order, as the prophet hath foretold them. So that it was necessary to have recourse to several authors, Greek and Roman, Jewish and Christian, and to collect something from one, and something from another, to explain and illustrate the great variety of particulars contained in this prophecy.... No one could thus declare "the times and seasons," (Acts 1:7.) but "he who hath them in his own power," Bp. Newton.

V. 31. Thus far the prophecy is clear, and the interpretation satisfactory; but the subsequent part is very difficult, and commentators have differed exceedingly about it. Some have explained the whole of Antiochus Epiphanes; some have made him a type of Antichrist; and others extend a part of it to the subsequent kings of Syria. But, though very little of that which follows in this vision, can be explained of the shortlived exploits of Antiochus; yet a similarity of character and conduct, between him and future oppressors of God's people, might give occasion to the inspired writer, or rather to the angel, to glide from one to the other by an almost imperceptible transition.—As Antiochus had the power of the sword, his captains seized on the sanctuary, which had been strongly fortified, and was itself the defence of the people: and they polluted it, in various ways; and placed a base idol in the temple of God, which was an abomination that desolated the city and sanctuary, by driving thence all pious Jews: they also builded idol-altars in all the cities of Judah. This therefore may apply to Antiochus, (Marg. Ref. l, m.) But very eminent expositors suppose, that the transition before mentioned begins here to be made; and, as it must shortly be admitted, it cannot be better introduced, than in this place. "In the same year that Antiochus, by the command of the Romans, retired out of Egypt, and set up the worship of the Greeks in Judea, the Romans conquered the kingdom of Macedonia, the fundamental kingdom of the empire of the Greeks, and reduced it into a Roman province; and thereby began to be put an end to the reign of Daniel's third beast. This is thus expressed by Daniel; "and after him arms," that is, the Romans, "shall stand up."... Arms are every where in this prophecy put for the military power of a kingdom; and they stand up, when they conquer and grow powerful. Hitherto Daniel described the actions of the kings of the north and the south: but upon the conquest of Macedonia by the Romans, he left off describing the actions *they shall pollute the sanctuary of strength, and shall take away the daily sacrifice, and they shall place the abomination that maketh desolate.

of the Greeks, and began to describe those of the Romans in Greece: Sir Is. Newton. (Notes, 7:1-8. 8:3-12.)—Arms. Not armour, but the "arms" of the human body; as in other parts of this prophecy: (Note, Ez. 30:20-26.)—In support of this interpretation, it may be further added, that the Jews themselves, as Jerome informs us, understood this passage, neither of Antiochus Epiphanes, nor of Antichrist, but of the Romans; of whom it was said above, that "the ships of Chittim shall come, and he shall be grieved." After some time, says the prophet, out of the Romans themselves, who came to assist Ptolemy, and menaced Antiochus, there shall arise the emperor Vespasian; there shall arise his arms and seed, his son Titus with an army, and they shall pollute the sanctuary, and take away the daily sacrifice, and deliver the temple to eternal desolation? Bp. Newton.—We must know, that after the death of Antiochus Epiphanes, the third kingdom comes no more into the holy reckoning; none of the Greek kings after him being at all prophesied of.... The reason of this is, because during the reign of Antiochus, Macedonia, (whence that kingdom sprang,) with all the rest of Greece, came under the Roman obedience. From thence therefore the Holy Ghost begins the rise of the fourth kingdom, yea, the Roman historians themselves mark out that time for the rise of their empire? Mede.—Our Saviour himself, making use of the same phrase, "the abomination of desolation" in his prediction of the destruction of Jerusalem, may convince us, that this part of the prophecy refers to that event? Bp. Newton.—The emphatical manner, in which our Lord quotes this prophecy of Daniel, greatly confirms this argument. Indeed the concluding verse of the ninth chapter contains nearly the same language, in an express prediction of the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. m. Notes, 8:13, 14, v. 13. 9:25-27, v. 27. Matt. 24:15-18.) There can remain little doubt with any one, who carefully compares the concluding part of this chapter and the next chapter, with the other Scriptures; who accurately examines the import of the words employed; and who attentively considers the records of history; that the fourth kingdom, even that of the Romans, is predicted, if not exclusively, yet principally. First Rome Pagan, then Rome Christian, and then Rome Papal, must be intended; whether the transition be made at this verse, or not till the thirty-sixth: for no other power, which has hitherto appeared on earth, at all answers to the description here given, or has had dominion during so long a term of time, as the angel plainly marks out.—The persecutions and profanations of the temple, by Antiochus Epiphanes, began about one hundred and sixty-eight years before the Christian Era: he died in less than four years afterwards. The Romans soon began to disturb the Jews: at length Pompey, about sixty-three years before the Christian Era, took Jerusalem, and entered into the holy of holies. He, however, neither plundered the temple, nor in any other respect profaned it. But from that time, Jerusalem was dependent on the Romans, and subject to those whom they made kings or governors, till the destruction of the city and temple by Titus; and in the year of our Lord one hundred and thirty-two, the emperor Adrian caused a temple to be erected to Jupiter Capitolinus, on the very spot where the temple of God before stood, and banished the Jews from Jerusalem and its neighbourhood. Thus "the abomination that maketh desolate," was effectually placed "in the sanctuary of strength," to pollute it; and "the daily sacrifice was taken away." Yet these events seem also to have been, in some degree, figures of the corruptions, introduced into the Christian church, by the idolatries of Papal Rome.

V. 32, 33. Antiochus doubtless corrupted many of the Jews to do wickedly: and the remnant that knew, trusted, and loved their God, were greatly strengthened, and did wonders in supporting his cruel tortures, and resisting his usurped and abused authority: but it cannot be said, that they instructed many, or made numerous converts to their religion. They indeed endured severe things; yet it was not for "many days;" three years and a half being a very short time in the language of prophecy.—Whereas the Romans not only destroyed Jerusalem, and took away the daily sacrifice; but during their dominion they both crucified Christ, persecuted his followers, and also set themselves to extirpate Christianity: and their magistrates used the most alluring promises and flatteries, as well as the most terrible threatenings, to prevail with Christians to apostatize and worship idols. Many were thus corrupted and did wickedly, but the real Christians were enabled to resist all these temptations, and to adhere to their religion with the most heroic constancy: and through the whole extent of the Roman empire, as well as in other places, Christianity was rapidly propagated. At the same time the Christians, and the ministers of Christianity, were exposed to death by the sword and flame, and were carried captive, and stripped of their property during "many days;" for the ten persecutions of the Roman emperors lasted almost three hundred years, with only short intermissions of rest and peace. The dispersion of the apostles, teachers, and Christians, in the primitive times, by persecution, greatly promoted the promulgation of the Gospel. They understood, and were wise, and carried their wisdom with them, and instructed immense multitudes. (*Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, Matt. 10:16-23. 24:9-14. V. 34, 35. When the Jews fell under the persecutions of Antiochus, Mattathias of Modin, and his son Judas Maccabeus, revolted from the persecutors; and after the death of Mattathias, Judas repeatedly vanquished the armies of Antiochus with far inferior forces: at length he recovered Jerusalem, cleansed the sanctuary, restored the worship of God, and survived Antiochus: and both the priesthood and sovereignty remained in that family for several generations. The small force of these Jewish heroes might be called "a little help," yet in fact it proved a most effectual help. The two books of Maccabees must be referred to on this subject; for it occupies the greatest part of them.—But if we advert to what succeeded the persecutions mentioned in the preceding note, we shall perceive a much more unexpected interpretation. After the Christians had fallen under the power of their persecutors, the conversion of Constantine gave them deliverance: they were no longer persecuted, but favoured by the Roman emperor and his deputies. Yet this proved only "a little help" to the cause of true religion. It added indeed much to the temporal prosperity of the church, but it greatly tended to debase the character of professed Christians. Especially it caused many to "cleave to them with flatteries;" for hypocrisy became prevalent among both the clergy and laity, who were intent on flattering the emperor and those in authority, for their own interest. (Marg. Ref. s. t. Notes, Rev. 12:1-6,13-17.) And indeed persecution soon revived, and Christians were permitted to fall into these calamities, to try and prove them, and to distinguish them from hypocrites, as well as to purge away their defilement and make them white.—This would continue "to the time of the end; because it was yet for an appointed time." The persecutions which Christians have suffered from their professed fellow-Christians, began from the days of Constantine, and have continued more or less to this day; and they will continue till "the appointed time" of the Jews' conversion, the ruin of every Antichristian power, and the final and universal promulgation of the Gospel. The persecutions, however, of the twelve hundred and sixty years, under the little horn of the fourth beast, seem principally intended. (Marg. Ref. u-y. Notes, 36. 7:23-27.) And it does not appear to me, that any particular part of that period is exclusively meant: or that any thing precisely fixes and restricts the fulfilment of the prediction, to the persecutions of the sixteenth century, during the progress of the reformation, as Mr. Faber thinks, and labours to prove; and on which he builds very much indeed.

To try them, &c. The first verb is generally used for purifying metals by fire; and the pronoun them is not found after either of the latter verbs. If, however, it were admitted, it would not restrict the meaning to any one period of the 1260 years, as, surely, the prophesying of the witnesses in sackcloth, during that whole term, means a zealous attempt to purify a degenerate church. (Note, Rev. 11:3-6.)

V. 36. After the Romans had stopped the progress of Antiochus in Egypt, he was no more able to do according to his will, or to exalt himself: he indeed "spake marvellous things against the God of gods;" but he could not be said to "magnify himself against every god," for he was remarkable for his superstition and idolatry. The prophecy therefore could not receive its accomplishment in him.—"Then the king shall do according to his will, &c." "Under the name 'king' must be understood the Roman state, under what kind of government soever." Mede.—The prophet was speaking of the persecutions, which would be permitted for the trial and probation of the church, after the empire was become Christian; and now he proceeds to describe the principal author of these persecutions. ... After the empire was become Christian, there would spring up in the church an Antichristian power that should act in the most absolute and arbitrary manner, exalt itself above all laws human and divine; dispense with the most sacred and solemn obligations; and in many respects enjoin what God had forbidden, and forbid what God had commanded. ... This power too was to continue in the church, and "prosper, till the indignation be accomplished; for that that is determined shall be done." This must denote some particular period; or otherwise it is no more than saying, that God's indignation shall not be accomplished, till it be accomplished.—This is the same as what before was called, (8:19.) "the last end of the indignation," and (9:27.) "the consummation;" and it meaneth the last end and consummation of God's indignation against his people, the Jews. (12:7.) Bp. Newton.—St. Paul seems to have referred to this prophecy of Daniel, in his extraordinary prediction of "the Man of Sin;" and in great measure to have sanctioned the general outlines of the above interpretation; especially in respect of "marvellous things spoken against the God of gods." (Marg. Ref. Notes, 2 Thes. 2:1-12.) The series of the predicted events also leads us to the same interpretation.—After the empire became Christian, a king (or kingdom) gradually sprang up in it, of a most absolute and tyrannical nature, "doing according to his own will," with the most avowed defiance of God's laws; and requiring the most implicit obedience from men of all ranks, orders, and nations. The emperors first exercised, or excited, this power, by ecclesiastical counsels, called and influenced by them: but it gradually passed into the hands of the clergy; and the bishop and church of Rome at last carried it to the most enormous height, exalting and magnifying themselves above every god. These have long prospered, and will, more or less, do so, till the Lord's indignation against his people shall be accomplished, and the determined period of the calamities of the church be expired.

V. 37. In what sense could it be said, that Antiochus did not regard the god of his fathers, when he compelled the Jews to worship Jupiter Olympus? or that he regarded not "the desire of women?" when, besides being married, he was excessive in indulging his lust, and did nothing to restrain others from the same? "The desire of women, and of the married life, the Roman should discountenance, when he shook off the gods of his ancestors." Mede. It is certain that Constantine, the first Christian emperor, in various ways discouraged marriage, and honoured celibacy, thus acting in direct opposition to the ancient policy of Rome: and that the subsequent idolatry and blasphemy of the antichristian power, were accompanied by a proportionable discountenance of marriage, till it was totally prohibited to the ministers of religion.—By "the desire of women," the desire of marriage seems to be meant: and where on earth has any power or government permanently and avowedly stigmatized marriage as dishonourable, and almost idolized celibacy and virginity, except that of Rome, even from the conversion of the emperors to Christianity to this day; and except those who have retained some measure of her antichristianity?—This interpretation, which all protestant commentators, at least, have hitherto given of the words, rendered "the desire of women," has been decidedly opposed by Mr. Faber: and it must be owned, that the original word, for desire, (חַמָּה) is generally used in Scripture in a somewhat different construction. (Faber, Vol. I. pp. 303-308.) "The desire of women," may either mean, 'the desire of possessing women,' or 'the desire which women have for some special object,' or 'The desire of Israel,' as an English phrase, may mean, 'the object which Israel desired,' or 'the desire itself which Israel felt for that object:' but the former is evidently the meaning in the passage referred to; (1 Sam. 9:20.) and the original phrase is generally, if not constantly, used in this manner. Thus the expression "the love of God," may mean, either his love to us, or our love to him; and grammarians in this way commonly distinguish the genitive or possessive.

On this ground Mr. Faber concludes, that "the Desire of women," is some object of worship, whom this king shall disregard: and he supposes, that the Messiah is meant, who is called, "the Desire of all nations." (Note, Hag. 2:6—9, v. 7.) That text, however, stands alone in Scripture, to support this interpretation: whereas the other accords with several prophecies. No doubt, on the ground of the promise concerning the Messiah, women, in the chosen line, desired children, in hopes of being parents, or ancestors, of that great Deliverer. But after the same word of God, which gave the first promise, had fixed the Messiah's line, to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Judah, and afterwards to the descendants of David; there can be no more reason for ascribing the desire of having children, in women in Israel not of this line, to this hope; than that of the Grecian women, and many others, who have expressed an equally strong reluctance to being childless. (Note, Judg. 11:34—40.) And why the Messiah should be called, "the Desire of women," in general, rather than of men, in a prophecy, delivered many hundred years after it had been predicted that he should descend from David; and not to be fulfilled till almost two thousand years after his birth, does not appear. This interpretation, therefore, does not seem to me to be established: though enough has been advanced to require learned men to reconsider the current exposition. If "the desire of women," mean, "that which women desire," why may not marriage still be intended? The history of the whole human race proves, that honourable marriage to one husband is the general "desire of women," with but comparatively few exceptions. (Note, Gen. 3:16.) Indeed, marriage is more generally and strictly "the desire of women" than of men; though the desire of having women, is much more general among men, than that of having men is among women: for men are far less generally satisfied with one wife, than women with one husband: as polygamy, concubinage, and promiscuous fornication in every age and nation have clearly proved. And the prohibition of marriage, to priests secular and regular, has always been attended with discouraging the marriage of women, and the encouragement of vows of virginity, even in those, who could not judge for themselves in such a case, because of their youth. Convents of nuns have regularly, and almost necessarily, attended those of monks and friars; and in both senses, the apostle's prediction, of "a power forbidding to marry," as well as Daniel's of a power "not regarding the desire of women," has been literally fulfilled.—Mr. Faber, and some others, conclude from the expression, "nor regard any god," (compared with the 36th verse, that the predicted power must be an avowed atheist.—But if he "honour the god of forces, and a god whom his fathers knew not," (38) how can he be an avowed atheist? He, who sets his own authority above that of "whatever is called or worshipped," fully answers the description; though he may find it convenient to retain a profession of some religion, nay, of orthodox Christianity, and "a form of godliness." If a succession of men require obedience to their own commands, which evidently contradict those of God; if they establish or claim the power of dispensing with the laws of the only God, whom they profess to worship, that they may attain their own purposes; and this habitually and openly from age to age; they "magnify themselves above all that is called God or worshipped," though not avowed atheists.—(Marg. Ref. Notes, 2 The. 2:2—12. 1 Tim. 4:1—3. 2 Tim. 3:1—5. 1 John 4:1—3.)—Whether some more daringly impious, infidel, or even atheistical character, may not be assumed by that succession of men, who, as the little horn of the fourth beast, have hitherto oppressed the church, and corrupted the gospel, near the close of the twelve hundred and sixty years, I will not presume to determine. Indeed, I think this probable; and also, that this prophecy of Daniel will be made far more clear, when these events shall have occurred. But the attempts made to prove the accomplishment of it, in the paroxysm of atheism, during the first years of the French revolution, and in the subsequent events, do not appear to me to have been in any degree successful: for nothing in this transaction has yet occurred, which, either for extent or duration, can answer to the language used in the prophecy.

V. 38. "For together with God, in his seat shall he honour Mahuzzim; even together with that God whom his ancestors knew not, shall he honour (them) with gold, and with silver, and with precious stones, and with pleasant things." Mede. (Marg. and Marg. Ref.) Mahuzzim is the plural of the word, translated a fortress, a strong tower, or a rock, in very many places of the Scripture, and in this very chapter, 7:10, 19. Heb. "True Christians, have, with David, but one Mahoz, the 'Mahoz of salvations:' but apostate Christians have their many Mahuzzim." By "the strange and foreign God," (38) whom the Roman church should at length acknowledge, is meant Christ: for though to the Jew every strange and foreign god was a false god; yet to the Gentiles, who worshipped none but idols, the foreign God was the true. Therefore the philosophers at Athens, when St. Paul preached Christ to them, said he preached a foreign God. Mede. To this it may be added, that the true God was to them the UNKNOWN GOD; "whom their fathers knew not." "With this foreign God, he shall worship Mahuzzim, gods-protectors, such as saints and angels are supposed to be." Mede. The translation of this verse, as above given, seems far more literal, than our version: and it is certain that from the time, when the Roman power began to profess the worship of the true God, and of Christ his co-equal Son, whom their fathers knew not,) they began to corrupt Christianity, by substituting saints and angels, as protectors and mediators, in the place of the geni and demons of paganism. They did not renounce the worship of God, or the mediation of Christ; but along with this "one God and one Lord," they worshipped "gods many and lords many;" and the reader may find, in Mr. Mede's works, and in Sir Isaac Newton's observations on this prophecy, most astonishing instances of the early introduction of this idolatry, and the gross language used by the fathers even of the fourth century in respect of it. Mr. Mede's interpretation of this clause seems to me at least well grounded; but it has not been generally admitted.—"And the god Mahuzzim, in his estate he shall honour; even a god whom his fathers knew not, &c." Bp. Newton. But Mahuzzim is plural, and denotes towers, or fortresses: whereas the word translated "God," in the second clause, is singular, and cannot mean the same with Mahuzzim; but must signify either the true God, or some particular idol or false god.—The verse may be translated thus; "And with God," (or instead of God,) "Mahuzzim in his estate shall he honour; even with God," (or instead of God,) "those whom his fathers knew not shall he honour, &c." Bp. Newton.—If this translation be adopted, then the objects of worship, which the fathers of those concerned had not known, are the same as Mahuzzim.—It should however, be observed, that the translation or interpretation of this clause, in either way, does not in the least deduct from the certainty of the exposition in other respects. The meaning evidently is, that the worship of Mahuzzim of protectors and guardians, instead of God, as God, or with God, is indisputably predicted, if there be any meaning in words: and the practice of the church of Rome, and also in the eastern, as well as the western division of the empire, after it professed Christianity from very early ages to this day, is plainly intended; while the profusion of rich oblations, at the shrines of their saints, fully explains and illustrates the concluding part of the verse. "And who is there so little acquainted with ecclesiastical history, as not to know, that the worship of saints and angels was established both in the Greek and Latin Church? They were not only invoked and adored, as patrons, intercessors, and guardians of mankind; but festival days were instituted to them, miracles were ascribed to them, churches were erected to them; their very relics were worshipped, and their shrines and images were adorned with the most costly offerings, and were honoured with gold, and silver, and with precious stones, and desirable things. And what renders the completion of the prophecy still more remarkable is, that they were celebrated and adored under the title of Mahuzzim, of bulwarks and fortresses, of protectors and guardians of mankind." Bp. Newton.—Even the dead bodies of saints were called by the fathers of the fourth century, (as Chrysostom, Hilary, Theodoret, Gregory, Nyssen, and others,) "great towers of the martyrs, fortifying cities more strongly, than any impregnable wall of adamant," and much more to this effect. Such expressions are to be found in many ancient, and even modern, liturgies and manuals of prayers, applied to the virgin Mary, and to saints and angels; and in the eighth century this idolatrous worship was fully established by law.

V. 39. "And he shall make" (or appoint) "for his strong holds Mahuzzim, along with the foreign God whom he acknowledges; he shall multiply honour," (that is, to the Mahuzzim whom he shall make,) "and he shall cause them to rule over many, and shall divide the earth for a reward." Thus the verse may be translated, perhaps as literally as the construction will admit of. The word rendered "do," in our version, is known to have a most extensive meaning, and may well be supposed here to signify to make, or appoint. If this be admitted, then the interpretation is plain. The strong holds of this antichristian power are his churches and monasteries, which he would consecrate to saints, or angels or to God and his saints. Having once acknowledged these Mahuzzim, as objects of religious worship, as gods-protectors, he would honour them more and more, from age to age. He would invest them with a dominion, (as far as he could do it,) not only over men on earth, but even over those who have entered the unseen world; and induce immense multitudes to seek deliverance out of purgatory, for their decess and increase with glory: and he shall cause them to rule over many, and shall divide the land for gain.

40 ¶ And at the time of the end shall the king of the south push at him: and the king of the north shall come against him like a whirlwind, with chariots, and with horsemen, and with many ships; and he shall enter into the countries, and shall overflow and pass over.

41 He shall enter also into the glorious land, and many countries shall be overthrown: but these shall escape out of his hand, even Edom, and Moab, and the chief of the children of Ammon.

relations and friends, from their powerful intercession; and to purchase at a vast expense, masses and prayers from the priests and monks for that purpose.—Let it here be remembered that this power has invested the apostle Peter with the keys of heaven itself, in order that, as his successor, the pope might claim the same authority over the eternal state of mankind at large!—And finally he would divide the earth among them. “St. George shall have England, St. Andrew, Scotland, St. Dennis, France, St. James, Spain, St. Mark, Venice, &c. and bear rule as presidents and patrons of their several countries.” Mede. The secular possessions of the Pope are called St. Peter’s patrimony and Peter’s pence, as a tax levied from the several countries subject to the popeedom. This with a variety of emoluments, from the incomes of the bishops and clergy, and the disposal of the richest preferments, commonly to foreigners; were “the price,” or valuable consideration, for which he divided the land; and doubtless, this dividing of the earth among the Mahuzzim, was made a source of great gain, accruing from the several countries thus placed under the guardian care of these several saints.—“Thus shall he do: . . . to the defenders of Mahuzzim, together with the strange God whom he shall acknowledge, . . . he shall multiply honour; . . . and he shall cause them to rule over many, and the earth shall he divide for a reward.”—The defenders and champions of Mahuzzim were the monks, and priests, and bishops, . . . and religious orders; and that they have been honoured, and revered, and almost adored, in former ages; that their authority and jurisdiction have extended over the purses and consciences of men; that they have been enriched with noble buildings and large endowments, and have had the choicest of the lands appropriated for church-lands, are points of such public notoriety that they require no proof. Bp. Newton.—The word rendered strong holds may, in a figurative sense, mean defenders: as Mahuzzim (towers) may signify protectors: and thus Bishop Newton’s translation is very just, and in general the explanation is striking: but what then are we to understand by the strange God? He is here distinguished from the Mahuzzim; though the Bishop’s interpretation of the preceding verse seems to make him the same. But it has been shown, that the God, whom the ancestors of this power had not known, cannot be the same as the Mahuzzim; because in both places the word is singular, (in a language, which generally has the name of God in the plural,) and must mark out some one object of worship, distinct from the Mahuzzim. If therefore Mr. Mede’s interpretation be not admitted, perhaps that may be most entitled to attention, which supposes the worship of the consecrated bread, as if Christ were bodily present by transubstantiation, to be intended.—However whether the Mahuzzim, or their defenders (the defenders of gods-protectors) be meant, the history of the church throughout the whole ancient Roman empire, to this day, most surprisingly verifies the prediction. This interpretation, however, may be objected to, as making the grand subject of this last vision, of Daniel, in great measure to coincide with those before stated in the seventh and eighth chapters; especially in respect of the fourth beast, and the little horn of the fourth beast. But if the angel interpreted to the prophet, in plain language, what had before been shown him under emblems, and more obscurely; as it is manifest he did, in the former part of the chapter; why may he not be supposed to proceed in the same way, in the latter part? This does indeed, as here expounded, enter into particulars, and mention circumstances, not before adduced; especially as including the corruptions of the eastern church also: but the grand outline is the same. What may hereafter unexpectedly follow from the paroxysm of continental Atheism, the French revolution, the usurpation of Napoleon Buonaparte, and his dynasty, we cannot say: but present appearances in no degree favour the opinion, that these things separately or conjointly are here predicted: and as to the rest, our posterity will be most competent to judge; and probably will discover, that we have all been mistaken more or less. up by the Roman empire. But “at the time of the end;” that is, of the prosperity of that empire, when it was about to be broken to pieces, say many commentators, (Marg. Ref. i, k.) “the king of the south would push at him:” this predicts, as they suppose, the victories of the Saracens under Mohammed and his successors; who coming from the south made war upon the eastern division of the Roman empire, and seized on several of its finest provinces: yet they did not utterly subvert it. And indeed the doctrine of Mohammed was first forged at Mecca, and the supremacy of the Pope was established by a grant from Phocas, in the very same year, A. D. 606: so that the little horn of the third beast, and that of the fourth beast, began their reign together, and will probably terminate them nearly at the same time. (Notes, 7: 23—27. 8:9—14.) But though the Saracens from the south, or Arabia, dismembered and weakened the eastern empire; yet the Turks from Scythia, a northern region, totally subverted it. This king of the north came against the king of the south, (who had subjugated the eastern part of the Roman empire,) “like a whirlwind, with chariots and with horsemen,” of which the Turkish armies chiefly consisted: “and with many ships;” without which they could not have got possession of so many maritime countries: thus they entered and overflowed them like an inundation, and so passed over. They overspread the western parts of Asia, and then passing over into Europe, they fixed their empire at Constantinople, upon the ruins of the eastern empire, which had long before been divided from that of Rome in the west. (Notes, Rev. 9:)—Among other conquests, it was predicted that this “king of the north” would “enter into the glorious land,” or the land of Canaan; this the Turks did, and they are masters of it to this day. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. o.) “And many countries were by them overthrown,” as Syria and Palestine: but they were never able to subdue the Arabian tribes, or the mixed people, which inhabited the regions formerly occupied by Edom, Moab, and Ammon, whose posterity are probably now incorporated with the Ishmaelites and Midianites. (Marg. Ref. p.) These escaped them: and the Ottoman emperors even now pay the Arabs an annual pension of forty thousand crowns, for the safe passage of their pilgrims and caravans to Mecca: and yet even this often fails of protecting them from plunder.—Thus the Turkish princes stretched forth their hands to grasp these countries, and got possession of their treasures, and were enriched and strengthened by the acquisition; carrying away also great multitudes of the inhabitants captive to Constantinople: and these and other regions of Africa remain in their hands to this day, along with their Asiatic and European dominions. The expression, however, “the time of the end,” seems to fix the period pointed out by this prophecy to later ages than those of the Saracens, or even those of the Turks. If, therefore, any persons should be dissatisfied with the above interpretation, I should not oppose the opinion, that the whole of it is still future and unaccomplished. In that case, I shall not presume even to conjecture what power is meant by “the king of the north,” or “the king of the south;” or whether the things spoken (40, 41.) be intended of the power described in the preceding verses, or of “the king of the north,” or what events are intended.—Possibly, the several powers who have hitherto in different places, combined against the true church, will be set against each other. The papal kingdoms, or whatever power shall succeed them, may help to destroy the Mohammedan power, and be in part destroyed by it. The restoration of the Jews to their own land, when converted to Christianity, and the effects of this, may be predicted: but if the prophecy be not fulfilled, I presume not to prophesy from it. Nothing hitherto, that I know of, has occurred, as an accomplishment of it, beyond what has been mentioned.—It may probably, relate to the same events, which are predicted by Ezekiel, concerning Gog and Magog, as introducing the Millennium. in the land of Canaan the latter will fix their camp with great ostentation, as well as wage the war with great fury; and that there they shall receive such a defeat, as shall end in the utter subversion of their monarchy. But it may perhaps refer to events, which have before been mentioned, namely, the return of the Jews to their own land after their conversion, and the assistance to be given them by the Christian European powers; which tidings from the east and north will no doubt greatly trouble the Turkish princes, who possess the country that is again to be restored to the Jews. And thus going forth with great fury to war against the Jews, and having pitched their camp between the Mediterranean sea and the Dead sea, in the mountains of Judea, they will be suddenly and surprisingly ruined without help or recovery. Thus the ruin of the eastern antichrist will not be far distant from that of the western; both of which seem to be predicted in this chapter. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, 40-43. Ez. 38:)—The word rendered, "to make away," signifies to curse, or to devote to utter destruction, and may intimate that the war would be on a religious account.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-19. The predictions of the Scripture not only confirm the doctrines contained in it; but they tend to establish our faith in the overruling providence of God, which is thus sensibly demonstrated to us.—Little do men in general imagine, how much even the determinations of princes and senates are influenced by the agency of good or bad spirits. In mercy to his people, the Lord employs his mighty angels to strengthen and confirm those who know him not, in every determination and measure, which he sees will prove for the good of his servants; and they are thus imperceptibly directed by an internal influence, when they most entirely follow their own inclinations.—While wealth and power animate men to engage in ambitious projects; they are sure, whether successful or not, to involve multitudes in ruin: and the projects only continue for a few days, to act "according to their own will, and rule with great dominion;" and then they are taken away and make room for others.—The debates of councils, and the solemn treaties of princes, are frequently such a mixture of dissimulation and selfishness, that they cannot endure an impartial investigation: and their most plausible schemes often terminate in most complicated disasters. But ambition, avarice, and revenge, or similar passions, still keep the world in motion; one turbulent chieftain succeeds to the estate of another: success and power continually change sides, as well as riches and renown. Great prosperity increases men's pride, or emboldens self-indulgence; and thus tends to their ruin: and he, who is a slave to his lusts, can never be strengthened, even by "casting down ten thousands" of his enemies. But, how can kings expect to be strengthened by the murder of their own industrious and conscientious subjects, through cruel persecutions? By such measures they drive them into revolts, and thus many stand up against them. The vision, however, will be established, and the purpose of God accomplished, let who will stand or fall. When his designs are effected, men are left to provoke such as are more powerful and proud than themselves, till they stumble and fall, and are not found.

V. 20-35. As some monarchs have been the frebrands of the world; so others have been mere sponges of the people, whose chief glory has been to raise taxes from them like sordid usurers: and such have often perished by the machinations of designing men. They, whom the world calls illustrious, are often in the Lord's account vile persons: and such as obtain "the honour of a kingdom," are sometimes deserving of the greatest ignominy and detestation.—Whilst the pots of the earth strive with each other, they are properly matched; and in turn they prevail, and are prevailed against, deceive and are deceived. But they commonly are ambitious of contending with the covenanted people of God, and thus they enter into an unequal contest with their Maker. When they see the church weak and outwardly exposed, they forget that her "Redeemer is mighty;" and their natural enmity against the holy covenant of God renders them exceedingly ready to take offence, or to vent their indignation against his people, when others affront and injure them: and they will generally find apostates and hypocrites, with whom to "hold intelligence" in these ruinous measures. When arms stand on their part, they do not fear to pollute God's sanctuary, and to desolate Zion by their abominations; and by their flattering promises they allure wicked professors to join them. Those, however, who know God, will put their trust in him, and he will enaof trouble, such as never was since there was a nation even to that same time: and at that time ^athy people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found ^b'written in the book.

ble them to stand their ground, to bear their cross and to maintain their conflict.—Frequently, when the church is most wasted by persecution, it is most honoured with able preachers, and replenished with numerous converts through their instructions.—But outward prosperity seldom greatly helps the cause of godliness: many at such times "cleave to" the people of God "by flatteries," and hypocrites multiply much more than true believers. Even they that have understanding, are often left to fall into some fiery trial, or even to be baffled by temptation, to prove and purify them; but their sufferings and conflicts will have an end, at the time when destruction shall overtake the workers of iniquity.

V. 36-45. How dreadfully do the transactions of the visible church illustrate the doctrine of man's depravity! The blasphemies and impious abrogations of the divine laws, to make way for man's inventions; the denying of the Head, in order to worship creatures; the most diabolical pride united with voluntary humility; the most carnal and abandoned conduct, cloaked under the appearance of the greatest mortification;—the most lavished profusion joined with the most extreme avarice and extortion, have been found in the greatest degree, among the rulers of the professedly Christian church! but these are antichristian abuses, which will soon come to an end, however men may now practise and prosper in them. The end of the Lord's indignation against his people, and of his patience towards his enemies, approaches; and if we would escape the ruin of the infidel, the idolater, and the superstitious and cruel persecutor, as well as that of the profane, we must make the oracles of God our standard of truth and duty, the foundation of our hope, and the light of our paths, through this dark world to the glorious inheritance above.

NOTES.—CHAP. XII. V. 1. Michael signifies, Who is like God? And this name, with the title of "the great Prince, which standeth for the children of thy people," clearly points out the divine Saviour, and cannot properly be understood of a created angel. (Marg. Ref. b, c. Note, 10:10-14, v. 13.) If the words, "at that time," be referred to the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, Christ's standing up may be explained of his incarnation, for the redemption of his people; and of the introduction of the gospel dispensation, just before those calamities began; but if we interpret "at that time," to refer to the ruin of the eastern and western Antichrists, as just before predicted; then Christ will stand up in his glorious power to terminate the afflictions of his people, and to make his cause triumph over all opposition. "The time of trouble," as including all that the Jews have suffered from the crucifixion of Christ to the present day, and all that yet remains for them to suffer, till their conversion to Christ and consequent restoration, has been so great and permanent, that their afflictions during their bondage in Egypt, or in the Babylonish captivity, and all their other persecutions from the beginning to the coming of Christ, were very light in the comparison. (Marg. Ref. a, d. Notes, 9:12. Gen. 49:10. Deut. 28:46. Luke 21:22-24.) Yet there were in the apostles' days, and have been since in every age, "a remnant according to the election of grace," who have been preserved from the national sin of unbelief, and from the punishments which have been inflicted on them for it. Nay, the unbelieving progenitors have been spared for the sake of those chosen ones, who were in due time to descend from them; and so every one has been, and will be delivered, who is found written in the book of God's secret purposes as his elect; or in the register of true believers, when those purposes are made known by the event. (Marg. Ref. e. Notes, Is. 6:13. 65:8-10. Matt. 24:21, 22. Rom. 11:1-6. Rev. 13:8-10.) The afflicted state of the church, and the events with which it shall terminate, seem to be also predicted. (Notes, Rev. 11:3-14. 14:14-20. 16:)

V. 2, 3. As these verses conclude the series of prophetic events, which have been deduced from the days of Daniel, to the complete setting up of Christ's kingdom on earth; it seems obvious to interpret them of the general resurrection. To whatever other event we endeavour to apply them; no adequate interpretation can be given of the words, "some to shame and everlasting contempt." For admitting that hypocrites do enter the visible church with true believers at every revival; yet their profession of faith cannot be an "awaking to everlasting shame and contempt." The awaking also of those, "that sleep in the dust," is very different from the resurrection of the souls, mentioned by St. John, (Note, Rev. 20:4-6, v. 4.) and the language so accords with that of the brightness of the firmament; and they that turn many to righteousness, as the stars for ever and ever.

4 But thou, O Daniel, "shut up the words, and seal the book, even to the time of the end: many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased.

[Practical Observations.]

5 ¶ Then I Daniel looked, and behold, there stood other two the one on this side of the 'bank of the river, and the other on that side of the bank of the river.

6 And one said to the 'man clothed in linen, which was upon the waters of the river, "How long shall it be to the end of these wonders?"

7 And I heard the man clothed in linen, which was upon the waters of the river, when he held up his right hand and his left hand unto heaven, and sware by him that liveth for ever, "that it shall be for a time, times, and a half; and when he shall have accomplished to scatter the power of the holy people, all these things shall be finished.

8 And I heard, but I understood not: then said I, O my Lord, "what shall be the end of these things?"

9 And he said, "Go thy way, Daniel: for the words are 'closed up and sealed till the time the end.

10 Many shall be purified, and made white, and tried; but the wicked shall do wickedly: and none of the wicked shall understand; but the wise shall understand.

11 And from the time that the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, and the abomination that 'maketh desolate set up, there shall be a thousand two hundred and ninety days.

12 "Blessed is he that waiteth, and cometh to the thousand three hundred and five and thirty days.

n Rom. 11:15. Rev. 20:4. o 9. * Or, and thou, &c. p 3. Is. 57:1,2. Zech. 8:7. Matt. 19:29. Luke 2:29,30. 2 Cor. 5:1. 2 Thes. 1:7. 2 Tim. 4:7,8. Rev.

five days." Bp. Newton. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. k, l. Notes, 8:13,14. 9:25,27. v. 27. 11:31. Matt. 24:15—18.) These twelve hundred and ninety days must be calculated from the same time, as "a time, times, and a half;" or three years and a half, or forty-two months, or twelve hundred and sixty years; and they reach to thirty years beyond them. The subversion of the kingdom of the papal Antichrist, and the destruction of the seat of the beast, and of the Mohammedan delusion, (Rev. 18:19;) will probably be at the end of the twelve hundred and sixty years; thirty years more may be taken up in wholly extirpating every antichristian power; and the last number of thirteen hundred and thirty-five years, which reaches forty-five years beyond that time, may predict the complete introduction of the millennium, when "the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea;" and happy will they be, who wait and live to see that time. (Notes, Rev. 11:15—18. 20:1—6.) Daniel having received this information, was directed to prepare for death and rest in heaven, for he would stand in his lot, as a glorified saint, to witness the accomplishment of these predictions. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. o—q. Notes, Is. 57:1,2. Luke 2:26—32. Rev. 14:12,13.)—Let any one carefully compare the terms and dates in these two concluding chapters of Daniel, with the Scriptures referred to in the margin, and the references on the notes on the chapters which have been commented on; and it is probable that he will no longer doubt, that the prophet Daniel, and the apostle John, in Revelation, spake of the same transactions.—¹ What an amazing prophecy is this, comprehending so many various events, and extending through so many successive ages; from the first establishment of the Persian empire, above five hundred and thirty years before Christ, to the general resurrection!... How much nobler and more exalted the sense, more important and more worthy to be known by men, and to be revealed by God, when taken in this extended view, and applied to this long and yet regular series of affairs, by the most easy and natural construction, than when confined and limited to the times and actions of Antiochus, to which yet it cannot be reconciled by the most strained and unnatural interpretation!" Bp. Newton.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—4. Our glorious Prince and Saviour, who once appeared on earth to make atonement for our sins, and who now is at the right hand of the Father, as our Advocate to plead our cause; will be sure to "stand up in behalf" of his people in the extremity of their trials and temptations, and to make them triumphant over all their enemies: nor can any troubles prevent the everlasting felicity of a single person, whose "name is written in the book of life." But none of our deliverances will be complete till that hour cometh, when "all that are in the graves shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and shall come forth: they that have done good, to the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil, to the resurrection of damnation." At that decisive season, when the multitude of the wicked shall not only be the objects of disdain and abhorrence to the righteous Judge of all, and his saints and angels, without any mixture of compassion or mercy; but shall even loathe and despise each other; the righteous shall obtain glory, honour, immortality, and eternal life. Let us then seek wisdom and righteousness, resist temptation manfully, bear up under troubles cheerfully, and wait for a happy issue of all our conflicts and sorrows.—But what peculiar and abundant encouragement may the faithful preachers of the gospel derive from this subject, amidst all their fatigues and difficulties, and the contempt and persecution, which they encounter in this evil world! For they are truly "wise, and shall shine in glory as the brightness of the firmament;" and every one, whom they are the instruments of turning unto righteousness, will be an addition to their crown of glory and rejoicing in the day of Christ. Let us not then "be weary of well doing; for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not." (Notes, Gal. 6:6—10. vv. 9,10. Phil. 2:14—18. v. 16.)

13 But go thou thy way till the end be: for thou shalt rest, and stand in thy lot at the end of the days.

V. 5—13. If we are enabled to obtain a well grounded assurance of eternal happiness, and are diligently employed in our proper work; we may be well satisfied, though a part of the sacred Scriptures should be "sealed up" from us: for God has so ordered it, that some things are to be closed from our view, and reserved for the use of future generations. We ought not, however, to be willingly ignorant of any part of revelation; but should, with modesty and humility, bestow much pains to understand and explain the sacred oracles, that knowledge may be increased; and when many are thus employed, some will discover one thing, and some another, and the whole will become better understood. May the Lord send forth many preachers and labourers in various ways, "who may run to and fro" all over the earth, to guide those who sit in darkness, into the ways of truth and righteousness!—Our Lord and Saviour, who rules over the "raging of the waters and the madness of the people," is the sole Proprietor of this knowledge; even angels, when they desire to look down and inquire into the affairs of his church, seek all their information from him; and he gives his servants on earth wisdom and knowledge, answerable to their occasions. We should then apply to him continually for instruction; what he communicates we should thankfully receive; but we should inquire no further into those things which he sees good to conceal. We know in general, that the prevalence of his enemies, "to scatter the power" of his saints, has an appointed period: and that he is continually "purifying to himself a peculiar people zealous of good works," even when wickedness most abounds and prospers: that all the trials of believers, yea, and all their temptations too, (though they often for the moment blacken and defile them,) shall eventually combine to "purify and make them white;" and that, when persecution stops the public administration of divine ordinances, and idolatry renders the visible church an abomination and a desolation; still there is a scattered or hidden remnant, who are wise to understand the ways of God, which "none of the wicked understand."—But glorious times approach. Happy will they be, who live to see them; yea, happy are believers at all times: they rest in God by faith now, and a rest is reserved for them in heaven at last. They may then cheerfully look forward to a dying hour; when the Lord will bid them "depart in peace," for their eyes have seen, and their hearts have experienced, his salvation; they may expect to rest in their happy lot in the end of their days; and in heaven to share the triumphs of the church on earth, which they here foresaw, or longed and prayed for, but did not live to witness. (P. O. Rev. 20:1—6.)

BOOK OF HOSEA.

THE twelve remaining prophecies have long been considered as one book. It is thought, that St. Stephen referred to this arrangement, when quoting a passage from Amos, he says, "As it is written in the book of the prophets:" (Acts 7:42.) and it is certain, that in the first ages of Christianity, both Jews and Christians numbered up the books of the Old Testament, according to it. This may help to show what those books were, to which Christ and his apostles referred, as The Scriptures, and The oracles of God.—The writers of this part of Scripture are generally called THE MINOR PROPHETS; not that their writings were inferior, in excellency or authority, to the larger works of the other prophets: but merely on account of their brevity.—They are not placed exactly after the order in which the prophets delivered them. Nine of them prophesied before the captivity; three (Haggai, Zechariah and Malachi;) prophesied after the Jews were returned from Babylon; and some of the former were as early, or more so, than the prophet Isaiah; especially Jonah, who evidently preceded all the others. As to the rest, the various schemes formed, and the different opinions held, by very learned men, and the slender grounds on which in some cases they rest their opinions, show that it is a subject of more difficulty than use. A general reference to the prefaces to each prophecy; and to the dates affixed to it, or the different parts of it, must here suffice.

It may be supposed that these prophets who wrote little, and many who wrote nothing, were eminent and useful preachers of righteousness, to their own generations; and perhaps some of them did more service in their own time, than those who have left more behind them for the benefit of posterity; at least the Lord generally dispenses his gifts and services in this manner.

Hosea, whose prophecy we now enter upon, exercised his sacred office for a great many years: he predicted the captivity of the ten Tribes long before it arrive, yet he probably lived to witness its near approach. He is supposed to have been of the kingdom of Israel, though his prophecies frequently relate to Judah also. His style is remarkably concise, sententious, and unconnected, though some parts are peculiarly pathetic, animated, and sublime. His general scope was to convince his people of their exceeding sinfulness, and to warn them by the terror, and lead them by the goodness of God to repentance. His predictions of events, which soon took place, are numerous: but those relating to the state of Israel and Judah for many ages, the conversion of the Gentiles, and the future restoration of Israel, are peculiarly distinct and striking; they coincide with those of the other prophets; and the extraordinary fulfilment of several of them, in past and present times, both proves the divine inspiration of the writer, and gives assurance that the rest will in due time be accomplished.—Considering the brevity of this prophecy, few parts of the Old Testament are more fully attested by quotations, or clear references, in the New. (Comp. 1:10, 11, 2:23, with Rom. 9:25, 26. 1 Pet. 2:10.—6:6. with Matt. 9:13.—10:9. with Luke 23:30. Rev. 6:16.—11:1. with Matt. 2:15.—13:14. with 1 Cor. 13:1, 55.)—Very strong language has been used, by some learned men, on the corrupt state, in which the original text of the minor prophets is general, and of Hosea in particular, has been sent down to us; and abundant corrections, some on very slender authority, others purely conjectural, some where they might seem to render the sense more clear, others where, to me at least, they appear to render it more obscure, have been proposed.—But this method, if freely encouraged, is a desperate remedy: it tends to add to, and take from, the word of God, and to substitute the conjectures of men, in the place of his infallible oracles. In a few instances, with great caution and sobriety, on the united authority of manuscripts and versions, a slight alteration may be admissible: but in general, it is probable, that the humble, diligent, and pious student of Scripture will find, that the text, as it now stands, contains in every part an important and instructive meaning. Industry, (with earnest prayer,) in endeavouring to understand the sacred oracles, in their present state, would perhaps do more to render the meaning of them intelligible, explicit, and impressive; than all the labour which is taken to correct and improve the text: and if at last, a few passages remained obscure or ambiguous; this would by no means be of such bad consequence, as conjectural alterations, or alterations on dubious authority.

The translation of this prophecy, likewise, has been much complained of: and perhaps some passages are less exactly and clearly rendered, than usual. But it is no easy matter to give an unexceptionable version of so concise an ancient book, which is on many accounts peculiarly difficult: and it is very doubtful, whether, all things considered, a better translation could at present be made, than that which we already possess: at least such attempts, in this and other instances, do not appear to have been very successful.

CHAPTER I.

An account of the prophet, and of the times when he lived, 1. At God's command, and to expose the idolatry of Israel, he takes a wife of whoredoms; and calls his children, by names expressive of the judgments which were coming on his people, 2-9. The increase and restoration of Judah and Israel, under one Head, is predicted, 10, 11.

NOTES.—CHAP. I. V. 1. This is the general title of the book: Hosea wrote “the word of the LORD, that came to him.” (Marg. Ref. a.) His name is the same as Joshua, or Jesus, except the word is compounded with the first syllable of the word JEHOVAH. It signifies salvation. (Notes, Josh. 13:16. Matt. 1:20, 21.)—All the kings of Judah, who succeeded each other during Hosea's ministry, are mentioned: but Jeroboam king of Israel alone, under whose reign he began to prophesy; for after Jeroboam's death the affairs of Israel fell into the utmost confusion. (Marg. Ref. c, d. Notes, 2 Kings 14:21-28. 15:8-30. 2 Chr. 26:—29.) If we suppose, that the prophet exercised his ministry for a few of the last years of Jeroboam, and of the first of Hezekiah, we shall find that he laboured in the work nearly seventy years, and must have lived to a very great age. No information is given of the time in which he delivered any one of his predictions. (Note, Is. 1:1.)

V. 2, 3. The prophet was called to enter on his prophetic office in a very remarkable manner. When he was, as it seems, a very young man, he was commanded by the Lord, to marry “a wife of whoredoms;” one notorious for that vice, and whose children would be considered as “children of whoredoms.” This was intended to be an emblem of the Lord's dealings with the idolatrous Israelites, whom he had espoused to himself. And accordingly Hosea married Gomer the daughter of Diblaim.—It has been much disputed, whether this were done in reality or in vision; or whether it were any thing more than a parable, which he was commanded to speak to the people. But it seems to be taking an unauthorized liberty with Scripture, to explain narrative into vision or parable, without absolute necessity, or the least intimation of it in the text. (Note, Jer. 13:1-7.)—Even if we consider it as a reality, many difficulties remain to be solved. It is argued, that it would have been inconsistent with the prophet's character, to marry a notoriously bad woman: and therefore some have conjectured, that she was previously reformed, as Rahab the harlot had been, before she was married to Salmon. Others imagine, that she bore a good character when the prophet married her, but afterwards became “a wife of whoredoms” and her children were brought under the suspicion of being “children of whoredoms;” and this is more plausible than the former, which by no means accords to the thing signified. (Marg. Ref. f-h. Note. 3:1-3.) But perhaps it may be shown, that it was not unlawful, or immoral, for the prophet to marry a licentious woman, on such an occasion. Some restrictions were laid upon the priests in these respects; but Hosea, not being a priest, was not concerned in them. (Notes, Lev. 21:7, 10-15. Ez. 44:22.) Gomer was an Israelite, and so not included in the prohibitions of intermarrying with Gentiles. The rule in the New Testament, of believers marrying “only in the Lord,” was doubtless always obligatory, as to the spirit of it, in ordinary cases; because most important consequences depend on it; but, (like the laws against the marriages of near relations,) though generally and highly expedient, it cannot be deemed of immutable and indispensable obligation; for cases may be imagined in which it must be violated, or other moral laws of God be broken. (Notes, Lev. 18:6-17. 1 Cor. 7:39, 40. 2 Cor. 6:14-18.) The express command of God would suffice to authorize any deviations from ordinary rules, which were not of immutable and moral obligation: and it is impossible, that he should actually command an immoral action; though he might command what, without such a command, would be wrong for a man to do, as he enjoined the extirpation of the Midianites and the Canaanites, men, women, and children. (Notes, Num. 31:2, 14-18. Josh. 7:24.) So that it might not only be lawful for the prophet thus to marry, but be his bounden duty; and to bear the heavy cross that it would lay on him.—The Israelites were idolatrous in Egypt, before their national espousals to the Lord at Mount Sinai, as well as afterwards; so that they were, through their successive generations, unto him, “a wife of whoredoms, and children of whoredoms.” (Note, Ez. 20:7-9.) it would therefore form a more affecting picture of God's unmerited goodness and unwearied patience, and of their perverseness and ingratitude, by which they grieved him, wearied him out, and dishonoured him, if we take it literally, than if we adopt any other interpretation of it. A man, who had a wife, who both before and after marriage was guilty of incontinence, would be ready to look upon her children with suspicion, and to consider them as “children of whoredoms;” and others would be apt to think the same: this was the case of the Lord respecting the people of Israel; and it will perhaps afterwards appear, that the conduct of the prophet exactly pictured that of God to Israel, with respect to his past, present, and predicted future dealings, with that favoured but ungrateful nation. (Notes, Ez. 16: 23:)

V. 4, 5. Gomer, the name of Hosea's wife, may signify consumption. This might in general denote the speedy ruin of the kingdom of Israel for their idolatries. The names, also, which God commanded the prophet to give his sons by Gomer, referred to the different gradations, by which that ruin would come upon them.—Jezreel was the city, where Jehu smote the family of Ahab: the name signifies, the seed of God, or scattered by God, as seed is when sown; Jehu had executed judgment on Ahab's family, and was recompensed for that service, by the continuance of the kingdom in his family to the fourth generation. But his subsequent conduct evinced, that he was actuated by selfish motives in all that he did; the ambition, cruelty, and hypocrisy, of which he was then guilty, were to be avenged on his house, after their subsequent idolatry and iniquity had ripened them for this destruction; and then the kingdom would speedily cease from the house of Israel. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. k, l. Notes, 2 Kings 9:25, 26. 10:29-31.) This was predicted towards the close of the reign of Jeroboam, the grandson of Jehu, whose son Zachariah was soon murdered by Shallum who usurped the throne; and from that time the history of the kingdom of Israel contains little else than conspiracies, murders, and usurpations: till it was subverted by the Assyrians, and the people were scattered of God, through the various provinces of the Assyrian empire. (Notes, 2 Kings 14:23—28. 15:8—31. 17:18—12. 1 Chr. 5:25, 26.)—Perhaps some fatal battle was afterwards fought in the valley of Jezreel, in which the Assyrians broke the bow, or destroyed the military force, of the kingdom of Israel.

V. 6, 7. The daughter, which Gomer next bare, has been considered as an emblem of the unfeeling state of Israel, after the fall of Jehu's family: her name signifies "Not having obtained mercy." (Marg. and Ref.) and implied that God would finally cast off the kingdom of Israel, as a separate people, and no more show them the special mercy which he bears to his chosen inheritance. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. p. q. Note, 9:15—17.) But at the same time he promised that he would "have mercy on Judah, and save them by the LORD their God," and not by the weapons of war. (Marg. Ref. r—t. Notes, 2 Kings 19:30—35. Ezra 1:1—4.) Some explain this of the deliverance of Judah from the Assyrian invasion, by the miraculous destruction of Sennacherib's army, and not by any human means: others of their return from captivity, by the Lord's powerfully inclining the heart of Cyrus to release them. We should not however lose sight of the great salvation "by the LORD their God," when he was "manifested in the flesh" to effect even that spiritual redemption, of which all the temporal deliverances of his people were no more than types and shadows. Of this salvation all the prophets wrote; the Jewish nation was continued in possession of their privileges, till "this Horn of salvation was raised" up among them. (Notes, Is. 40:9—11. 45:20—25. Jer. 23:5, 6. Zech. 2:6—13. 4:4—7. 9:9, 10. Matt. 1:20—23. Tit. 3:4—7.) His victories were obtained, not by bow or sword, but by his precious blood and powerful grace: and he will at last save the Jews, and recover them from their present dispersions; for which purpose, they are evidently reserved from age to age a separate people; whilst the Israelites have either been incorporated among them, or among the Gentiles. (Notes, Num. 23:9. Jer. 30:10, 11.)

V. 8—10. "Lo-ammi" signifies, Not my people; (marg.) as Israel had not sought or "obtained mercy." God would no longer own them as his people; they would be left entirely to renounce his worship, and he would utterly cast them out of his special protection. Yet he would not break his promise made to their fathers: the numbers of the Israelites would still be "as the sand of the sea." Multitudes of their tribes would be joined to the Jews, or converted along with them to Christ: and the innumerable millions of the Gentiles, who should become the children of God by faith in Jesus Christ, would be indeed the true Israel and "the seed of Abraham," as united to that one Seed to whom the promises were made. So that, in the places, where it had heretofore been said that the inhabitants were not God's people, there would many be addressed as the children of the living God. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, Rom. 4:9—12. 9:24—29. Gal. 3:15—18. v. 16. 26—29. 1 Pet. 2:10.)

I will not be your God. (9.) Or, "I will not be unto you," that is a Husband, or Father, or God. (Note, 2:2—5.) "I will no more own you for my people, nor continue my protection over you. (Lev. 26:12. Ez. 11:20. 14:1.) Louth.

V. 11. This may refer to the union of the Israelites with the Jews, who came up under Zerubbabel after the captivity: they were not divided as before, but "appointed themselves one head," or captain and ruler over them all. (Note, Ezra 1:7—11.) Or it may relate to the conversion of the Israelites as well as the Jews to Christ, in the primitive times: or rather to that future period when the Jews, and all the Israelites who are or shall be incorporated with them, or wherever dispersed, shall gather together, and submit to Christ, as their Head of authority, direction, protection, and influence; and so come up out of the land of their captivity: for, as the scattering of the people by the Lord has been great and long: so the day of their being gathered from their dispersion shall be very glorious in itself, and in its consequences; which seems to be intended by "the day of Jezreel." PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—5. It would seldom be expedient, and sometimes it would not be lawful, for us to exercise all that tenderness, compassion, and liberal kindness to those who grossly violate their relative and social engagements, which the Lord shows to us, after all our ingratitude, unfaithfulness, and misbehaviour to him: but he has provided a method, in which to display the honour of his justice and holiness, whilst his grace abounds to the chief of sinners.—We should be ready to be any trial or cross in our persons, or in domestic and relative life, which the Lord pleases to appoint for us. He has a right to our implicit submission; our sharpest afflictions are far less than our deservings; and he can make up all losses to us, and comfort us in the most disquieting circumstances.—That situation may become safe and easy to us, when the Lord appoints it for us, which would have been intolerable and perilous, if we had thrust ourselves into it: and when we are obedient to God's command, we may trust our characters with him, and venture all consequences; even though we act contrary to the general sentiments of mankind in ordinary cases.—We should be broken and wearied out, with a very little part of that perverseness from others with which we try the patience and grieve the Spirit of our God: nor can any event in life sufficiently illustrate his long-suffering and mercy to his people, and their base and ungrateful conduct to him.—But, while the upright soul, who loathes and mourns over his sins, may still hope in that mercy, which he is conscious of having abused; let the proud, hypocritical, and hardened rebel beware. His specious and hollow services will have their reward; but his pride and hypocrisy will meet with their merited punishment: and though avarice, ambition, and iniquity may for a time advance a man's family, or even promote the prosperity of a nation; yet they will at length bring down a load of vengeance, which will scatter or sink them in infamy and ruin.

V. 6—11. The Lord's mercy is infinite and "everlasting towards them that fear him;" but it has its limits in respect of impenitent sinners and guilty nations; the time approaches when he "will no more have mercy" on them for ever: and dreadful will be the case of those, who shall "have not obtained mercy," when death shall summon them to God's tribunal! But "the salvation of the righteous is of the LORD:" he saves them by his own mercy, truth, and power, from guilt and sin, from Satan and this present world, and from all their enemies; that they may "serve him in righteousness and true holiness before him, all the days of their lives;" and they need fear no dangers, who have God for their "Shield and exceeding great Reward." Though many of his professed people have been cast off, and he would no more be their God; yet the number of his true Israel can never be known. Blessed be his name, that in our land, of which it might once have been said, "Ye are not my people;" it may now be said of numbers, "Ye are the children of the living God." May it be truly said of the writer, and every reader of these Observations!—Let us then join ourselves to his worshippers, and enlist under the banner of our appointed Head that with one accord we may leave the land of our captivity, and march forward to the Canaan above; celebrating as we proceed the glory of our Redeemer, the greatness of our deliverance, our invaluable privileges, and our joyful prospect.—And let us pray for that glorious day, when the scattered Jews shall gather themselves to Christ, and be again numbered amongst his seed, his true Israel; and when there shall be "one LORD and his name One," through all the nations of the earth. (Notes, Zech. 14:6—9. v. 9. Matt. 6:9.)

8-10.) and the Jews are here exhorted to acknowledge them as brethren, and to call them "Ammi," or "My people," and "Ruhamah," or "Having obtained mercy." (Note, 1:6, 7.) They were required to treat all, who had obtained mercy, and were become God's people, as brothers and sisters; and to congratulate them on their admission to this happy estate. It may also intimate that when Israel should be cast off from being God's peculiar people, there would still be found a remnant, to whom his servants might thus address themselves, at the time when the prophet wrote, and when the Jewish nation was rejected after the coming of Christ. (Notes, Acts 15:22-29. 1 Pet. 2:9-11.)—Some expositors interpret this of the general restoration of the Jewish nation: but St. Paul evidently quotes the passage referred to, as a prediction of the calling of the Gentiles. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, 21-23. Rom. 9:24-29.)

V. 2-5. While the servants of God were directed to own, as brethren, the converted Gentiles, and the restored of Israel; they were called on to plead in the name of God "with their mother," or the church and nation of Israel. When the prophets protested against idolatry, and the pious remnant separated from idolaters, though their kings, princes, and priests, and the bulk of the nation were of that number, they then "pleaded with their mother." When Christ and his apostles severely reprov'd the chief priests, scribes, Pharisees, and the nation in general, and foretold their rejection and the calling of the Gentiles, they pleaded with their adulterous mother, and took the Lord's part against her; and by encouraging penitent publicans, harlots, Samaritans, and Gentiles, they said "to their brethren, Ammi, and to their sisters, Ruhamah."—It might be deemed unprofitable for sons to plead against their mother; yet the honour of their God and Father on this occasion required it. She was therefore to be reminded, that the Lord no longer considered her as his wife, or himself as her Husband; and that he would proceed to execute judgment on her, unless she deeply repented and was thoroughly reformed. (Marg. Ref. b, c. Notes, 1:8-10, v. 9. Is. 50:1-3. Jer. 3:1-11. 26:1-9.)—This was expressed by "putting away her whoredoms out of her sight, and her adulteries from between her breasts, &c." and it implied a command, to put away all the idols from the land, and to avoid whatever might tempt them or others to that crime; and to pull down, as it were, the idols which were set up in their hearts. If this were not done immediately, the Lord threatened, that he would "strip her naked, &c." that is, he would deprive the people of all their honourable distinctions and invaluable advantages, and reduce them to the most abject, contemptible, and miserable condition, similar to their bondage in Egypt, in the infancy of the nation; and would leave them, as in a wilderness, to perish with hunger and thirst. (Marg. Ref. d-h. Notes, Ez. 16:3-8, 35-43. 23:27.) Nor would he "have mercy on their children" for they were born of idolaters, brought up in idolatry, and even dedicated to idols: and therefore God regarded them as "children of whoredoms." (Marg. Ref. k-m. Notes, 2:3, 5:7. Mal. 2:10-12.) And indeed what else could be expected of them, when their mother had been so abandoned, as to run into the most shameful practices? For the people in general ascribed their plenty and prosperity, in things temporal, to the bounty of their idols; and were emboldened to go on in the abominable worship of them, by abounding in every thing which they could abuse to sensuality.—Thus the heathens used to worship one imaginary deity as the giver of their corn, another as the giver of their wine, or of their fruit; and, in the festivals kept in honour of these idols, they ran into the most shameful excesses.—By lovers are meant, in the first place, the idols with which the Israelites committed spiritual fornication: (Jer. 31:1.) and then the idolatrous nations, whose alliance the Israelites courted, and in order to it practised their idolatries. Louth. (Marg. Ref. n, o. Notes, 8, 9. Jude. 9:26-29, v. 27. Jer. 44:15-18. Ez. 16:16-22.)—There seems no sufficient reason for interpreting this chapter exclusively of the ten tribes, as many expositors do.

V. 6, 7. The Lord did not intend wholly to cast off all the seed of Israel; and therefore speaking of the nation in general, he declared his purpose of keeping them from sinking into universal idolatry.—While the infatuated harlot was eagerly bent on following after her lovers; God purposed to make a thorn-hedge across her road, through which she could not pass without greatly tearing herself; nay, to build a wall which she could not get over to find her paths. So that, though she attempted "to follow her lovers, she should not overtake them." That is, the Lord would so punish his people by heavy judgments, as to preserve them from total idolatry: thus while very great numbers would perish, a remnant would be recovered and preserved from that abomination. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. q, r. Notes, 3:4, 5, 14:1-3. Is. 27:7-11, v. 9. Ez. 20:33-38. 36:25-14, v. 7. Hab. 1:12-17. Luke 15:13-16.) When the ten tribes were carried into Assyria, and the Jews to Babylon, neither their idols nor their idolatrous allies could do them any good: and not being able to overtake them, or to find protection and deliverance from them, they would be convinced of their folly in forsaking the living God for dead idols, their first Husband for these worthless lovers; and so, coming to themselves, they would be led to return home to repent, to seek reconciliation, and readmission to their former privileges. This seems immediately to predict the restoration of the Jews and many Israelites with them, from the Babylonish captivity, when they were effectually recovered from gross idolatry; but the future conversion of the nation may also be intended. (Marg. Ref. s-u. Notes, 5:15, 6:1-3. Ps. 116:7. Jer. 31:18-20. Luke 15:17-19.)

V. 8, 9. The people did not understand, consider, or acknowledge, that the Lord gave them all their temporal mercies; and this ignorance or forgetfulness exposed them to be tempted to abuse them in sacrifices, oblations, or vestments, prepared for Baal and other idols. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. x, y. Notes, 13:1, 2. 2 Chr. 24:4-14, v. 7. Hab. 1:12-17. Acts 17:22-25.) To convince them of this, the Lord intended to resume his grant: it had been but a loan to them, which he would recover by distraining upon them for it; seeing they had thus most evidently forfeited it.—At the very season when she expects to receive the fruits of the earth, her enemies shall invade her, and destroy them. Louth. (Marg. Ref. z, a. Notes, 10-13. Is. 3:16, 17, v. 17. 18-26, vv. 24-26. Ez. 16:15-22.)—They prepared unto Baal. (v.) "Wherewith they made Baal." Marg. their wickedness and shame; nor should any deliver them from deserved punishment. They observed festivals in honour of their idols; yet they seem to have paid regard to some of those appointed in the law, and to have made them seasons of jovial mirth and sensual indulgence: and the Jews came from the worship of idols, to celebrate them at the temple. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. b, e. Notes, 9:4—6. 1 Kings 12:26—33. Jer. 7:8—11. Ez. 16:35—43. 23:28, 42. Rev. 17:15—18.) But the Lord would turn their mirth into mourning; when, by his desolating judgments he destroyed all their vines and fig-trees, which they vainly supposed were given them by their idols, as a recompense for worshipping them. Thus he would visit on the nation the sins of all those days and years during which they had worshipped Baalim, or idols; when they had resembled an adulteress, who adorns herself with her most costly attire, at the expense of her injured husband, that she may be the more agreeable to her wicked paramours: for they were entirely forgetful of the authority of God and their obligations to him.—Jehu had “destroyed Baal out of Israel;” but the people had substituted other idols in his place; and so had filled up the measure of their father’s crimes: and the Jews set up the worship of Baal, and adhered to it, till the Babylonish captivity. (Notes, 9:1, 2. 2 Kings 10:28—31. 21:3. 23:4. Jer. 19:5.) It is probable that the idolaters adorned themselves with great care, as well as wore peculiar garments, when worshipping their idols. (2 Kings 10:22.)—By showing how harlots trim themselves to please others, he declareth how that superstitious idolaters set a great part of their religion in decking themselves on their holy days. V. 14—17. The preceding prophecies were fulfilled, in the captivities of Israel and Judah, and perhaps in the present dispersion of the Jews. But when these judgments had prepared the way, the Lord intended to deal with them in a more gentle manner. He would “allure,” or persuade them to return to him by invitations and hopes of reconciliation and felicity: he would thus draw them off from worldly pleasures and carnal confidences, and make all their former delusions to vanish, so that they would see themselves as in a barren wilderness, and exposed to inevitable ruin, except the Lord helped them; as the case had been with their fathers in the wilderness. And when they should thus be reduced to despair of help, he would speak comfortably to them, and encourage them to trust in his mercy, grace, and providence. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. o—r. Notes, Ez. 16:1—3. 17:1—4. Deut. 8:2, 3. 32:10—12. Ez. 20:33—38.) Thus he would, from that destitute and forlorn condition, restore them to the possession of their former privileges; as if fruitful vineyards were suddenly given in a barren wilderness: and “the valley of Achor,” or Trouble, (where Achan was stoned,) in which Israel had fallen before his enemies, would be “for a door of hope,” preparing them for mercy, by humbling them, and leading them to renounce their idols, and seek help from God alone.—This valley was also one of the first acquisitions of Israel in Canaan, and an encouraging earnest of their possessing the whole. (Marg. Ref. s—u. Notes, Josh. 7:24—26. Is. 65:8—10. v. 10.)—Thus being delivered from all their enemies and sorrows, they would sing praises with joyful hearts, as their fathers had done before, when they saw the Egyptians dead upon the seashore. (Marg. Ref. x, y. Notes, Ez. 15:1—21.) From that time they would be more cordially attached to the Lord than ever: no longer “calling him Baal,” or my Lord, or Master, alluding to the authority rather than the affection of a husband; but “Ish,” which is the language of cordial affection in a woman speaking to her husband. V. 18—20. When the people were weaned from idols, and attached in love and faithfulness to the worship of God; he would then not only renew his covenant with them, but he would make a covenant in their behalf “with the beasts of the field,” and every animal: that is, he would take care that no creature should do them any harm, and that all should concur in doing them good. Their land was occupied by “the beasts of the field,” during the captivity, when it had been desolated by war: but he would afterwards rid the country of them, and defend it from invaders, and make it a quiet and secure habitation for them. (*Marg. Ref. b—e. Notes, Job 5:20—23. Ps. 91:3—13. Is. 11:6—9. Ez. 34:23—31. Lord to fill their clouds with water, that they might water the land; and he promises to hear them the earth is represented as calling on the heavens to pour down rain, and they hear: the fruits of the ground call also on the earth to furnish them with supplies, and are heard; and these again regard the desires and wants of Jezreel, or that people, who had been "the seed of God," yet by him scattered, but who are then to be gathered to him. (Notes, 1:4,5,11.) All nature seems alive and active in helping converted Israel: and the abundant supply of their spiritual wants, in answer to the prayers of the people and ministers of Christ, and through the ordinances of his appointment may also be thus typified. The dispersion of Israel and Judah would at length prove, like the scattering of seed upon the earth, in order to a large increase; for God would (through them, when dispersed as seed in the earth,) "have mercy on them who had not obtained mercy," and gather those among his people, who had not before owned, worshipped, and rejoiced in him as their God. This is applied by the apostle to the conversion both of Jews and Gentiles to Christ: and the latter part of the chapter evidently foretells that restoration of Israel, which shall be "as life from the dead" to the nations of the earth. (Marg. Ref. k, m, p. See on Note, 18-20. Notes, Is. 4:2. Mic. 5:7-9, v. 7. Zech. 8:20-23. 10:5-12, v. 9. 13:8,9. Rom. 9:24-29, vs. 25,26. 11:11-15.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-5. We ought gladly and thankfully to own and love all those as brethren, whom God appears to have "put among his children;" and encourage them with the consideration, that they have obtained mercy, and are become his people.—But the ministers of Christ must not connive at the corruptions in doctrine or worship, or the other evil practices or customs of that religious community, which claims the authority, and stands in the relation to them, of a "mother:" for the glory of God, and the interests of his truth and righteousness, should be far nearer to our hearts, than the credit or favour of our fellow-creatures, however related to us or advanced above us. And indeed, every Christian ought, by his example, profession, and conversation, to protest against the superstitions, errors, or abuses of that church, to which he belongs, or from which he has been brought forth: for eminently pious persons are sometimes raised up within those corrupt churches which God is about to give up to destruction; on purpose to bear testimony against them, and call men to repentance: that a remnant may be preserved or rescued from the contagion which has infected the rest.—If men would escape sin and condemnation, they must put all occasions of evil out of sight, repress the rising sinful inclination of the heart, and shun whatever may be a temptation to them, or render them temptations to others.—Impenitent sinners will soon be stripped of all their abused advantages and worldly prosperity, and exposed to the utmost shame, contempt, and misery: and those who have trained up their children in impiety, iniquity, or false religion, cannot reasonably expect, that God will confer spiritual blessings upon them. Idolaters and the supporters of divers kinds of false religion, often ascribe their temporal enjoyments to their sins or idols, and thus are emboldened to commit still more iniquity; whereas the Lord "giveth us all things richly to enjoy," and the devil tempts men to consume them upon their lusts.

V. 6-13. When we are inflamed, by the violence of any headstrong passion, or harassing temptation, and bent upon the gratification of depraved inclinations; it is a special mercy to have our way "hedged up with thorns," or closed by some insurmountable wall, that we may not be able to overtake our beloved idols and pleasures: and if pain, sickness, or any calamity keep us from sin, we should be thankful for it.—Every godly man will habitually prefer suffering to sin: and it is even a mercy to ungodly men to be kept by severe affliction from "treasuring up wrath against the day of wrath." But if insurmountable obstructions, and inextricable difficulties not only disable them for a time from finding any pleasure in their sins, or from committing them, but are the means at length of bringing them to themselves, to perceive and lament their folly in departing from God, and to return to him, humbly seeking forgiveness and salvation: the mercy is inestimably precious. (Note, 2 Chr. 33:12,13. P. O. 11-25. Dan. 4:10-18. Notes, Luke 15:13-19. P. O. 11-24.) When professors of the gospel depart from the ways of God, and meet with no such thorn-hedges and strong walls to impede their sinful course, and to bring them back ashamed and humbled, their case looks very dark: but if backsliders are by such discipline led to say, "I will go and return to the Lord, that I may again have the comfort of communion with him, and of my relation to him; for then it will be far better with me than now," we should encourage and exhort them to be firm and decided in so doing. If men forget, or consider not, that their comforts come from God, and so use them in a sinful manner; he will often in mercy take them away, to bring the offenders to reflect on their folly and danger. When he turns unjust stewards out of their stewardship, and calls them to give an account of it, none of their friends or idols can deliver them out of his hand; and all shall see, and be constrained to confess, that they deserve their ignominy and misery.—In this our land of affluence and abundance, what numbers prepare their corn, wine, oil, gold, and silver, for Baal, by their excess, luxury, and ostentation! And often the behaviour of those who are employed in gathering in the precious fruits of the earth, seems to be an attempt to revive the bacchanalian riots of ancient idolaters. (Note, Ruth 2:4.)—Men who live in allowed sin, and then pretend to rejoice in God's ordinances, or on religious festivals, (as many ungodly persons do in their carnal way of celebrating Christmas, and other seasons commemorated among Christians), are most awfully deceived: "all such rejoicing is vain," and tends to "weeping and gnashing of teeth."

V. 14-23. When sinners seem ripe for vengeance; the Lord sometimes shows his sovereign grace, in having mercy on them in order to bring them to repentance, he both drives them from their sins by his terrors and judgments, and "allures" them, by discoveries of his love, and hopes of acceptance and happiness. He often deprives them of all hope and comfort in the world, and from themselves; and when their humiliation, terrors, and sorrows tend to desperation, he speaks comfortably to their hearts. He brings them into a desolate wilderness, where no joy can be found, except from his mercy; and thence he gives them all the provisions of his grace, and the comforts and privileges of his salvation. He makes the valley of deep dejection, and extreme trouble, to be "a door of hope" to them; and drives them to despair of earthly joy, and help from themselves; that, being shut out from every other door, they may more earnestly knock at mercy's gate until it be opened. Then their terrors and sorrows are terminated; he brings them out of the horrible pit, and puts a new song into their mouths, and they sing, "O Lord, I will praise thee, though thou wast angry with me, yet thine anger is turned away, and thou comfortedst me: behold God is become my salvation, I will trust and not be afraid." (Note, Is. 12:1-3.)—The Lord loses none of his authority by his condescending love to us; yet his awful majesty thus becomes the object of our confidence and delight: and believers are enabled to expect all that tenderness and kindness from their holy God, which a beloved wife can expect from the most affectionate husband; yea far more. But he saves them from their idols, and sets them against their sins, and both inclines and enables them to walk before him "in newness of life," as well as gives them the joy of his favour and salvation.—If his new covenant be made with us, he will make "all things to work together for our good," and every creature shall help us: for all things are ours, even death itself; and we may lie down with peace and security in his clay-cold bed, having committed our spirit into the Redeemer's hands. (Notes, Acts 7:54-60. Rom. 8:28-39. 1 Cor. 3:18-23. Phil. 1:21-26.) Happy then are they who are thus betrothed to the Lord, "in righteousness, judgment, loving-kindness, mercies, and faithfulness;" though in themselves poor and polluted, weak and foolish; yet in him they have wisdom, strength, and righteousness; and they are enriched, ennobled, arrayed with garments of salvation, and made most blessed for evermore. Even the worst of transgressors are now invited to seek, and encouraged to hope for, union with the Lord of life and glory, in this honourable and endeared relation; nor can too much be expected from his grace, who shed his precious blood for rebels and enemies. Let us then seek an interest in these blessings, compared with which all others are worthless: let us remember, that we are sown in the earth as seed, that in our several places we may conduce to the conversion of our fellow-sinners; that they may seek and "obtain mercy, who had not obtained mercy," and that they may say to the Lord, "Thou art my God," who have been strangers and enemies. (Notes, Matt. 5:13-16. 1 Pet. 1:1,2.) Let us keep this object in view, in all our actions and our whole conversation; and let us continually pour out our supplications, for ourselves and all around us, to God, who "gives grace and glory, and withholdeth no good thing from those that walk uprightly." (Note, Ps. 84:11,12.)

NOTES.—CHAP. III. V. 1-3. Some interpret this as a vision, or parable which the prophet spake to the people. and those, who consider it as a fact, have some hesitation in deciding, whether it related to Hosea's former wife, or to another woman on whom he was to fix his affections. (Note, 1:2,3.) It seems, however, most probable, that it is the continuation and conclusion of the prophet's account of the transaction, with which his prophetic office began; and which was a picture of the Lord's dealings with Israel. He had married a woman of bad character, and had treated her with affection and kindness; yet she afterwards became an adul teress and departed from him. She had been "beloved of her friend" and husband, but proved unfaithful; yet he continued to love her; and he was directed to go and show his love by his conduct towards her. Instead of a public prosecution, or a private divorce; (Marg. Ref. a, b. Note, Matt. 1:18,19.) he went with overtures of reconciliation, and only required that she would remain in a state of separation from him "for many days," a competent time to evince the sincerity of her repentance; and that she would no more renew her adulteries, but reserve herself for him; and then he promised to consider himself as her husband, and at length to take her back to him.—The money and the barley with which he bought her to him, accorded to the customs of those times, when they often gave dowries for, instead of receiving them with, their wives. (Notes, 12:12-14. 1 Sam. 18:23-27.) This implied, that the marriage had been virtually dissolved by her adulteries; and perhaps it served, or was intended, for her maintenance during the days of her seclusion, and to keep her from the temptation of becoming a harlot for subsistence. And the small sum of money, (about £1. 17s. 6d.) and the coarseness of the provisions, being barley, not wheat, might denote the disgraced and abject condition to which sin had reduced her; and might intimate, that she ought to submit to present inconveniences, and wait patiently the time of being restored to favour.—We may conclude, from the things signified by this transaction, that she submitted to the terms, was received again by the prophet, and behaved better afterwards. For this was "according to the love of the LORD for the children of Israel."—Some interpret this almost wholly of the kingdom of Israel: but the prophecy requires us to understand it of the whole people, descended from Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. They had been espoused to the Lord in the wilderness, notwithstanding their idolatries in Egypt; and yet, after all the displays of his love to them through their successive generations, they were always prone to fix their eyes on base idols: this was adultery, a violation of their marriage covenant. (Marg. Ref. c, d. Notes, Ez. 16: 20:17-23. 23:) They "also loved flagons of wine," they were attached to idol-worship, because in it they gave unbridled license to their sensual appetites. (Notes, Ez. 32:1-6. Num. 25:1-3.) But the Lord still had love for the nation; and though he meant to deprive them of their privileges, exclude them from his church for many days, and to debase and reduce them to great distress; yet they would still subsist as a distinct people, and at length be anew betrothed to him, and reinstated in his favour, and the full enjoyment of their privileges. (Notes, 4:5. 2:18-23. Rom. 11:25-32.)—"The words which our translation renders "flagons of wine," may be translated "cakes of (dried) grapes." Such were the cakes probably which the Jews offered to the queen of heaven. (Jer. 7:18. 44:19.) ... The expression signifies in general those entertainments which they were partakers of in the idol-temples. Am. 2:8. 1 Cor. 10:7,21. Louth.

Thou shalt not be for another man. (3) "The sentence may be thus translated more agreeably to the original. "Thou shalt not have an husband, neither will I have thee to my wife." i. e. Thou shalt continue for some time in a state of widowhood. The Hebrew phrase Lo tehi laish properly signifies, Thou shalt not have a husband, and so it is rendered ... Ez. 44:25. ... The LXX render it to the same sense Οὐκ ἔσται γυνὴ ἀνδρός, and so it is used by St. Paul, Rom. 7:3. Ibid.

V. 4, 5. The kingdom of Israel was soon after this entirely ruined, and the people were either incorporated with the Jews, or with the nations among whom they resided; or left in so remote and undiscovered a situation, as to be hitherto not distinguishable from the rest of mankind: and they have had neither king, prince, priest, sacrifice, nor religious establishment, from that day to this. The Jews remained for several years without these advantages, during the Babylonish captivity; yet their civil and religious constitution was again restored. But, since the rejection of that nation at the introduction of Christianity, and the destruction of their city and temple by the Romans; they have continued to this time, for much above seventeen hundred years, without king or prince of their own nation; and without priest and sacrifice, or any thing substituted in the place of the temple worship; and (which is still more remarkable) they have also remained without "an image, ephod, or teraphim," without any of those idolatrous observances and apparatus, to which they were so generally attached when this prophecy was uttered "—From the destruction of Jerusalem by Vespasian, unto this day ... they have had no republic or civil government of their own; but live every where like so many exiles, only upon sufferance: they have had neither priests nor sacrifice, their temple being destroyed, where only they were to offer sacrifice. And yet the want of a place, where to perform the most solemn part of their public worship, does not tempt them to idolatry, or make them fond of image-worship, or any such idolatrous practice which was the epidemical sin of their forefathers." Louth.—Let it be here recollected that this prediction follows that of the calling of the Gentiles. (Note, 2:18-20.)—This is surely a most astonishing prophecy, of events directly contrary to all human probability; yet undeniably taking place, not on a particular occasion, or for a short time, but through very many revolving centuries and in the most distant regions. How could Hosea have foreseen this, had not God inspired him? And does not this demonstrate, (in the only way by which such things can be demonstrated,) the divine inspiration of this prophecy, and of those by whom it is quoted? (Marg. Ref.)—It was also predicted, that afterwards they should return, (from their state of rejection and unbelief,) "and seek the LORD their God, and David their king." (Marg. Ref. n, o. Notes, Is. 55:4,5. Jer. 30:5-9. Ez. 34:23-31. 37:20-25.) It should be particularly observed, that it is not said, "that David their king" shall come unto them; but that "they shall seek ... David their king," as being already come, though rejected and neglected by them. This even their own writers explain of the promised Messiah, and doubtless it foretold their future conversion to Christ; for which they are evidently preserved a separate people; neither a part of the true church, nor yet given up to spiritual adultery; but put aside on a separate scanty maintenance, in a debased condition, for a long time, (like Hosea's wife,) to be at length received to favour again.—It is added, "they shall fear the LORD and his goodness;" the discovery which these events shall make of the Lord's goodness, and of his unmerited kindness and mercy to them in Christ Jesus, will fill them with reverential awe of him and a fear of offending so kind a Friend; and will fix their hearts in the spiritual worship of him, and conscientious obedience to his commandments. (Marg. Ref. p. Notes, Ps. 130:3,4. Rom. 2:4-6.) This would be "in the latter days" under the Gospel dispensation, and in the later ages of it, even in that approaching period, when they shall be converted to Christ, and gathered from their present dispersions. (Marg. Ref. q. Notes, Deut. 4:29-31. Jer. 30:19-22.)

Without an image, &c. (4) Marg. and Marg. Ref. k-m. Several learned men, considering this verse as a threatening, and, properly maintaining that to be preserved from idolatrous worship was no punishment, labour to put a construction on the words, as if they related to some parts of the Mosaic instituted worship. But, as it is simply a prophecy, this effort is needless and certainly useless; for the words cannot bear that meaning, according to the general use of them in Scripture. (Notes, Gen. 31:19. 35:1-4. Ez. 34:11-17. Judg. 8:27. 17:2-5. 18:13-26. Ez. 21:19-22. Zech. 10:2,3.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

When we consider the ingratitude and folly even of some believers, their frequent idolatrous attachment to worldly objects and sensual gratifications, and hankerings after them, which is proportionably an unfaithfulness to God and a departure from him; we shall admire his persevering love to them, almost as much as his condescension and compassion to sinners, in the glorious salvation provided for them, and the price with which it was effected. And, as far as consists with other duties, we should copy his example, in our readiness to forgive and be reconciled to those, who have most ungratefully and grossly injured us.—The dislike of men to true religion arises from their preference of worldly to spiritual pleasures: they therefore love an object and a form of worship, which allow them to indulge, instead of requiring them to mortify, their corrupt inclinations. But God will purify the objects of his special love from these base propensities; he will rebuke, disgrace, and afflict them for their sins; he will unto his overtures of reconciliation, and tokens of love, with various humiliating dispensations; he will bring them to repent, to submit to correction, to separate from sin and worldly idols, and patiently to wait for him; and when they are thus willing to reserve themselves for him alone, he will give himself to them as their God and Portion. Those, for whom mercy is purposed and reserved, are yet often left, for a time, in a state of humiliating desertion, without any comfortable communion with him, in order to prove their faith and patience: many of them live a great while in an unconverted state; yet are restrained from such crimes, as would utterly ruin them, or prevent them from filling up their appointed stations in the church. In due season they are brought to "seek the LORD," to trust in the divine Saviour, and to rejoice in his holy comfort. And though their first fear of God arise from a view of his terrible holy majesty, and his righteous and powerful vengeance; yet the discovery of his goodness, and his love to sinners through Jesus Christ, and the experience of his mercy and grace, sweetly lead their hearts to a filial reverence of so kind and glorious a Friend and Father, to an habitual fear of offending and dishonouring him, to a dread of his frown and correcting rod, and an adoring awe of him, when they present their worship and services before him. May we, who live in these latter days, thus "fear the LORD and his goodness?" and may both Jews and Gentiles all over the earth thus seek and worship the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, and rejoice in his salvation.

To punish the idolatry and profruity of the people, he will leave their wives and daughters to commit lewdness, without present punishment, 12-14. He warns Judah, not to imitate Israel's crimes, which are still further reprov'd, 15-19.

NOTES.—CHAP. IV. V. 1-3. Hosea is here supposed, by expositors in general, to address the kingdom of Israel exclusively; and perhaps he spake immediately to those of the ten tribes, as living among them: yet his reproofs and exhortations were so framed, as to suit the case of the Jews also, when they came into their hands.—The former chapters seem to have formed one general subject, consisting of several messages delivered to the people, when at God's command he married Gomer; when her children were born and named; when she departed from him; and when he proposed to her terms of reconciliation. But he here began to speak to them in direct language, concerning their gross immoralities and idolatries.—The children of Israel, or the whole family of Jacob, are called upon to "hear the word" of God, who had "a controversy with all the inhabitants of the" promised "land;" for though he meant first to proceed against Israel, Judah would not escape, without repentance and entire reformation. (Marg. Ref. b. Notes, 12:1, 2. Ps. 50:1-6. Is. 5:3. 34:1. Mic. 6:1, 2.) The ground of this controversy was, "because there was no truth, nor mercy, nor knowledge of God in the land;" there was hardly any sincerity, varacity, or fidelity to be found among them; they were dissemblers in religion, and they were deceivers, impostors, and cheats in their commerce with each other. As there was no honesty among them, it could scarcely be expected there should be any mercy, or compassion and kindness, to the poor and afflicted; and in fact they were cruel and selfish extortioners and oppressors of the poor; and they neither knew the character of God, nor his truth or will, so as to be influenced by it, to piety, justice, or charity. (Marg. Ref. d. Notes, 1 Chr. 28:9. Jer. 9:23, 24. 22:13-19. Rom. 1:28-32.) But their desperate inward wickedness broke out into multiplied and aggravated perjuries, blasphemies, lies, murders, thefts, and adulteries; the whole body politic was become like one putrid ulcer, or bleeding cancer, or many all running into one. (Notes, Is. 1:5, 6. 59:1-8. Jer. 5:26-31. Ez. 22:2-13, 25-28. Mic. 3:1-4, 8-12.) Especially, the whole land was full of murders, which were committed in the conspiracies of one usurper against another, in which the adherents of each slaughtered ruler were cut off by the victorious party, in great numbers, one company after another. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. c, e, f. 2 Kings 15:10, 14, 25, 30. Notes, 1 Kings 16:8- 14, 23.) Therefore the most distressing calamities were coming on the land, which would reduce all the inhabitants to the extremest miseries, and end in its total desolation; till neither beasts, fowls, nor fishes were left. These are figurative expressions denoting the entire destruction or dispersion of all the people. (Marg. Ref. g, h. Notes, Is. 19:5-10. Jer. 4:19-27. Zeph. 1:2, 3.)

V. 4, 5. "Yet no man contendeth; and no man reproveth." This is a natural rendering, and gives a very usual sense to the Hebrew future. Bp. Newcombe. While wickedness of all kinds was openly committed; there was no one, either magistrate, or priest, or prophet, who protested against it, or steadily opposed it.—According to our version, the words imply, that the case was desperate; all were too wicked to be employed as reprovers, or too proud and obstinate to endure reproof. Nay, they were ready to turn against their reprovers and destroy them, even when authorized by God himself; being of the spirit of Korah, and his company, when they strove against "Aaron the priest of the LORD;" or like Joash king of Judah, who stoned "Zechariah the priest," the son of his benefactor Jehoiada, when he reprov'd him for his sins. (Marg. Ref. i, k. Notes, Num. 16:8-11, 35. Deut. 17:8-13. 2 Chr. 24:17-22. Ps. 106:16-18.)—Some object to this interpretation, because it could not be a crime to contend with idolatrous priests: but the conduct of Israel towards the prophets of God, and others who reprov'd them, might resemble that of such as had contended with his priests.—They would therefore fall in the approaching day of vengeance, or when they thought themselves most secure; and the ruin of their false prophets would be like that of those, who are surprised with calamity "in the night," when the terror and distress are more affecting than in the daytime: yea, the Lord would "slay the mother," as well as the children; the whole constitution of the church and nation, as well as individual Israelites, or Samaria the capital of Israel. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. l, m.) "If thou faltest in the day, the prophets shall not be long after thee; they shall fall in the night: and I will destroy the very church and kingdom, whereto thou appertainest." Bp. Hall.

Strive with the priest. (4) "This seems to be a proverbial expression, to denote a stubborn and incorrigible temper: for it was a capital offence by the law, for any to behave themselves in a presumptuous manner against the injunctions of the priest. (Deut. 17:12.) Lowth.

V. 6. The professed worshippers of JEHOVAH were perishing, in the most entire ignorance of true religion: (Marg. and Marg. Ref. n. Notes, 1-3. Prov. 19:2. Acts 17:22-25.) and this was in great measure the fault of the priests and teachers, who utterly neglected their duty, and indeed were incapable of performing it. The whole company of priests seem to be here addressed as one person; as they had despised and rejected knowledge, and wilfully forgotten the word of God; therefore God would reject them and take no care of their posterity. (Marg. Ref. p-s. See on Note, Deut. 33:10. Notes, Is. 28:7, 8. 56:9-12. Mai. 2:4-9. Matt. 15:12-14. 23:13-23. Luke 11:52. John 8:54-59. v. 55. 9:39-41. 16:1-3.)—This could not be exclusively addressed to the priests of the golden calves, and other priests in Israel, whom God had never owned as his priests, and therefore could not reject; but it must, in part at least, be spoken of the family of Aaron, whom he had appointed to the priesthood, but would at length reject for their ignorance and wickedness. Some of these might reside in Israel; but most of them were in Judah, which must therefore be here included.

V. 7-11. In proportion as the priests increased in numbers and prosperity, they grew more and more wicked; the Lord would therefore render the honour, which had been conferred on them, an occasion of their deeper disgrace; by exposing their crimes, and inflicting ignominious punishment against me: ^{therefore} will I change their glory into shame.

8 They ^{eat} up the sin of my people, and they ^{set} their ^{heart} on their iniquity.

9 And there shall be, ^{like} people, ^{like} priest: and I will ^{punish} them for their ways, and ^{reward} them their doings.

10 For ^{they} shall eat, and not have enough: ^{they} shall commit whoredom, and shall not increase: because they have ^{left off} to take heed to the LORD.

11 Whoredom and wine and new wine ^{take} away the heart.

[Practical Observations.]

12 ^{My} people ^{ask} counsel at their stocks, and their staff ^{declareth} unto them: for the spirit of whoredoms hath caused ^{them} to err, and they have ^{gone} a whoring from under their God.

13 They ^{hacrifice} upon the tops of the mountains, and burn incense upon the hills, under oaks and poplars and elms, because the shadow thereof ^{is} good: ^{therefore} your daughters shall commit whoredom, and your spouses shall commit adultery.

14 ^I will not ^{punish} your daughters when they commit whoredom, nor your spouses when they commit adultery: for themselves are separated with whores, and they sacrifice with harlots: ^{therefore} the people ^{that} doth not understand shall ^{fall}.

15 ^{Though} thou, Israel, ^{play} the harlot, ^{yet} let not Judah offend; and come not ye unto ^{Gilgal}, neither go ye up ^{to} Beth-aven, nor swear, The LORD liveth.

16 For Israel ^{slideth} back as a backsliding heifer: now the LORD will feed ^{them} as a lamb in a large place.

17 Ephraim ^{is} joined to idols: ^{let} him alone.

19 The ^{wind} hath bound her up in her wings, and they shall be ashamed because of their sacrifices.

upon them. (Marg. Ref. t, u. Notes, 13:5—8. Mal. 2:4—9.) They were so far from attempting to reform the people, that they were well pleased to have the sin-offerings multiplied: for they feasted on the flesh, and had many perquisites from them; and they therefore delighted in the iniquity of the people, as increasing their incomes. 'They live upon the sin-offerings of the people; and are so far from restraining them, that they take delight in seeing them commit iniquity; because the more they sin, the greater is the number of the sin-offerings, which are the priests' portion.' Louth. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. x, y.)—Thus absolutions, indulgences, and dispensations have long enriched the Romish clergy; and spiritual courts have prosecuted such offenders, as could afford to pay fines and fees, apparently for no other reason; and many such things have been, and are, perpetrated by the professed ministers of religion!—As these priests were the patterns of the people in their crimes, they would be involved with them in punishment, without distinction. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. z. Notes, 1 Sam. 2:17—36. 4: Is. 9:13—17. 24:1—12. v. 2. Ez. 22:26—30.) At length they would be reduced to pinching famine and unsatisfied hunger; their multiplying of wives and concubines, (contrary to the original law of marriage,) and their other scandalous fornications, and connivance at those of the people, would prevent the increase of their families; and seeing they had ^{left off} to take heed to the LORD, manifold evils would come upon them. (Marg. Ref. a—d. Notes, Ez. 4:9—17. Mic. 6:10—13. Luke 21:34—36.)—This shows, that the priests of JEHOVAH's family were chiefly intended; for the priests of the calves, and those of Baal, had not, at any time, "taken heed to the LORD."—Indeed the whoredom and intemperance, both of priests and people, deprived them of understanding and judgment, and rendered their hearts and consciences unfeeling, and utterly unfit for any thing good.—The people's sins deserved to be punished with such priests; and such priests have helped to make the people thus wicked. Bp. Hall.

V. 12—14. The professed worshippers of JEHOVAH were so infatuated by their sensual indulgences and idolatrous practices, that they preferred consulting the wood of their images, to inquiring of God by his word, his prophets, or the high-priest; and they even divined by means of "their staves," in some superstitious manner; being utterly given up to idols, and alienated from God. (Marg. Ref. e—g. Notes, Is. 44:12—20. Jer. 10:1—8. Ez. 21:19—22. Hab. 2:18, 19.)—Because they take away God's honour, and give it to idols: therefore he will give them up to their lusts, that they shall dishonour their own bodies. (Rom. 1:28.) They therefore preferred the mountains and groves, where the idols were worshipped, to his temple: because they afforded an agreeable shade, and secret recesses for their abominable impurities. (Marg. Ref. h. Notes, Is. 57:3—8. Ez. 20:28, 29.) To punish these enormities, the Lord determined to leave their daughters and wives to disgrace and distress them, by committing whoredom and adultery: nor would he inflict on them any immediate judgment for these crimes; which would eventually embolden them to proceed, and others to imitate them, and so to become the scourges of their idolatrous fathers and husbands. And indeed this would be the natural consequence of their crimes: for themselves, (the original is masculine,) though fathers and husbands, separated from their families, to associate with abandoned harlots, even with such as were initiated, or consecrated, to be priestesses of their abominable idols, and prostitutes to their worshippers. Thus they set their wives and daughters an example of the vilest licentiousness, even in religion; and did what they could to corrupt their principles and morals! And a people, which had become truly besotted and infatuated, notwithstanding all their religious advantages, could not long escape destruction. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. i—m. Notes, 1—6. Deut. 23:17, 18. 1 Kings 14:22—24. 2 Kings 23:7. Rom. 1:21—32.)—Many of the same charges were brought by the prophets against Judah, though Israel is here supposed to be principally intended; as it may be seen by consulting the Marg. Ref.

V. 15. Here Israel and Judah are separately addressed. Though Israel was given up to idolatry and iniquity, "let not Judah thus offend;" for they yet had many advantages; they still retained among them the worship of God, according to his law; and from them the Messiah was to arise. But, if the Jews meant to avoid the crimes and ruin of Israel, let them not come near the places where idolatry was practised. Gilgal had been in many instances peculiarly distinguished; but it was become notorious for idolatry. (Notes 9:15—17. 12:10, 11. Josh. 5:9, 10. 10:7. Am. 4:4, 5. 5:4—6.) Beth-aven was the same as Beth-el; it had been "the house of God," but it was at that time "the house of vanity," for so Beth-aven signifies. (Notes, 5:8—10. 10:5—8. 1 Kings 12:26—33.) Neither let them dare to swear by the name of JEHOVAH while worshipping their idols, for he abhorred such a coalition; or before the calves, as if they had represented him. (Marg. Ref. r. Notes, Jer. 7:8—11. Ez. 20:39. 23:39. Am. 8:11—14. v. 14. Zeph. 1:4, 5. Matt. 6:24. 2 Cor. 6:14—18.)—"God complaineth that Judah is infected, and willet them . . . to return in time."

V. 16—19. Israel was become utterly intractable, and obstinate in rebellion: like a refractory heifer, which hangs back and will not draw in the yoke. (Marg. Ref. s. Notes, 11:5—7. v. 7. Jer. 3:6—11.) The Lord therefore purposed to disperse them throughout the Assyrian empire, where they would be as much exposed to injury and violence, as a single deserted lamb in a large wilderness is to the wild beasts. Ephraim, or the kingdom of Israel, was incurably devoted to idols; and the people should no more be molested by the unwelcome warnings of prophets, or other means of reformation, but be let alone to ripen for destruction. (Marg. Ref. u, x. Notes, 4:5. Ps. 81:11, 12. Matt. 15:12—14.) "He is gone, Ephraim, "is gone after their wine." (18) He is gone after the wine or banquets of idols. Bp. Newcombe. Or, He is loathsome through drunkenness. The people were continually given up to whoredom, corporal and spiritual: their rulers were wholly corrupted, and showed evidently their love of bribes, even shamelessly demanding them from the people, as the price of deciding in their favour. (Marg. Ref. a. Notes, Prov. 30:15, 16. Ez. 22:12, 13. Mic. 3:8—12. 7:1—4. Matt. 26:14—16.) Therefore they would be hurried into captivity, as by a furious irresistible tempest; and then they would be ashamed of depending on their idolatrous or hypocritical sacrifices. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. y, z, b, c. Notes, 13:15, 16. Jer. 2:33—37. 4:11—13. 51:2.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—11. The Lord has a controversy with each of us on account of our sins; and if he contend, either in judgment or not find him; the hath withdrawn himself from them.

[Practical Observations.]

7 They have dealt treacherously against the Lord: for they have begotten strange children: now shall he devour them with their portions.

8 Blow ye the cornet in Gibeah, and the trumpet in Ramah: cry aloud at Beth-aven, after thee, O Benjamin.

9 Ephraim shall be desolate in the day of rebuke: among the tribes of Israel have I made known that which shall surely be.

10 The princes of Judah were like them that remove the bound: therefore I will pour out my wrath upon them like water.

11 Ephraim is oppressed and broken in judgment, because he willingly walked after the commandment.

12 Therefore will I be unto Ephraim as a moth, and to the house of Judah as rottenness.

13 When Ephraim saw his sickness, and Judah saw his wound, then went Ephraim to the Assyrian, and sent to king Jareb: yet could he not heal you, nor cure you of your wound.

14 For I will be unto Ephraim as a lion, and as a young lion to the house of Judah: I, even I, will tear and go away; I will take away, and none shall rescue him.

15 I will go and return to my place, till they acknowledge their offence, and seek my face: in their affliction they will seek me early.

short and limited time, would destroy both them, and the idols which they had chosen for their portion, with all their temporal possessions and advantages. (Marg. Ref. y.)

V. 8-10. The prophet called upon the watchmen of Israel and Judah to blow the trumpet of alarm; for the enemy was just at hand; and when the Assyrians had desolated the cities of Israel, even to Beth-aven, the principal seat of idolatry, they would fall upon Benjamin also, which belonged to the kingdom of Judah. (Marg. Ref. a-d. Notes, 4:15. Is. 58:1, 2.) Ephraim would be totally desolated by the enemy, in the approaching day of rebuke: for the prophet had declared, among the tribes of Israel, that only which would most surely come to pass. The princes of Judah, by violating God's law, had broken down the fence of his protection; and made way for his wrath to be poured out upon them, as an inundation of waters. (Marg. Ref. f-i. Notes, Gen. 7:10-23. Ps. 32:6, 7. Is. 8:6-8. Dan. 9:25-27, v. 26, 27.) "They have violated the most sacred laws of God, upon which not only the ordinances of his worship, but likewise the rights and properties of men depend; and are become guilty of the same injustice and confusion with those who remove the ancient bounds and landmarks. Deut. 19:14. Louth.—When Ahaz, king of Judah, with his princes, called in the kings of Assyria, to help him against Syria and Israel, he removed the bound, and opened the way for that inundation which desolated Israel, and reduced Judah to deep distress. (Notes, 2 Kings 16:7-9, v. 7. Is. 7:17-20.)

V. 11, 12. The Israelites suffered exceedingly from the exactions and oppressions of their rulers, the usurers, who succeeded each other in their depredations, and from their victorious invaders. This was permitted, in order to punish them, for their willing and persevering obedience to the laws of Jeroboam and his successors, which required them to worship the golden calves at Dan and Beth-el, and to conform to other established idolatries, in express contradiction to the law of God. (Marg. Ref. k, l. Notes, 2 Kings 12:26-31. 14:15, 16. Mic. 6:16.) He would therefore, insensibly, yet assuredly, waste their strength and prosperity, as a moth eats holes in the garment; and as Judah had proved equally submissive to the will of their idolatrous kings, he would consume them, as rottenness and worms do the wood; and so cause even stately buildings to decay and fall down. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. m-o.)

V. 13, 14. When Israel and Judah, at different times, found themselves pressed by enemies and dangers; instead of humbling themselves before God and seeking his help, they sought the protection of the Assyrians, and "sent to king Jareb" (perhaps another name for Pul, or Tiglath-pilezer;) but instead of healing their wounds, or doing them any service, they helped to make them incurable. (Marg. Ref. o-q.) For this obstinacy, added to their former sins, provoked the Lord to become their open enemy, and to destroy them, as a fierce young lion would tear and carry away the helpless cattle; whilst none of their idols or allies could rescue them from his hands. (Marg. Ref. r-t. Notes, 13:5-8. Job 10:14-17. Lam. 3:10-13.) "Jareb" signifies He shall plead. (Marg.) The king of Assyria perhaps undertook to be arbitrator between Judah and Israel, and to mediate a peace.

V. 15. The mercy-seat was properly the Lord's place among his people; which he left when he came forth to execute vengeance upon them: (Marg. Ref. u. Notes, Ez. 43:4. 10:3-7. 11:22-25.) but having done this, he meant to return to his place, and there to wait, and to leave them under their punishment, till they should repent, or plead guilty, and confess their sins, and seek his favour and protection. And he knew that, however they had before despised him, in their affliction they would feel their need of him, and seek him without delay or remissness. (Marg. Ref. x, y.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-6. All ranks of men must stand before God in judgment; and all ought to yield an obedient ear to his word, and the warnings of his ministers to "flee from the wrath to come;" for as all have sinned, all should repent, and humbly seek his pardoning mercy.—None are exposed to severer punishment, than those who artfully entice men to sin, and ensnare them in fatal errors; and kings and priests have often been peculiarly guilty of this great transgression.—Those who apostatize from God and his truth, commonly become the bitterest enemies to such as adhere to him: they have often employed most profound dissimulation, and diabolical malice, and false accusation, to make slaughter of them, as enemies to the church and state; and rebukes and corrections have seldom deterred them from persecuting projects.—The Lord perfectly knows men: none of their designs or motives are concealed from him; though they deeply disguise them from others, and even from themselves, and cover their grossest defilements with specious pretensions.—Our doings must be carefully "framed to return to the Lord," if we would be at peace with him: for he has no delight in vain profession, and empty forms or notions; but he requires that our repentance and faith be manifested in our whole temper and conduct. But those who "know not the Lord," nor "the power of his anger," the value of his favour, and the efficacy of his converting grace; remain under the influence of that "spirit which worketh in the children of disobedience," and will never "frame their doings to return to God."—Pride makes men obstinate in other sins, and rivets the chains which sensual or worldly lusts have forged: for "the wicked through the pride of their countenance will not seek after God," or submit to him in sincere repentance; and therefore, having fallen into iniquity, they must perish in it. With such unhumbleness, unbelieving, and rebellious hearts, men may go with their flocks and herds, and the most expensive and ostentatious services, to seek the Lord: but they will not find him; for he withdraws himself from proud Pharisees and hypocrites, to commune with broken-hearted publicans and sinners. So that, by dealing treacherously with the Lord, men only deceive themselves.

V. 7-15. The education of children, as strangers to God and his truth, exceedingly hastens the doom of guilty nations. When tokens of approaching ruin appear, ministers ought to give the alarm, before evil overtakes the criminals; and when some are cut off, "in the day of the Lord's rebuke," they must warn others to expect the same punishment, unless they repent. Such things will be generally found among the tribes of Israel; and the watchman must give warning, if he mean to deliver his own soul. (Notes, Ez. 3:17-21.)—When princes break down the fence of the divine law, by their edicts, decisions, or examples, they open the floodgates of God's wrath: and when subjects willingly obey ungodly and persecuting statutes, they may expect to be given up to grievous oppressions and exactions; for God will disregard the interest, liberty, and security of those who disregard his honour and renounce his service. His more ordinary judgments insensibly waste men's prosperity and comfort; but when, under rebukes, they trust to an arm of flesh, and have recourse to sinful expedients; they will not only find that these do not bring cure or deliverance, but that God will visit them with more terrible displays of his indignation. Yet "he will return to his place," his mercy-seat, and wait there to be gracious to all, who acknowledge their offences and seek his face. Many indeed, who despise COME, and let us return unto the Lord: for he hath torn, and he will heal us: he hath smitten, and he will bind us up.

2 After two days will he revive us; in the third day he will raise us up, and we shall live in his sight.

3 Then shall we know, if we follow on to know the Lord: his going forth is prepared as the morning; and he shall come unto us as the rain, as the latter and former rain unto the earth.

4 ¶ O Ephraim, what shall I do unto thee? O Judah, what shall I do unto thee? For your goodness is as a morning cloud, and as the early dew it goeth away.

5 Therefore have I hewed them by the prophets; I have slain them by the words of my mouth: and thy judgments are as the light that goeth forth.

6 For I desired mercy, and not sacrifice: and the knowledge of God more than burnt offerings.

him in their prosperity, appear to seek him under their afflictions: but he knows how to distinguish the upright from the hypocrite; and those who are first led by severe tribulations, to seek him earnestly, diligently, and sincerely, will find him a present Help and an effectual Refuge; as "with him is mercy and plenteous redemption," for "all those who call upon him in truth,"

NOTES.—CHAP. VI. V. 1-3. The prophet took occasion from the intimation of mercy at the close of the former chapter, to exhort the people, without delay to come together, and with one accord to return to the worship of the Lord. (Marg. Ref. a. Note, 5:15.) The LXX join the concluding verse of the foregoing chapter, to this, and not improperly, by adding λεγομεν, "saying." With reference to the events predicted, that is, to the desolations that were coming on the people by the Assyrians and Chaldeans; the exhortation may be considered as the language of the penitents to each other, and to their neighbours, calling on them to unite in humiliation, repentance, and works meet for repentance. (Notes, 14:1-3. Is. 2:2-5. 12: 63:15-19. 64: Jer. 50:4-6.) They consider their miseries as the effect of God's righteous indignation. "He had torn" and smitten them, and their enemies were only his instruments; and from his mercy, truth, and power alone, they hoped for deliverance: he alone could, and they trusted he would, heal their distempers and bind up their wounds. (Marg. Ref. b. Notes, 5:11-14. Deut. 32:37-39. 1 Sam. 2:4-8. Job 5:18,19.) Instead therefore, of fleeing from him as an enemy, they encouraged each other to apply to him as their Physician. For some time they would have to wait for his interposition: the nation of Israel was as it were dead; but "after two days," that is, on "the third day," the Lord would revive them; and they would "live in his sight," as his people, upon their return from the Babylonish captivity, after the appointed time of its continuance. (Marg. Ref. c. d. Notes and P. O. Ez. 37:1-14.)—The language is generally supposed to be prophetic of the resurrection of Christ on the third day, with whom, as her Surety, the whole church virtually arose from the dead, to live unto God: with him the hopes of all believers revived; his power, as risen, quickens their souls when dead in sin; and his resurrection was the earnest of the resurrection of their bodies unto everlasting life. "The prophets, when they predicted temporal deliverances, were often carried out beyond themselves, and their first subject, if I may so express it, to foretell the more signal mercies relating to the times of the gospel." Louth. By the persevering exercise of faith, and by waiting on the Lord, in every means of becoming acquainted with him and his perfections, truth, and will, they would obtain an experimental knowledge of his mercy and faithfulness, and a comforting knowledge of their own pardon and acceptance. (Marg. Ref. e, f. See on Note, 4:1-3, v. 1. Notes, John 8:30-36, vv. 31,32. Acts 11:23,24.)—For "his going forth was prepared as the morning;" the time that intervened between the promise of a Saviour to fallen man upon his coming, and exaltation at the right hand of the Father, resembled that which intervenes between the dawning of the day and the meridian brightness of the sun; and he would as surely come and effect the redemption of his church, as sunrise follows the dawn. (Note, Mal. 4:2,3.)—His coming likewise, to save and comfort every penitent, is gradual and certain, from the first sense of guilt, to the completion of his salvation in heavenly felicity. (Marg. Ref. g. Note, Prov. 4:18,19.) In neither sense, does "his going forth" resemble a meteor, or the evening-sun; but the increasing brightness of the morning from the first dawn, which can scarcely be discerned, or distinguished from other appearances, to the noonday brightness. (Note, Is. 8:20.) The Lord would also descend upon the souls of those who waited on him, as the former and latter rain upon the earth; purifying, softening, fruitifying, and refreshing them, by the influences of his Holy Spirit. (Marg. Ref. h. Notes, 10:12,13. 2 Sam. 23:3,4. Ps. 72:4-7, v. 6. Is. 44:3-5. Jer. 3:2,3. 2 Pet. 1:19.)

V. 4,5. Neither Ephraim nor Judah would thus "follow on to know the Lord" and wait for him; and he spake as one that was at a loss what to do with them. (Marg. Ref. i. Notes, 11:8-11. Is. 5:3,4. Jer. 3:19, 31:18-20.) He was not willing wholly to give them up; yet he did not deem it honourable to save them from ruin, in their present state of mind: and all means used to reform them had proved ineffectual. While they were suffering under correction or filled with terror; or when their reforming kings were exerting their pious endeavours, or the prophets were labouring among them; they seemed favourably disposed to repent and return to God; but this their goodness (unlike the morning light, or the stated rain, Note, 1-3.) vanished like the empty morning cloud and "the early dew," and produced no abiding effect on their conduct: and when the causes of these transient impressions ceased, they relapsed into idolatry and iniquity, and were as rebellious as before. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. k, l. Note, 13:3,4.) In the night of adversity, they seemed religious; but the rising sun of returning prosperity dispersed all these promising appearances. For this cause the Lord sent them such awful messages by the prophets, as were suited either to "hew them into shape, or to "hew them in pieces;" nay, he slew them by the words of his mouth," which were like pronouncing the sentence of death on a criminal, and giving orders for his execution: and the judgments, that were denounced against them, were gradually and certainly approaching, as the light from the dawning of the day; instead of that favour which was arising upon true penitents: (3) nay, the justice of God would be as clear as the morning light; even in the greatest miseries, to which they would be reduced. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. m, n. Notes, Is. 11:2-5, v. 4. Jer. 1:9,10. 5:11. 23:28,29. Ez. 43:2-5, v. 3. Rom. 2:4-6. Rev. 2:14-16.)

V. 6. All the appointed sacrifices were typical of the atonement made by the promised Saviour, external signs of the offerer's faith and repentance, acts of worship towards God, and means of grace to believers. But the people deemed them the substantial part of religion; presented them in unbelief, pride, and impenitence; and thought to compensate by them for their entire neglect of justice, mercy, and piety, and for all their scandalous crimes: and when they omitted these institutions they thought the Lord's controversy with them was chiefly on that account. He therefore informed them, that he "desired mercy and not sacrifice," or, rather than sacrifice: and the knowledge of him, which produced holy fear, dependence, submission, obedience, and love, more than burnt-offerings; because they were of superior excellency and immutable obligation. (See on Note 4:1-3, v. 1. Notes John 17:1-3, v. 3. 2 Cor. 4:4-6.) He was displeased with them for their injustice, oppression of the poor, idolatry, and impiety; and no number of sacrifices could avail them so long as they continued in sin.—This in no way interferes with the great doctrine of the sacrifice of Christ being the sole meritorious cause of a sinner's pardon and acceptance with God, or that of faith alone interesting us in this atonement; or with the necessity of our attendance on instituted ordinances. But it exposes the folly of such as trust in external observances of any kind, to compensate for their want of love to God and man: it shows that nothing can profit us which does not spring from repentance and faith, and is not attended with a sober, righteous, and godly life: and that externals may safely be omitted or postponed, when the exercise of mercy and kindness to our brethren requires it, and both cannot be done. pany of priests also, that dwelt there, was a mere banditti; consenting together in robbery, murder, and every enormity; standing by each other in doing and vindicating their evil deeds.—The Hebrew word “Aven,” (translated iniquity,) frequently signifies idolatry; and the blood which Gilead is said to have been polluted with, may mean the blood of their children which they sacrificed to Moloch. Dr. Wells interprets the verse of those Gileadites who assisted Pekah in the murder of Pekahiah. (2 Kings 15:25.) The phrase translated here, “polluted with blood,” literally signifies with bloody footsteps, being taken from such as are found with their shoes stained with the blood they have shed. (1 Kings 2:5.) Louth. (Marg. and Ref.)—Polluted. (8) יקבץ, from יקבץ, decipere, supplantare, whence the name Jacob. (Notes, 5:1, 2, v. 2. Ez. 22:25, 26. Ref. Notes, 1 Kings 14:15, 16.)

V. 11. The seeds of idolatry, from Israel, had been sown plenteously in Judah; and thus “he” (that is, Israel, or Ephraim,) “had set” or prepared “a harvest for” Judah also. (Notes, Jer. 51:33. Joel 3:9-17. Mic. 4:1-13. Rev. 14:14-20, v. 15.) The nation was become ripe for divine judgments, which would be inflicted by the Assyrians and Chaldeans; till God would “turn away the captivity of his people.” (Ps. 147. 53:6, 126:1.) “When I would have turned away the captivity of my people.” When I would, upon their repentance, have averted my judgments, which will end in their captivity. Louth.—“A harvest is appointed for thee among those who lead away the captivity of my people.” Bp. Newcombe. This translation requires only a trivial change of the pointing: and gives the clearest sense of the verse. (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-6. In all our troubles we should place our whole confidence in the mercy of God; and should take warning and encouragement to return to him, and exhort others to do the same. He afflicts us in providence, that we may look to him to restore our prosperity: he convinces and humbles our hearts by his Holy Spirit, and often fills the conscience with remorse and dismay, in order to prepare us for the healing balm of his salvation, and the consolations which he bestows on the contrite believer. (Notes, Is. 57:15, 16, 19.) No affliction or temptation therefore, no guilt or power of sin, no wounded spirit or terrified conscience, should induce us to despair of help and comfort from God. He may suffer us for a time to be seized on with “the sorrows of death, or the pains of hell,” and to be “like those that go down into the pit;” but as he raised the Redeemer from the grave, so will he revive the hearts and hopes of all who trust in him, and cause them at length to walk before him, and rejoice in his manifested presence and love. (Notes, Ps. 30:5-12. 40:1-5. 71:20, 21. 116:1-5.) Let us then begin and “follow on to know the Lord;” that we may experience the freeness and efficacy of his grace, the faithfulness of his promises, and the elicity of his people. The feeblest glimpse of “hope in his word,” which dawns upon the humble sin-distressed soul, is a sure earnest of increasing light and comfort, till “the Son of righteousness shall arise upon him with healing in his beams;” and till he shall arrive in his presence above, and possess the fullness of knowledge, purity, love, and joy for evermore.—Increasing light and hope shall be afforded to the waiting soul, with showers of purifying, fertilizing, and comforting grace; and he, who sent “the former,” will send “the latter rain” also, and perfect the good work that he has begun. (Notes, Ps. 138:8. Phil. 1:3-6, v. 6.)—But we have not the same reason to depend on our own resolutions, convictions, or hopeful beginnings, as we have to trust in the truth and mercy of our God: alas! these are as mutable as the others are unchangeable. Under the rod of affliction, under terrors of conscience, or under the awakening word of some Boanerges, many seem deeply impressed and well disposed to religion; but when the restraint, the scourge, the terror is removed, their transient goodness vanishes like an empty cloud, or is exhaled by temptation as the dew by the burning sun; and we mourn our disappointed expectations respecting them. What shall be done with such persons? For “if any man draw back, the Lord will have no pleasure in him.” (Notes, Heb. 6:4-6. 10:35-39. 2 Pet. 2:20-22.) Or what shall he do to us, who are prone to a similar, if not an equal inconstancy? May he put his fear into our hearts, and set up his kingdom within us, and never, never more, leave us to ourselves, or suffer us to be overcome by temptation!

V. 7-11. Obstinate transgressors must not expect soothing messages from a holy God: he will “hew them by the words of his prophets;” and if this do not prevail to bring them down to the dust of self-abasement, “he will slay them by the words of his mouth;” and, by executing his threatened vengeance on them, convince them of the truth of his holy word.—All oblations and external services are mere hypocrisy, whilst justice, mercy, truth, and piety are neglected: and that confidence, even in the sacrifice of Christ, is groundless presumption, which encourages any one to “continue in sin.” If men had the true knowledge of God, they could not be so deluded: and if they were partakers of true faith, they could not but hate sin, and uprightly fear, love, obey, and serve our God and Saviour. But under every dispensation men prove themselves the children of Adam, by breaking the law and covenant, and abusing the mercy and goodness of God: the most favoured places often become most notorious for sin; the most sacred offices are filled by the worst of men; no tongue can express what horrible defilements God sees continually, even in his visible church. But whilst multitudes are ripening for destruction, a time is coming, when he will return the captivity of his people, and fill the earth with his glory: and then “Jacob shall rejoice, and Israel shall” abound in songs of grateful praise.

NOTES.—CHAP. VII. V. 1-3. The labours of Elijah, Elisha, and many other prophets; the ruin of Ahab’s idolatrous family by Jehu, who destroyed Baal out of Israel; (1 Kings 17:22: 2 Kings 1:10-12) and all that succession of mercies and warnings which the Lord continued to them, were means used for their healing: but they eventually served the more to discover the extreme wickedness of all ranks of men; especially in Samaria, where fraud, violence, and robbery were perpetrated in the most atrocious manner. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. a-e. Notes, 4:1-3. 5:1, 2, 11, 12. 6:8, 9.) For they never seriously considered that God noted, and remembered against them all their wickedness; not even when the effects of their crimes beset them about, and caused them manifold distresses. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. f-i. Notes, Job 22:5-14, vv. 12-14. Ps. 10:2-11, v. 4, 11.) But, as their kings and princes were given up to idolatry and other wickedness; the people were glad to please them, by conforming to their false worship, copying their vices, and lavishing flattering encomiums upon them; with which they were highly gratified, and rendered bolder in wickedness.—The succession of kings from Jeroboam, the son of Nebat, “who made Israel to sin,” even to the prophet’s time, may be intended. (Marg. Ref. k.)

sensual desires like a heated oven. Satan or his agents had combined to excite their own lusts in kindling this fire: (Note, Jam. 1:13-15.) and they cherished and kept it burning; waiting for the opportunity of gratifying it, without regard to duty or decency. The tempter had only to prepare them the occasion of sin, as the baker prepares the dough for the heated oven; and they were ready to seize upon it.—⁴ He will cease from waking, after, &c." (Marg.) The baker may take his rest till the dough be ready: for the oven is sufficiently heated, and no more needs his attention. (Marg. Ref. Note, 5-7.)

V. 5-7. On the king's birthday, or coronation-day, or on some other public occasion when he made a royal feast, his nobles tempted him to drink to the most shameful excess, "making him sick with bottles of wine;" (or "heat through wine" marg.) and when he was thus intoxicated, "he stretched out his hand with scorpions," treated every thing sacred with the most impious contempt; and perhaps employed his authority to persecute the worshippers of JEHOVAH. (Marg. Ref. n-r. Note, Gen. 40:20-22. P. O. Esth. 1:10-12. Dan. 1:1-9. Matt. 14:6-12.) "Some recent and notorious act of contempt to God, or to his prophets, or to public justice, is here alluded to." Bp. Newcombe.—Thus they prepared themselves and each other for every daring wickedness: and perhaps some of them had their hearts inflamed with ambition and revenge, and lay in wait for that opportunity, to murder the drunken king and usurp his throne. Their furious passions rendered Satan's temptations unnecessary. Their "baker" might "sleep all the night," and in the morning find his oven as hot as he could wish it; that is, their hearts are ready for any wickedness as could be desired. For, being heated with wine and selfish and malignant passions, they murdered their magistrates and kings one after another: yet neither the people, nor any one of their kings, amid these distractions and miseries, would seek help from God! All the kings of Israel were idolaters, and most of them most atrociously wicked in other respects. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. s, t.) "The flame of civil discord is spread among the people in general. This hath been the destruction both of the inferior magistrates, and of their kings too. An anarchy continuing for eleven years, after the death of Jeroboam the second; and afterwards his son Zechariah, and his successors, Shallum and Pekahiah, being slain by conspiracies formed against them. V. 8-10. Ephraim (or the kingdom of the ten tribes) had intimately connected himself with the surrounding nations, by alliances, intermarriages, and communion in idolatry: yet he still professed to worship JEHOVAH. Thus he became "a cake, not turned," half burnt and half dough, and none of it fit for use: a motley mixture of idolatry and the worship of God. But he was eager in iniquity, and lukewarm, yea hypocritical, in the worship of God, and partial in every attempt to reform. (Marg. Ref. u, x. Notes, 8:2-4. Ps. 106:35-45. Jer. 12:7-9, v. 9.) The strange gods and heathen alliances weakened him continually; and the neighbouring nations by hostile invasions devoured his strength: yet he perceived no danger, and never suspected the cause of his decay, namely, that the hand of God was lifted up against him. (Marg. Ref. y. Notes, 2 Kings 15: 19, 20, 29. 17:1-6. Is. 13:22-25.) In short, he had as evident tokens of approaching ruin, as gray hairs are of old age and of the decay of the constitution: and the prophets evidently saw these symptoms and pointed them out to him, but he took no notice. This arose from his pride, which openly testified against him; seeing neither judgments, warnings, nor mercies, could induce him to return and seek the Lord. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. z-b. Notes, 5:5, Jer. 8:4-7. Am. 4:6-13.)

V. 11, 12. In another view of the subject, Ephraim was become like "a silly dove," not in innocence and gentleness, but in folly and timorousness, "without heart;" having neither understanding, courage, nor resolution. He was frightened at every appearance of danger: but instead of fleeing to God for refuge, as the doves fly to their windows; he was like the silly dove, that flies here and there for safety, till she is taken in the fowler's net, being easily seduced into it. Sometimes he applied to the Assyrians, and sometimes to the Egyptians, without prudence or prospect of safety: and thus he would be entangled in the net which the Lord had spread for him, and be overtaken with inevitable ruin, as the fowls are ensnared and destroyed by the fowler. (Marg. Ref. c-g. Notes, 5:13, 14, 10:5, 6, 11:5-7, 14:1-3, 2 Kings 15:19, 20, 17:4. Is. 30:4, 5, 31:1.) For God would certainly punish them, "as the congregation" of Israel "had" repeatedly "heard" from the prophets: and especially, as had been foretold in the books of Moses. (Marg. Ref. h.) "When they hearken to their assembly." When they are swayed by the counsel of their assembly to seek foreign assistance." Bp. Newcombe.

V. 13-16. Deserved ruin must come upon the people, seeing they had not only transgressed against God, but fled from him, who alone could pardon and save them. Though he had often redeemed them from their enemies; yet they had "spoken lies against" him, as if he were a severe Master, and his service hard and unprofitable: or they had mocked him with hypocritical professions of repentance. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. i-m. Notes, Ez. 20:2. Dent. 15: 13-15, Mic. 6:3-5, Matt. 25:24-30.) Even when on the bed of sickness or death, or labouring under heavy afflictions, they howled out for anguish and terror, and vented their bitter and impatient complaints before God: they did not cry to him with their hearts; they did not humble themselves before him or expect help from him; at least they did not intend to return to his service, but only cried out, (like the unclean spirit), "Torment me not," in a mixture of horror and enmity. (Marg. Ref. n, o. Notes, Job 35:9-13. Ps. 78:34-37, Matt. 8:28, 29. P. O. 28-34.) When they met together to pray for a favourable harvest or vintage, they sought these things only to consume on their lusts, and persisted at the very time in rebellion against God. (Marg. Ref. n. Note, Jam. 4:1-3.) And when the Lord chastised them, and afterwards bound up their wounds and strengthened them, they still devised more rebellion and wickedness against him.—Even when they seemed to repent and turn to him; they only left Baal to worship the golden calves; or they rested in some form or external reformation, and never came up to true repentance, faith, spiritual worship, or holy obedience. They deceived every expectation formed of them, like a broken or a useless bow in the day of battle : their princes therefore would one after another perish by the sword, for their daring impieties and revilings of God's prophets ; and their miseries would excite the derision of the Egyptians, on whom they had depended for protection against the Assyrians. (Marg. Ref. q-x. Notes, 5-10. 6:4, 5. 11:5-7. Ps. 78:56, 60.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-10. The means used to bring sinners to repentance and salvation, whether by the labours of God's ministers, or by providential dispensations, serve only to detect and aggravate their wickedness ; except they be accompanied with his special blessing.—The whole "salvation of the righteous is therefore of the LORD ;" but the condemnation of the wicked is of themselves, and justly deserved.—Men commit numerous and heinous crimes, without reflection, recollection, or remorse : because "they consider not, that the LORD remembers all their wickedness," and will produce the whole of it as evidence against them, and show all the world the justice of their punishment, by discovering the malignity of their crimes.—Alas ! how poor an object do men attain, who ingratiate themselves with ungodly kings and nobles, by wickedness and lies ; and thus expose themselves to the wrath of God, and even increase the condemnation of their haughty patrons ! The depraved hearts of men and the temptations of Satan are as congenial as fire and fuel, and concur in preparing sinners for the practice of every crime ; and want of opportunity, ability, or courage, prevents more wickedness, than perhaps all other causes combined. So that the open, and even the secret enormities of men's lives, atrocious as they are, bear a very small proportion to the desperate wickedness of their hearts. But when lust is inwardly conceived and cherished, it will more or less break forth into outward sin ; the devil, who first suggests the idea of forbidden indulgence, will assist in devising the means of gratification ; and then sinners will proceed without further temptation, "having made ready their hearts like an oven," while they lie in wait for the opportunity. Thus adulteries, murders, and all horrible crimes are perpetrated, without hesitation or remorse, when it can be done with present impunity.—Days of public festivity, though they ought to be days of praise and thanksgiving, and holy joy in God, are almost always attended with much wickedness, and followed with many fatal effects.—Intoxication leads men to every kind of impiety and immorality : but what an infamy and degradation is it for a king to be "made sick with bottles of wine," and to be a companion and an example to scorners and blasphemers ! (Notes, 1 Kings 20:16-18. Prov. 20:1. P. O. 1-16. Notes, 23:29-35. P. O. 19-35.) They who tempt princes and rulers to such a degrading vice, can never be their friends : and not unfrequently the event shows that they were plotting their ruin ; and that they were lying in wait, with hearts full of malice or ambition, to murder both body and soul, by an exquisite refinement in cruelty. (Note, 2 Sam. 13:22-29.) Whilst men thus execute the vengeance of God on each other, how seldom do those that witness such transactions, "call upon God," who alone can preserve them from being involved in similar ruin ? Thus nations ripen for destruction ; and such as are called Christians often differ in nothing from pagans ; except in the worthless attempt to form a coalition between religion and the world, that is, between God and the devil ! But we are so blind to ourselves, that neither nations, nor churches, nor individuals, can see, in their own case, those symptoms of decay and approaching ruin, which are visible to all around them. The same pride which emboldens men to break the law of God, leads them to self-flattery, and to continue impenitent amidst the rebukes of Providence, and the warnings of his word. "They will not return to the LORD, nor seek him for all this."

V. 11-16. When sinners are terrified, and driven from one device to another for safety ; they are so devoid of understanding, that the mercy and grace of God a frequently the only refuge, to which they never think of fleeing. But to whatever other expedients they have recourse, the LORD will take them in his net, and execute upon them those judgments, of which all his congregations have often heard. Who then be those transgressors who attempt to flee from God ! for in this way destruction is inevitable. But to him, as the Redeemer of Israel, the chief of sinners may approach with acceptance ; and those who perish in their sins speak lies against him, if they charge their ruin either on his secret purposes, or his refusal to have mercy on them. Yet numbers, when in deep distress, they howl forth their terrors in the form of prayers, do not cry to God with their hearts, for the blessings of his complete salvation. Even their prayers for temporal mercies only require provision for their lusts, and are united with rebellion. Whether God afflict and weaken them, or bind up and strengthen them, they continue to "devise mischief against him." Their very repentance, and conversion from one sect, sentiment, form, or vice, to another, leave them far short of conversion to God, to Christ, and holiness : for "they return, but not to the most High," and rest in some plausible scheme of hypocrisy or false religion. When they speak fair, their professions are deceitful ; but when they pour forth outrageous blasphemies and lies, their tongues agree with their hearts ; (Note, Jam. 3:3-6.) and their destruction will be attended with the derision and contempt of their tempters and companions in iniquity. Such is human nature ! Such is the progress and end of impiety ! Such shall we prove if left to ourselves ! "Create in us a clean heart, O God, and renew a right spirit within us."

NOTES.—CHAP. VIII. V. 1. The prophet, as Israel's watchman, was commanded to blow the trumpet. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. a. Notes, 5:8-10. Num. 10:2-10. Is. 58:1, 2. Ez. 33:2-9. Joel 2:1-3. Am. 3:4-8.) Thus he must give warning of the coming of the Assyrian king, with speed and violence like an eagle, against the people among whom God had dwelt ; because they had now provoked him, by breaking his law, and violating his covenant, to depart from them.—Give notice of the approaching enemy, (5:8.) who is coming with speed and fierceness, like a bird of prey (Deut. 28:49.) against the city and temple of Jerusalem. By "the house of the LORD," may be meant God's people in general, whom he formerly took a peculiar care of as his own family ; (9:15.) This may probably denote Sennacherib's invasion ; (Louth. (Marg. Ref. b-d. Notes, Jer. 4:5-13. Matt. 24:26-28.)—The verse may be considered as a general warning to Judah as well as Israel : though the following verses are immediately addressed to the ten tribes.—Transgressed, &c.) (Notes, 6:7. Is. 24:1-12, vv. 5, 6. Jer. 31:31, 32.)

V. 2-4. When Israel should be hard pressed by the Assyrians, they would claim a relation to God, and profess to put themselves under his protection, as a people that had known and worshipped him. But their pretensions would be disregarded ; for they "had cast off" him that is good, or "that which is good ;" they had forsaken the LORD, and his temple and worship : they had despised his prophets and trampled on his law, by their idolatries and iniquities ; and this for many ages : therefore their enemies would pursue and prevail against them. (Marg. Ref. e-g. Notes, John 8:54-59. Tit. 1:14-16.) They had set up kings and princes of their own choosing, in opposition to his chosen race the family of David, when they revolted from Rehoboam, and through all succeeding generations : they never consulted their heavenly King, about the appointment of their earthly kings : and both they, and their kings and princes, had employed their treasures in making idols, as if on purpose to provoke God to cut them off. (Marg. Ref. h-k. Notes, 2:8, 9. Ez. 32:2-6. 1 Kings 12:16, 26-31. 16: 2 Kings 15:2.)

V. 5, 6. The calf of Samaria (or that placed at Beth-el, in the kingdom of which Samaria was the capital,) could not protect its worshippers, but would "cast them off ;" for the Assyrians would seize upon them and their idol also. And how long would it be ere they cleared themselves of this idolatry ? Did they never intend it ? The whole of that worship was Israel's invention, from the time when the golden calf was made in the wilderness, contrary to the Thy calf, &c. (5) "Remove far from thee thy calf, O Samaria." Bp. Newcombe. Till the worship of the golden calf was entirely abolished, the removing of other idols would not avert the wrath of God. The workmen made the idol, and it could neither be God, nor any proper representation of him; but a mere dead image of a calf, which would soon be broken, and become fragments of gold.

V. 7, 8. All the expense and trouble of the people in their idolatrous worship, and all their crimes, politics, and heathen alliances, by which they attempted to secure themselves, were only "sowing the wind;" and if they had any increase, they could only "reap the whirlwind." (Marg. Ref. t. Notes, 10:12, 13, Is. 17:10-14, 44:19, 20, Gal. 6:5-10, vv. 7, 8.) Such seed could produce nothing valuable; and if a little transient prosperity seemed to result from it, it would soon be torn from them by strangers, who would swallow them up with their property; and they would be left among the nations as a broken or mean vessel, which a man throws away, or uses for the basest purposes. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. u-z. Notes, Jer. 22:28-30, Rom. 9:22, 23, 2 Tim. 2:20-22.)

V. 9, 10. When the Syrians attacked the Israelites, they applied for help to the kings of Assyria; and they ran about as a headstrong wild ass when separated from his companions. (Notes, Job 39:5-8, Jer. 2:22-24.) At a ruinous expense they hired the assistance of idolaters, and conformed to their mode of worship. But though they seemed to have obtained their purpose, and to have engaged powerful allies; yet the Lord would gather these allies against them as their enemies, and would begin to punish them by the burden or tribute laid on them by the king of Assyria, who called himself "a king of princes." (Note, Is. 10:8-11.) Yet this would be a light affliction, compared with those which would follow. (Marg. and Marg. Ref.) "The word menal signifies in a little time here, as it does Hag. 2:6." Louth.

V. 11, 12. The Israelites, having, in the days of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, forsaken the temple and altar, at Jerusalem, erected altars at Beth-el and Dan, and at several other places, to the golden calves, to Baal, and to other idols; as if they had purposely intended to add sin to sin; therefore their altars and sacrifices would be imputed to them as aggravated crimes, and expose them to just and dreadful punishment. The Lord had caused the great and important truths and commandments of his law, respecting himself, and the worship and service which he required, to be written for their instruction, and he had sent his prophets to enforce it upon the people; but they continued to treat it as "a strange thing;" they knew scarcely any thing of it, they disregarded and despised it, and adhered to their own devices. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 10:5, 6, Is. 44:9, Jer. 10:6-10, Hab. 2:18, 19, Acts 19:23-31, v. 26.) "Thus the idolaters count the word of God as strange, in respect of their own inventions."—Alas! in how many places, even among protestants, is a minister, who inculcates the great doctrines of Christianity, as stated at the reformation, accused of preaching a new religion, and "bringing strange things" to the ears of the people! Indeed, every thing is new to the ignorant, as it is to a child, however long and extensively it has before been known; and such charges proclaim, either the ignorance, or the enmity to the truth, of those who bring them.

V. 13. The people professed to sacrifice unto God, while they "made void his commandments, that they might keep their own traditions;" but the feast, which they made on the sacrifice, was their sole advantage: (Marg. and Ref. m. Notes, 6:6, Jer. 7:21-23, Am. 5:21-24.) for the Lord, instead of accepting their worship, was determined to punish their obstinate disobedience and idolatry; and to reduce them to as grievous a bondage as their fathers had endured in Egypt. "Going into Egypt was a proverbial speech for extreme misery." Louth. (Marg. Ref. n, o. Notes, 7:13-15, v. 16, 9:1-6, vv. 3, 6, Deut. 28:68.)

eth them not; "now will he remember their iniquity, and visit their sins: they shall return to Egypt.

14 For Israel hath "forgotten his "Maker, "and buildeth temples; "and Judah hath multiplied fenced cities: but I will send a fire upon his cities and it shall devour the palaces thereof.

CHAPTER IX.

Israel is sentenced to a variety of miseries, for their aggravated sins, especially their idolatry, 1-17.

V. 14. When the Israelites were wholly forgetful of God, and regardless of his authority, they erected temples to the golden calves and to other idols. Judah also, instead of confiding in the Lord, "multiplied fenced cities," as their security against invaders: thus both Israel and Judah were provoking God to pour out his judgments upon them, which would soon destroy their cities, temples, and palaces, as by one general conflagration. PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Great earnestness and boldness are especially required when ministers are called on to warn degenerate professors of religion of approaching ruin, and exhort them to repent of transgressing God's law and despising his covenant.—In times of great danger, and especially in the day of judgment, many will say, "My God we know thee," and "Lord, Lord, open to us;" to whom he will answer, "Depart from me, ye workers of iniquity." (Notes, Matt. 7:21-23, Luke 13:22-30, vv. 25-27.) For evil will overtake all, who "cast off that which is good," and rest in a mere form of godliness.—No comfort can be expected in any of the relations of life, which we form without consulting God: good rulers, or masters, or servants, as well as more intimate relatives, should be sought from him by prayer and valued as his gift. Nor can we expect success in any undertaking, even in our temporal concerns, in which we do not acknowledge him, and seek to know and do his will. (Notes, Prov. 3:5, 6, Col. 3:16, 17, v. 16.)—Those who covetously idolize gold and silver, are nearly as criminal as they were who formerly made images of them to worship: and in various ways men act, as if they were bent upon their own ruin.—All our selfish and worldly confidences will one day fail us; because we provoke God to jealousy by putting them in his place. But how long will it be, ere we any of us "attain unto innocency," and renounce all our idols?—No human inventions can form an essential part of our religious worship, any more than the work of the carpenter or goldsmith can be a god.—Let us then, "not be deceived; what a man sows that also shall he reap," and those who sow vanity shall reap destruction and confusion. No good can come from impiety, idolatry, and wickedness, whatever pains or expense men bestow upon them: and the transient prosperity of fools will not only soon terminate, but it "will destroy them." (Note, Prov. 1:32, 33.) Apostates will be confounded in punishment with other evildoers; except as they will be more disgraced than they, and become among ungodly men, as a vessel in which the Lord has no pleasure.—Men are often more brutish than the most stupid of the animals, and more obstinate than the most intractable: they are so enslaved to their degrading lusts and passions, that they pay very dear for the gratification of them even in this world; but this is only "a little sorrow," compared with the punishment prepared for them hereafter.—So long as men despise the truths and precepts of God's written word, and count the mysteries of his nature, the demands of his law, the doctrines of his gospel, and the ordinances of his worship, "a strange thing;" all the observances and costly oblations of their own devising, will "be unto them for sin;" for God accepts nothing which is not done in faith; and he will remember and punish the sins of all men, except those of the true believer. And whether they who forget God multiply temples, or palaces, or castles; they can by no means secure themselves against the wrath of that "righteous Judge," whose justice they have provoked, and whose salvation they have neglected, despised, or perverted. (Notes and P. O. Heb. 2:1-4.)

NOTES.—CHAP. IX. V. 1-3. Perhaps the Israelites were joyfully celebrating some public success, or gathering in their vintage or harvest, when the prophet published this message to them. They had no right to rejoice, as Judah had, among whom there were still considerable remains of true religion; or even as the people of other countries, who had not forsaken God in so aggravated a manner, or been guilty of such deep contempt, or so base and ingrateful an apostasy, as they had. (Marg. Ref. a-c. Notes, 4:12-14. Jer. 2:10-13. Ez. 16:15-29, 44-51.) Their prosperity, therefore, would be more transient and ruinous than that of other nations; for, like an adulterous woman, they had violated their covenant with God, and preferred the most worthless idols to him. They loved to receive even the fruits of the earth, as from these their paramours; because festivals in honour of their idols, were more suited to their state of heart, than presenting the sacrifices of thanksgiving to God, and honouring him with their substance. (Notes, 2:2-13.) He therefore would visit them with famine; so that their corn-floor and wine-press would not suffice for their support, instead of supplying their luxurious revels; and the "new wine would lie to her," by disappointing her expectations, that is, those of the nation considered as a harlot. (Marg. Ref. e.) Nay, the people would not be allowed to inhabit JEHOVAH's favoured and good land, where he designed to dwell among his worshippers; (Marg. Ref. f. Notes, Lev. 18:24-30. Deut. 4:25-28. Josh. 23:14-16. Mic. 2:8-10.) some of them would migrate into Egypt, either in the time of famine, or when pressed by the Assyrians; the rest would be carried into Assyria, and there be constrained to live on food which was ceremoniously unclean, or even refuse and vile, being pressed with extreme necessity. (Marg. Ref. g-k. Notes, 8:13. Ez. 4:9-17. Dan. 1:8-16. Am. 5:25-27.)

V. 4-6. The Israelites would have no opportunity of pouring out wine-offerings to God, nor any wine to do it with; neither could they present any acceptable service, or have any communion with him. (Marg. Ref. l, m. Notes, Joel 1:9. 2:12-14.) Their sacrifices would either be totally interrupted, or would be "as the bread of mourners;" who being unclean could not eat of the holy things without violating the law. (Marg. Ref. n.) The show-bread would no longer be presented in "the house of the Lord in their behalf;" nor sacrifices offered for them. (Marg. Ref. o.) And what would they do, on their solemn feasts, when both the spiritual and carnal joy of them had ceased? For the prophet, as it were, beheld, and saw the people gone out of the land, to avoid impending destruction: and they would be collected together into Egypt, to die and be buried there; whilst their pleasant places, which were decorated or filled with silver, (as well as the other more humble tabernacles,) would soon be overgrown with nettles and thorns. (Marg. Ref. r-t. Notes, 10:7, 8. Is. 32:9-14, vv. 12-14. 34:9-15, v. 13.)

Egypt, &c. (6) (Marg. Ref. s.) Probably, numbers of the Israelites fled for refuge into Egypt, during the ravages of the Assyrians, and perished miserably there; as the Jews did, after the destruction of Jerusalem by the Chaldeans. (Notes, Jer. 41:16-18. 42:44.)

V. 7, 8. The prophets had long foretold these days of "visitation" and "recompense," and Israel would soon know the truth of their predictions: for they were even just arrived. (Marg. Ref. u, x. Notes, Ez. 7:2-7, 12, 13.) though they now counted "the prophet a fool," and the inspired servant of God a madman; because of their extreme depravity, and enmity to the Lord and his worship and service. Or, the event would show their false prophets, and preachers to inspiration, to have been fools and madmen, to whose delusions God had given up Israel, to punish the multitude of their crimes and their great hatred of him. Marg. and Marg. Ref. y-a. Notes, Mic. 2:11. Zech. 7:15-17.)—The prophet observed that "the watchmen of Ephraim" (as Elijah, Elisha, Micaiah, and others,) had communed with his God, had him present and assisting him in his work, and wrought with him in "turning many to righteousness;" but these nominal watchmen or prophets were, in all their ways, like the snare of a fowler to entangle men to their ruin; as they increased the people's hatred of God and his worship, and thus brought down vengeance upon themselves and them, by their idolatry or hypocrisy.—The marginal reading, "hatred against the house of his God," gives the clearer sense.—Some give another turn to the verse: 'Ye falsely imagined that these prophets of Ephraim were sent of God, and had familiar acquaintance with him; but ye shall find them to be but as the snare of a fowler. Bp. Hall. 'God has delivered this people up to these delusions, as a just punishment of their many sins, and of the great hatred they have against God and his worship.' Louth. V. 9, 10. The people of all the tribes of Israel were become as "deeply corrupted," as the men of Gibeah, who abused and murdered the Levite's concubine; or those of the tribe of Benjamin, who defended the perpetrators of that detestable crime, and so were almost wholly cut off; (Marg. Ref. e-g. Notes, Judg. 19-21;) and God would remember and visit the crimes of the generation, to whom the prophet spake, with like tremendous judgments. Indeed Israel in his first and best days, just before his entrance into Canaan, was as pleasing to God as grapes would be to a weary traveller in the parched desert; or as the first ripe figs, when being scarce they are the more valued. (Marg. Ref. h. Notes, Jer. 2:2, 3. Mic. 7:1-4.) Yet, even when the nation thus followed the Lord in the wilderness, a multitude of them were seduced by the Midianitish women, to frequent the temple of Baal-peor, and to separate themselves from the ordinances of God unto that shameful idolatry, and that abominable whoredom, which they loved better than the spiritual and holy worship of JEHOVAH: and they ever after chose such abominations, or idols, as suited their perverse and sensual inclinations. (Marg. Ref. i-m. Notes, Num. 25: Deut. 4:3, 4. 29:19, 20. Ps. 106:28-31. Am. 4:4, 5.)—'The Hebrew word, yinnazeru, were separated, alludes to the order of the Nazarites, who were in a peculiar manner set apart for God's service; . . . whereas these dedicated themselves to the service of that filthy idol Baal-peor, that shame, or shameful thing. (Jer. 11:13.)—Bosheth, shame, was a nickname for Baal: so Jerub-baal is called Jerub-besheth, 2 Sam. 11:21.' Louth. (Note, Judg. 6:31, 32.)

V. 11-14. Ephraim signifies fruitfulness: and the vast number, to which this tribe had increased, was its peculiar glory. (Marg. Ref. o-s. Note, 15-17.) By this distinction the Ephraimites seem to have been greatly elevated; but it was about to "fly away," speedily and irrecoverably, as a bird let loose. Their children would die as soon as they were born, or be stillborn or abortions; by which the nation would be gradually enfeebled and diminished: and of the small number that should grow up to maturity, the Lord would so bereave them by various judgments, that there should scarcely be any one left of them: for nothing but misery could ensue, when God had been provoked to depart from them in anger, and to deprive them of his gracious presence and protection. (Gen. 41:52. Notes, 48:17-20. 49:22-26. Num. 1:32-35. Deut. 33:17.) Indeed, Ephraim had been prosperous and replenished; and as pleasantly situated, as 12 I thought they bring up their children, yet will I leave them, that there shall not be a man left: yea, 'wo also to them when I depart from them!

13 Ephraim, 'as I saw Tyrus, is planted in a pleasant place: but Ephraim 'shall bring forth his children to the murderer.

14 Give them, O LORD: 'what wilt thou give? give them 'a miscarrying womb and dry breasts.

15 All their wickedness 'is in Gilgal: for there I hated them: for the wickedness of their doings 'I will drive them out of my house, I will owe them no more: 'all their princes are revolvers.

16 Ephraim is smitten, 'their root is dried up, they shall bear no fruit: yea, though they bring forth, yet will I slay even 'the beloved fruit of their womb.

17 'My God will cast them away, 'because they did not hearken unto him: 'and they shall be wanderers among the nations.

even the flourishing city of Tyre, which excited the admiration of all beholders: (Ez. 27: 3, 4.) but from this time they would educate children, and lead forth their young men to battle merely to be slain by their enemies. So that the prophet scarcely knew what to ask in their behalf; or could only entreat the Lord to give them "a miscarrying womb and dry breasts," as a less calamity than "bringing forth children for the murderer," or to be trained up in idolatry. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. u, x. Notes, Matt. 24: 19, 20. Luke 23: 26-31.)

V. 15-17. Gilgal, where their fathers first covenanted with God, after they had entered the promised land, and where his tabernacle once stood before it was removed to Shiloh, was at the time when the prophet wrote, become the repository of all kinds of idolatry and iniquity, whence they were diffused through the land on each side of Jordan: therefore the Lord abhorred them, and resolved to drive them out of his house, as an adulterous woman when divorced. (Marg. Ref. y-a. See on Note, 4: 15.) Nor would he any more love them, or specially favour them as a nation; seeing all their princes were revolvers, rebels, and apostates. Indeed the calamities were begun; their root was dried up, and their fruit would wither. When the Israelites were sentenced to fall in the wilderness, their children were preserved to inherit the promised land: but as Ephraim was to be finally rejected, even the beloved fruit of the womb would be slain with their parents, as those of the Canaanites had been. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. b, c. Notes, 11-14. Num. 14: 24-31. Ps. 90: 13-17.) God had determined to cast them off, because they would not hearken to him; and the remnant of them would be scattered as wanderers among the nations.—This was soon after fulfilled, respecting the kingdom of the ten tribes, and continues so to this day: and even such of them as were incorporated with the Jews, have with them been wanderers among the nations for many hundred years. (Marg. Ref. d-f. Notes, John 7: 31-36, v. 35. Jam. 1: 1.)—It is wonderful, that these prophecies, so often repeated, and so exactly descriptive of the present state of that favoured nation, after many revolving ages, do not more impress the minds of those who read them with admiration of the foreknowledge of God, and full conviction of the divine inspiration of the holy Scriptures.

All their princes, &c. (15) Above half the kings of Judah were pious rulers: but not one of the kings of Israel was so. (Preface I Kings.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-10. Those who abide under the wrath of God, and continue to accumulate guilt and condemnation, can have no good cause to rejoice in temporal prosperity; but such as apostatize from the religion of pious ancestors, violate their own solemn engagements, and run into wickedness, in opposition to the convictions of their consciences, and the strivings of God's Spirit with them, have even less reason for joy than any other sinners; for to them belongs the deepest condemnation.—Abundance received as the reward of serving Mammon, or abused in making provision for men's lusts, will end either in most ruinous prosperity, or most distressing calamities.—They whose pampered bodies are rendered unclean by unlawful indulgence; may perhaps be reduced to the necessity of eating the most unclean and unwholesome food, through the extremity of indigence. (Note, Luke 15: 13-16. P. O. 11-16.)—But no famine is so dreadful as that of the soul: awful is the case of those who can perform no acceptable service to the Lord, but must either utterly neglect him, or render him such worship as he abhors: yet in this case we should all have been, had not the Son of God, by his incarnation, atonement, and intercession, opened us a door of access and acceptance through faith in his name.—Men may now despise the solemn days and ordinances of God, and dishonour every feast which aims to gratify their love of jovial mirth, and sensual indulgence; but the utter want of every means of grace and hope of mercy, will make them know their value: and what will they then do? (Note, Am. 8: 11-14.) Thus multitudes hurry on to destruction; their bodies are gathered into the grave; their souls sink into hopeless misery; and their "pleasant places for their silver," as well as their commodious habitations, if not covered with thorns and nettles, yet pass into the hands of those who neither know nor care what is become of them. (Notes, Ps. 39: 6. 49: 10, 16, 17. Ez. 2: 18-23. Luke 12: 15-21, vv. 20, 21. 16: 27-31.) But the ministers of God, who foresee, and openly declare, these approaching days of visitation and recompense, must expect to be reviled as wild enthusiasts, or as weak and foolish men: for God leaves sinners under delusion, because of the greatness of their crimes and their enmity against him. But if worldly men deem the servants of God fools and madmen; these know and can prove them and their flattering teachers to be so. Happy are they, that have watchmen placed over them, who walk with God, seek his glory, do his work, and enjoy his assistance and blessing: many such there have been, and are; may "the Lord of the harvest" increase their numbers and prosper their labours! But more have been found crafty and selfish, ensnaring men in error and iniquity, and misleading them into the ways of ruin for their own mercenary ends; opposing, hindering, reviling, and persecuting the true servants of God; increasing men's hatred of him, and of each other; and thus disturbing and defiling even the house of the Lord. Alas! many parts of the church are as corrupted, in these and other respects, as Benjamin was in the days of Gibeah, and may expect similar visitations. At some times, and in some places, a people are formed by divine grace, who are peculiarly delightful to our holy God; but then a falling off commonly succeeds, and some "separate themselves to this shame," and others to that, according to the different "abominations which they have loved." Thus they go out from true believers, because they were not of them; and their glory soon vanishes and appears no more.

V. 11-17. How soon could our God insensibly waste the most populous nations! Nay, how often does he thus decrease them! and what awful instances of this has our eventful age exhibited! What an alloy it is to our comfort in our beloved children, to reflect for what purposes they may possibly be brought up and reserved! "This is a sore vanity;" but the best remedy of it is submission, and confidence in God, and a conscientious performance of our duty: especially in training up our families in the fear of God, and in seeking for them, as well as ourselves, "first the kingdom of God and his righteousness;" and setting them a good example. (Note, Gen. 17: 17-19. P. O. 16-22.) Surely it is far more desirable to be written childless, than to bring up children in the service of sin and Satan! and they, who provoke God to depart from them, can reasonably expect nothing but wo for themselves and their offspring, here and hereafter.—The Lord will drive impenitent and hypocritical professors of Christianity with abhorrence out of his house, and "love them no more;" his wrath dries up the root and withers the fruit of all our comforts: and the poor scattered Jews, whom God cast off because they did not hearken to him, and whom he has condemned to be "wanderers among the nations," are a daily warning to us to beware, lest we neglect or abuse his gospel: for how then could we escape a similar, or even a far more terrible condemnation? (Notes, Ps. 59: 11-13, v. 11.)

NOTES.—CHAP. X. V. 1-3. Israel had often been compared to a vine, which is valuable only for its fruit; but the nation was become "an empty vine," which brought no fruit to perfection. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. a, b. Notes, Ps. 80: 13-13. Is. 5: 1-7. Ez. 15: 1.) They not only spent their abundance on themselves; but even their apparent good works sprang from ostentation, or other selfish motives, and

3 For now they snail say, 'We have no king, because we feared not the LORD; what then should a king do to us?

4 They have spoken words, swearing falsely in making a covenant: thus judgment springeth up as hemlock in the furrows of the field.

5 The inhabitants of Samaria shall fear because of the calves of Beth-aven: for the people thereof shall mourn over it, and the priests thereof that rejoiced on it, for the glory thereof, because it is departed from it.

6 It shall be also carried unto Assyria, for a present to king Jareb: Ephraim shall perceive shame, and Israhel shall be ashamed of his own counsel.

7 As for Samaria, her king is cut off as the foam upon the water.

8 The high places also of Aven, the sin of Israel, shall be destroyed: the thorn and the thistle shall come up on their altars; and they shall say to the mountains, Cover us; and to the hills, Fall on us.

not from regard to the glory and will of God. (Notes, Matt. 6:1-5.) In proportion as they were enriched by the produce of their good land, they multiplied altars and images; which had a goodly show of devotion, but were an abomination to the Lord. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. c. Notes, 8:14. 12:10-14. v. 11.) They vainly attempted to divide their hearts between him and idols, which were his rivals; and thus they were found guilty of violating the covenant of God, and of forfeiting all the blessings of their relation to him. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. d. e. Notes, 1 Kings 18:21. 2 Kings 17:7-11, 33-40. 18:22. Matt. 6:24. Jam. 1:5-8.) By the Assyrians, he would certainly destroy their altars and images; and they should be left without any king to head or protect them, and be forced to confess that, because they "had not feared the Lord," no king could do any thing effectual to preserve them from ruin. 'A king cannot protect us, if God be against us.' Louth. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 8:2-4. 2 Kings 15:16-30. 17:1-4.)

V. 4. The Israelites, in professing to covenant with God, or make vows to him, spake lies, and joined perjury to hypocrisy. In swearing allegiance to their princes, they concealed the most treacherous intentions; and all their civil compacts and decisions were conducted with fraud and perjury. Thus, even the administration of justice (as it should have been,) sprang up, like pestiferous hemlock in the furrows of the field; and tended to diffuse, still more widely, deceit, injustice, impiety, and misery, throughout the whole land. (Marg. Ref. g. h. Notes, Am. 5:7-13. 6:12-14. Mic. 3:1-4.) 'Injustice being publicly countenanced, encourages the same practices in private men's dealings; thus instead of judgment and fair dealing, injustice increases every where, as bitter and poisonous weeds grow up in a field where there is no care taken to destroy them.' V. 5, 6. The inhabitants of Samaria would be seized with terror, when they heard that the golden calves, which had been worshipped at Beth-aven, or Beth-el, and Dan, were carried off by the invaders, or given to the Assyrian king. The people would deeply regret the loss of their idols; but the priests, who had rejoiced in the emolument and credit which they had derived from that idolatry, would have more substantial cause for mourning, when their gains and their glory were all taken away together. For the gold of the calves would be sent to the king of Assyria, as a present, or oblation out of the spoil of the conquered nation; and this would turn to the shame of the doing idolaters, who took counsel to worship dead images which could not protect themselves, in preference to the living, true, and almighty God. (Marg. Ref. i-m. Notes, 8:5, 6. 11:5-7. 13:1, 2. 2 Kings 17:2.)—The word, rendered priests, is Chemarim: these were certain idolatrous priests, who were clothed in black, when they offered sacrifices. (Marg. and Ref. Notes, 2 Kings 23:5. Zeph. 1:4.)

7, 8. Perhaps Hosea the last king of Israel was here meant. After various revolutions, and an interregnum of some continuance, that kingdom seemed in a hopeful way of attaining tranquillity and prosperity, under his government; but these promising appearances resembled those airy bubbles, that form the foam on the top of the water; and they soon vanished and came to nothing by the slaughter of the king. (Note, 2 Kings 17:1-6.) Then the high places of Aven, (or Beth-aven, Note, 5:8-10) would be destroyed; and whilst thorns and thistles overgrew their desolated altars, (Marg. Ref. u-y. Note, 9:4-6) the terrified worshippers would call upon the hills and mountains to crush or cover them from impending and more tremendous vengeance. (Notes, Is. 2:19-21. Luke 23:26-31. Rev. 6:15-17.)

V. 9-11. The disposition of Israel had, in succeeding ages, resembled that of the Benjamites in the days of Gibeah. (See on Note 9:9, 10.) The men of Gibeah stood to what they had done, and the Benjamites stood by them in it; and thus Israel had always obstinately persisted in the most atrocious abominations. Though the last battle in Gibeah almost destroyed the tribe of Benjamin; yet it did not overtake and extirpate the children of iniquity: for many still remained from age to age in Israel, to copy that detestable example. (Marg. Ref. a-c. Notes, Gen. 6:5. 8:20-22. v. 21. Judg. 20:29-48.) The Lord had therefore formed a determined purpose to punish them, as even taking pleasure in so doing. (Notes, Deut. 28:63. Is. 1:21-24. Ez. 5:13.) The people of Assyria, with their allies, would gather at his call against them; when by their idolatry they had bound themselves for slavery, as the oxen are confined to labour up and down the two furrows of the field. Ephraim indeed was like a heifer, who had been taught, and loved, to tread out the corn; which was not hard labour, and was attended with the liberty of eating it; that is, the Israelites loved the privilege and temporal advantages of being the people of God, but they were not disposed to labour or self-denial in his service. By milder discipline, God had attempted to train them to obedience, as the husbandman gently causes the yoke to pass upon the fair neck of the young heifer, to prepare her for the work; but as that did not effect the purpose, he would reduce them to great hardships, like those endured by beasts of burden, or used to ride on, as horses, or asses, or camels: and even Judah and the whole house of Jacob would be brought into bondage by the Assyrians and Chaldeans, as if they were set to plough and to break the clods; seeing they had quarrelled with the easy yoke of God's commands. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. g-i. Notes, Deut. 25:4. Matt. 11: 28-30.)

V. 12, 13. No way remained, to the Israelites and Jews, of escaping the threatened judgments, except by "sowing to themselves in righteousness." Repentance and conversion from sin, attendance on the ordinances of God, and obedience to his commandments, would be like sowing good seed, which would yield an increase for their own advantage; and in this way, though they could not merit any thing from God, they might hope and wait for his merciful acceptance, as their harvest. (Notes, 8:7, 8. Ps. 126:5, 6. Prov. 11:18. Ec. 11:3-6. Gal. 5:10, v. 7, 8.) But their hearts resembled fallow ground, hard and unbroken, and covered with noxious weeds; so that, unless they were humbled and broken for sin and cleansed from worldly lusts and affections, they could not receive the good seed of God's word, nor bring forth the fruits of righteousness: but self-examination, watchfulness, prayer, confession and mortification of sin, would "break up this fallow ground," and eradicate these weeds. (Marg. Ref. k, l. Notes, Jer. 43:1. Matt. 13:20-23.) They had too long delayed this needful duty; and it was full time for them to seek the Lord, and his favour and help, by earnest prayer: thus they might expect, that he would give the increase by the influences of his Spirit, and "come and rain righteousness upon them." (Marg. Ref. m, n. Notes, 6:1-3. Ps. 72:4-7. Is. 55:6, 44:3-5. 45:8.) But, on the contrary, they had long bestowed abundant pains in the practice of wickedness; as if they had ploughed and sowed, in order to get a crop of iniquity; and in consequence they had eaten the fruit of their own lies, and hypocrisy, and idolatry. They trusted in their own projects and heathen alliances, and in numerous and valiant forces; but, as they had neglected God and his service, these confidences would certainly fail them. (*Marg. V. 14. Intense divisions and foreign invaders would soon combine to ruin Israel. All their strongholds would fall into the hands of the enemy, and their inhabitants would be treated with the same savage cruelty with which Shalman (or Shalmaneser) had desolated Beth-arbel, when he took it by assault, and slew indiscriminately all the wretched inhabitants. Nor could Beth-el and its idols do any thing for them better than this; for it was the source and substance of their enormous wickedness. (Marg. Ref. s-x. Notes, 5:6. 13:15, 16.) And after a night of adversity, when they thought the morning of prosperity was come, under the government of Hosea, he would suddenly be cut off, and the whole people left defenceless in the hands of their enemies.—Beth-arbel was a place in Armenia, famous afterward for the defeat of Darius the last king of Persia, by Alexander. . . The Hebrew reads, Because of the evil of your evil. That language expresses the greatness of any thing by repeating the word over again. The same expression is used by St. Paul; (Rom. 7:13.) "That sin might become exceeding sinful;" that is, hereby it might appear how full of evil our natural corruption is. Louth. (*Marg. PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Those who seek their own credit or worldly profit in religious duties, will be accounted unfruitful branches of the true Vine; for all who abide in Christ bring forth fruit to the glory of God and the benefit of mankind. Alas, in this view how empty a vine is the visible church even to this very day! How little of the genuine fruits of righteousness grow up to it!—Human nature is prone to multiply crimes, as God multiplies his favours; and fruitful fields and a good estate, or a flourishing trade, commonly occasions the increase of avarice, pride, sensuality, and impiety. They who attempt to share their hearts between God and Mammon will surely "be found faulty," and condemned as hypocrites: for we should give the Lord the whole; and then love others for his sake, and according to his commandment; and so love him in all, and do all to his glory. (Notes, Ez. 20:3. Deut. 6:5.)—Every idolized dependence will soon be torn from those who fear not God: and what indeed could a king, or even a kingdom, or "all the kingdoms of the world, and the glory of them," do for those, who have him for their enemy?—Hypocrisy, perjury, or treachery in oaths and covenants, convert the most sacred observances into the most atrocious crimes, and corrupt the very fountain of law and justice, rendering it the source of most cruel oppression.—They who rejoice in iniquity, prepare terror and sorrow for themselves: for all created glories are transient, and soon depart, pass into other hands, and leave those ashamed who confided in them. All earthly prosperity is but a collection of bubbles, and is soon destroyed "like the foam upon the water;" and soon will haughty sinners call upon the rocks and mountains to hide them from the face of that angry Judge, whom they now despise, when he speaks to them in the mild language of a merciful Saviour.—In every age, even in the visible church, we meet with those who copy and emulate the crimes and infamy of the most atrocious sinners of ancient times: nor can any judgments on earth so extirpate "the children of iniquity," that none shall be found who do evil and stand to it. But the Lord will punish all such; and their sins will form those chains, in which they shall be bound, and delivered up into the hands of their enemies.—Those who love the privileges of the gospel alone, or the temporal advantages of a religious profession, and do not love to draw in the yoke of evangelical obedience, and will not be induced to it by fatherly corrections, must expect to meet with severe treatment: and such as refuse the liberty of God's service must fall into the drudgery and oppression of Satan and their own lusts.—However men may deceive themselves, it is most certain, that "accordingly as a man sows, so also shall he reap;" and our "sowing unto righteousness" will abound to our own account, and we shall "reap in mercy." Men should then be exhorted to "break up the fallow-ground" of their hearts, that they may be prepared to receive the seed of God's word, and to give it root and nourishment, that it may produce an abundant increase.—It is time, that sinners entered upon this: for none can tell how soon the seedtime may be lost, and the hopes of the harvest gone for ever: and though the Lord alone can "come and rain righteousness upon us;" yet it is our duty to use all means, in spiritual as well as in natural things. As for those, who "plough wickedness and reap iniquity," in their unjust gains or forbidden pleasures; they will soon "eat of the fruit of their own ways, and be filled with their own devices." Nor can their confidence in their own abilities, or in the multitude of the mighty or the renowned who are of their mind, and who patronize and encourage them, protect them against the wrath of God.—Alas! what exquisite miseries do men's sins bring upon them, even in this world! Are nations rendered a scene of tumult and bloodshed? Are strong holds spoiled, and women and children murdered? Are kings cut off, and their subjects enslaved? Sin alone has done all this mischief, and these are but a small specimen of its dreadful triumphs. Let us then with humble grateful faith, look to "the Lamb of God, who taketh away the sin of the world."

NOTES.—CHAP. XI. V. 1. In the infancy of the nation, when Israel was weak and enslaved in Egypt, God manifested his distinguishing love of him, acknowledged him for his son, and called him out of Egypt by the hand of Moses and Aaron. (Notes, Ex. 4:22, 23. Jer. 2:2, 3. Ez. 16:3-14. 20:1-10.) As this was typical of the true Israel's conversion from the bondage of sin and Satan, to the liberty of God's children, through his peculiar love to them; so it also prefigured the bringing up of the only begotten Son of God out of Egypt, whither he had been driven by Herod's cruelty; that he might in the Lord's land perform the whole work of our redemption. (Note, Matt. 2:13-15.) 'Israel is called God's son, and his first-born: (Ez. 4:22, 23.) and therein was an eminent type of the Messiah, in whom all God's promises are fulfilled. This prophecy is applied by St. Matthew, (23:5.) to our Lord's return out of Egypt, . . . and the literal sense of the words does more properly belong to him, than to Israel; which is observable in many other prophecies, which can but improperly be applied to those of whom they were first spoken, and, taking them in their true and genuine sense, are only fulfilled in Christ. (See particularly Ps. 22:16-18.) Louth.

V. 2. The perverse and ungrateful Israelites, after their deliverance out of Egypt, refused to hearken to the prophets of God who called them to cleave to his service: nay, they were rather impelled, by resentment and enmity, to more decided rebellion and apostasy, and to run into various kinds of idolatry. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 5-7. 2:10-13. Num. 25:1-8. Judg. 2:11-13. Jer. 44: Ez. 16:15-22. 20:13-26.) In like manner, the Jews afterwards walked directly contrary to the preaching of Christ and his apostles.

V. 3, 4. The Lord had all along treated Israel, even the revolted ten tribes, with the tenderness of a nursing mother to her young child. He upheld them from falling, carried them above their difficulties, and taught them how they ought to walk in order to please him; 'as a mother doth teach her child to go, leading it by the arms.' (Marg. Ref. f. Notes, Deut. 1:29-31, v. 31. 8:1-3.) He had also healed their breaches and afflictions, though they did not know, or thankfully acknowledge, him as their Healer. (Marg. Ref. g. Note, 6:1-3.) Indeed he still drew them towards him, not by those violent methods, which are sometimes used with brutes; but by such cogent arguments, such tender persuasions, such constraining motives and obligations, as were suited to work on the understanding, will, and affections of rational creatures. (Notes, Cant. 1:4. Jer. 31: 3-5, v. 3. John 6:41-46, vv. 44, 45. 12:27-33, v. 22.) Especially his continued love towards them was suited to draw them to repentance, confidence, and obedience: for he not only plentifully provided for their wants, but carefully removed every impediment to their comfortable enjoyment of his bounty: as the husbandman takes off the yoke and unmuzzles the ox, which has finished his labour: as well as lays the provender before him. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. h-1. Note, Rom. 2:4-6, v. 4.) The continued and persevering kindness of God to Israel, rather than, any particular instances seems intended.

V. 5-7. The Israelites had a strong attachment to Egypt; and probably intended to migrate thither, when pressed by the Assyrians. (Notes, 9:1-3. Jer. 41:16-18.) They would not however be sent back as a nation, to that house of bondage; (though probably many individuals fled thither and died there; but the Assyrian king would acquire the dominion over them; seeing they refused to return to the worship of JEHOVAH: and his authority would be that of the sword, abiding on their cities and villages, desolating them and devouring the inhabitants. This would be the effect of their own counsel, in refusing submission to the Assyrians, and in seeking help from the Egyptians. (Note, 2 Kings 17:4-6.) Though they were called the people of JEHOVAH, they were bent to backside or apostatize from him. This was the constant bias of their minds, and they were obstinate in it; so that, though the prophets earnestly called them to the worship of the "most high" God, none of them would exalt or honour him, but all of them preferred their worthless idols to him. (Marg. Ref. Note, 2.)

Bent to, &c. (7) "My people are in suspense because of their backsliding from me." Either they are in continual anxiety, because of my displeasure; or else they are irresolute, and halt between God and their idols: Louth. (Notes, 2: 7: 13-16, 10:1-3. 1 Kings 18:21. Matt. 19:16-22. Acts 24: 24-27. 26:24-29.)—Perhaps the invitation, which Hezekiah sent to the ten tribes, to come and join in celebrating the pass-over, may be alluded to. (Note, 2 Chr. 30:6-11.)

V. 8-11. Strict justice demanded, that Israel should be rendered as Admah and Zeboim, which were destroyed along with Sodom and Gomorrah, by fire from heaven; so that none escaped; and the place where they had stood was rendered ever after a monument of divine vengeance. (Marg. Ref. x. Notes, Gen. 14:1-3. 19:24-26. Deut. 29:21-25, v. 23.) But mercy objected to this righteous severity; for how could the Lord give up his Israel to such universal and dire destruction? (Marg. Ref. u.) Speaking after the manner of men, his bowels were moved, and his heart pained and even "turned within him" at the thought; so that his repentings (or disposition to relent and mitigate the sentence) were excited along with his holy indignation. (Marg. Ref. y, z. Note, Jer. 31:18-20.) He would not therefore execute the fierceness of his anger in so undistinguishing a manner; nor return by one stroke after another, utterly to destroy Ephraim. (Note, Jer. 30:10, 11.) For, being "God and not man," of infinite perfection in wisdom and mercy, as well as in justice and holiness, he knew how to moderate and regulate his indignation, and to glorify all his perfections in his dealings with them. (*Marg. Ref. c. Notes, Mal. 3:5-6. nant; or to make them perpetual desolations: he would not enter Samaria, or their other cities, in this tremendous manner. Some of the people should survive the catastrophe, and be incorporated among the Jews, or otherwise be brought into the church, who in future times would "walk after the Lord." When his terrible and powerful voice should be heard among them, as the roaring of a lion, Israel in after-times would tremble throughout their dispersions, like the birds of the air, or the dove, the most timid of them: and being thus brought to fear and to submit to him, they would be reinstated in the church, and perhaps in their own land. This is evidently a prediction of the future conversion and restoration of Israel: and not merely of their return from Babylon, or of any subsequent events, which have hitherto occurred. (Notes, 3:4, 5. Is. 11:11-16. 12:27, 12:13, 60:8-14. Jer. 32:39-41. Ez. 16:52-63. 34:23-31. 36:20-28. 37: 20-28, 39:23-29. Joel 3:9-17. Am. 9:13-15. Mic. 7: 11-20. Zeph. 3:18-20. Zech. 14:10, 11.)

V. 12. All the religious professions and services of Israel were lies and hypocrisy, with which they compassed and offended God. But in Judah the princes wrought with God and ruled for him; and, as they regarded his laws, they had great influence with him; and the people were faithful with the saints, or followers of their pious progenitors. (Note, Deut. 33:3.) This was written probably at the time of Hezekiah's reformation, and was an intimation of his deliverance from Sennacherib's invasion. (*Marg. and Marg. Ref. PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The care of the Lord over us, from our earliest infancy should induce us to grateful obedience and holy worship; and it will tend to our condemnation if it have not this effect. But his love to his church of redeemed sinners from the beginning, and especially in giving his Son to become incarnate, and to pass through hardships and sufferings, from his birth in the stable to his death upon the cross, should principally encourage our hopes, and engage our affections to him. Yet alas! many, who are favoured with abundant means of becoming acquainted with this "love of God our Saviour" towards fallen man, turn away from him as if he were an enemy, and prefer their lusts and idols to his unsearchable riches and unspeakable kindness! They indeed alone are truly happy, whom he teaches by his Spirit, upholds by his power, and causes to walk in his ways. They do not always know at first to whom they are indebted for these beginnings of healing and salvation; but they will at length acknowledge him, as the Author and Finisher of that blessed work. He neither finds sinners willing to be saved in his humbling, holy method, nor does he force salvation upon them against their will: (Note, Phil. 2:12, 13.) but he draws them in the most rational, tender, and persuasive manner: rendering his arguments, warnings, motives, and encouragements efficacious, by the influences of his Holy Spirit. In the gospel, he sets his rich provisions before them; and by his grace, he takes away prejudice, pride, hardness, and blindness of heart, the carnal mind, and the love and dominion of sin, and creates an appetite for the blessed feast; and so they feed and live for ever. But they, who have only outward advantages, "not knowing that the goodness of God leadeth them to repentance," proceed with a hard and impenitent heart, to treasure up wrath against the approaching day of wrath. For miseries in various forms await those who refuse to return to God, and their own counsels serve only to bring ruin upon them. (Note, Jer. 2:14-19.)—But alas! how "bent to backsliding" are even God's professing people! Notwithstanding the labours of ministers to call people to the service of the most High! there are very few in comparison, who cordially honour him, and give him the throne in their hearts. So that he might justly give up even a great part of the visible church, as he did Admah and Zeboim; nay, "it is of his mercy, that we are not all consumed." (P. O. Lam. 3:21-41.) But his compassions are free and infinite: he pities the miseries, forgives the sins, moderates the corrections of his offending people, and seems to repent of his severity towards them. How then should we repent of our ingratitude to him!—He will not destroy his church, nor leave his enemies to triumph; for he is the unchangeable God, and not like mutable man: and he can execute vengeance on hypocrites, and correct his offending children, without inflicting his fierce anger by an indiscriminate destruction. But, while this “Holy One,” who designs to dwell in the midst of his church, “roars like a lion” against the workers of iniquity; true Israelites tremble before him, but do not flee from him. Thus, fearing his wrath, confessing their guilt, and trusting in his mercy, they will be restored to the enjoyment of his favour; and will have the tokens of his acceptance; whilst the deceits and lies of hypocrites shall be exposed and punished. It is peculiarly honourable to him, when we obey his commands, serve him in our respective places, and are faithful among his saints, in times of general apostasy: and “them, who thus honour God, he will honour; but they that despise him shall be lightly esteemed.”

NOTES.—CHAP. XII. V. 1, 2. Israel acted as foolishly in seeking help from idols and idolaters, as a man would do, who should seek to satisfy his hunger, by greedily pursuing the noxious east wind, which could only disappoint him. (Marg. Ref. a. Notes, 8:7, 8. Is. 44:19, 20.) But indeed they continually multiplied hypocrites and frauds, which served only to increase their desolations: for after having made a solemn treaty with the Assyrians, they violated it; sending quantities of oil into Egypt, to purchase the assistance of that people, in shaking off the Assyrian yoke. (Marg. Ref. c. Notes, 2 Kings 17:34, Is. 30:1-7, 31:1-3.)—Indeed, the Lord had also a controversy with Judah in this matter: though they adhered to the family of David and the priesthood of Aaron, and did not publicly commit idolatry; yet they were prone to form heathen alliances, instead of wholly trusting in God. For this he purposed to punish them, in a manner suitable to the offence; which he afterwards did by Sennacherib's invasion: though he did not give them up to the Assyrians, as he did the ten tribes. (Marg. and Marg. Ref.)

V. 3-6. Having mentioned Jacob, (including the whole nation descended from that Patriarch,) the prophet showed how contrary the conduct of Israel and Judah, in “trusting to an arm of flesh,” was to that of their believing progenitor. As a token, that he would afterwards struggle hard for the birthright and the blessing of God, he even in the womb took his brother by the heel, as if contending for the privilege of primogeniture. (Notes, Gen. 25:25, 26.) And afterwards, being strong in faith “he had power” as a prince “with God,” when he prevailed with him for deliverance from the armed force of his enraged brother. He was at that time in no condition to make the least resistance, and he had no place to flee unto; yet he sought no other succour than that of God. But he wrestled with him, and “had power with” him whom Moses called “a Man,” as he appeared in human form, but who was “the Angel of God's presence,” the eternal Son of God, yea, God, with whom by his strength he prevailed; and he would not depart until he blessed him, and surnamed him Israel. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, Gen. 32:6-12, 24-32, 48:16, Ex. 23:20-23, Is. 63:9.) His wrestling was only the sign of that spiritual conflict, by which he obtained this honourable victory, over a fervent prayer; (Notes, Luke 22:39-46, v. 44, Col. 2:14-4, v. 4, 4:9-14, v. 12, Heb. 5:7-10, v. 7.) for he wept, (for the sins that had first provoked his brother, and for the sorrows with which he was then oppressed,) and “made supplication to him” even “to the Angel, for deliverance from his brother.—This very person called “a Man” by Moses, (who yet records, that the name of the place was called “Peniel,” or the face of God;) and by Hosea, “God,” and “the Angel,” yea, “the WORD God of Hosts,” found Jacob at Beth-el, and there spake to him, and to his remotest posterity with him. And who could this be, to whom these several titles belonged, but He, who appearing then in “the form of God,” afterwards “took on him the form of a Servant, and was made in the likeness of men?” (Marg. Ref. b. Notes, 2 Cor. 12:7-10, Phil. 2:5-11.)—“He had power with God: yea he had power over the Angel and prevailed.”... The words... are equivalent; which plainly prove, that this Person who assumed a human shape was really God; that is, “the Son of God,” and “the Angel of the Covenant,” by whom all the divine appearances, recorded in the Old Testament, were performed; the affairs of the church being ordered by him from the beginning. Louth. (Note, John 1:18.) The Lord spake twice to Jacob in Beth-el, but the first time especially seems intended: when God appeared from above the ladder to him, as he lay asleep beneath, having fled from the face of Esau; when God gave most gracious promises to him and his posterity; when Jacob called the place “Beth-el,” or “the house of God,” and made a solemn vow to him. Afterwards he appeared to him at Peniel; and at length again he sent him to Beth-el, to pay his vow that he had made in the day of his distress. (Notes, Gen. 25:16-19, 35:1, 9-15.) But his descendants, regardless of all vows, warnings, and obligations, set up even “at Beth-el” their golden calf, and turned that house of God into “a house of vanity,” by their abominable idolatry. Yet it was “the LORD of hosts,” or armies, whom Jacob had met with in these places, who was to be known by that “memorial to all generations” (Notes, Ex. 3:14, 15, Ps. 135:13, Is. 42:8, 9,) and he was as able to deliver them, as he had been to deliver their ancestors; so that they needed not seek help from any other. Let them therefore “turn to their God, and keep mercy and judgment,” or righteousness, “and wait on God continually;” and in that way they should at length experience his power, mercy, and truth, as Jacob had done. (Marg. Ref. o-q. Note, Ps. 25:4, 5.) The Jews did this in a me measure under Hezekiah, and were marvellously delivered from Sennacherib; but the Israelites, who entirely neglected it, were soon destroyed by Shalmaneser. (Note, 11:12.)—Wait, &c. (6) Εγγίξῃς πρὸς τὸν Θεὸν σου διὰ παντός. Sept.

V. 7-9. Ephraim prospered as a merchant. The word is “Canaan.” (Marg. and Ref.) The inhabitants of Canaan or Phenicia were much employed in commerce: hence the word “Canaan” signifies a trader: and the Israelites conducted trade upon Canaanitish principles, covetously and iniquitously; using false balances, cheating by various artifices, and “loving to oppress” the poor. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. r, s. Notes, Deut. 25:13-16, Prov. 11:1, 20:10, 23, Am. 8:4-10.) Thus they grew rich, and they supposed that Providence favoured and approved of them. They, however, ascribed their wealth to their own industry, and thought it a substantial advantage: and, though the prophets might condemn them, they were satisfied that they could not be detected in any iniquitous methods of growing rich, which could properly be called sin, or deserve the wrath of God. What was not absolutely to be justified, might at least be excused. But the Lord, who as their God, had so favoured them, even from their deliverance from Egypt, would drive them from their stately houses, to dwell in mean and moveable tents, as “wanderers among the nations:” even such tents as were used on the days of the solemn feast of tabernacles, which were a memorial of the tents in which their ancestors had dwelt during forty years in the wilderness.—Some indeed interpret this of future mercies in reserve for Israel, notwithstanding their sins; and suppose that the joy of the feast of tabernacles is referred to. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. t-x. Notes, Lev. 23:34-43, Neh. 8:14-18, Con. 14:16-19, John 7:37-39.)

V. 10, 11. The varied means which God had employed by the ministry of his prophets, from age to age, and which he still continued to use, greatly aggravated Israel's crimes. The prophets not only declared their visions by words, but they also illustrated and enforced their admonitions and exhortations, by using parables, illustrations, and similitudes, to explain and apply their messages; but all to no purpose. (Marg. Ref. b-d. Notes, 1:2-9. Is. 5:1-7. 20:2-4. Ez. 4: 5: 20:15-49. 24:16-24.)—It is probable that this was written some time after the inhabitants of Gilead had been carried captive by Tiglath-pilezer. (Notes, 2 Kings 15:29. 1 Chr. 5:25, 26.) 'Do ye think that there was more iniquity in the Gileadites that are already carried away captive, than in you? Surely the rest of Israel is in the same case; they all lie open to the same judgment. . . . They sacrifice to their idols in Gilgal also.' Ep. Hall. In short, their altars are as numerous as the heaps of dung laid on the ploughed field, or of stones gathered out of it. (Marg. Ref. c-h. Notes, 4:15. 8:11, 12. 10:1-3.)

V. 12-14. The people ought to have remembered the low condition of their progenitor Jacob; as well as his plain, honest, industrious character, and his pious confidence in God. When he went into Mesopotamia, Aramnaharaim, or Syria of the two rivers, that is, the country between the rivers Euphrates and Tigris; he was so destitute, yet so diligent and skilful, that he laid the foundation of his future provision, and even of his family, by serving fourteen years as a shepherd for his two wives, Rachel and Leah, and cheerfully enduring hardship all that time; from which low original all their subsequent prosperity arose. (Notes, Gen. 27:—31: Deut. 26:5-11.)—Afterwards, when his descendants were greatly debased and oppressed in Egypt; it was "by a prophet," that God delivered them. Surely then they ought not to despise the prophets; when God by his prophet Moses brought the nation out of Egypt, preserved them from the destructive rage of Pharaoh, and formed them into a wise and understanding nation. But they had most bitterly provoked his anger, by despising his prophets and abusing his goodness; they should therefore perish in their sins, with "their blood upon their own heads," and he would turn upon them the contempt and reproach which they had cast on him and his servants. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. n-p.)

Most bitterly. (14) "With bitterness." Marg. מרר. The word is rendered "waymarks," Jer. 31:4. Some think that the altars before compared to "heaps" (11) are meant as the sinful cause of Ephraim's miseries and disgrace.—Some think that the passage is connected with the preceding verse in this manner. Jacob fled to Gilead from Mesopotamia, where he had been a servant and fed Laban's sheep for his wives. (Note, Gen. 31:23, 24.) And God by his prophet Moses led Israel to Gilead, when he delivered them from Egyptian bondage. Yet the inhabitants of Gilead which had been thus distinguished, were carried away captive; and could Ephraim expect to escape? Mahanaim, where the angel met Jacob, as returned to Canaan, was in the land of Gilead; (Gen. 32:2. 2 Sam. 17:26, 27.) and Peniel, where he "wrestled with God and prevailed," lay in that neighbourhood. (Judg. 8:8, 9. Note, 3-6.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-6. Those who depend on creatures for safety or felicity, whilst "the wrath of God abideth on them," feed on "wind, and follow after the east-wind" and the increase of their delusions, enhances their miseries.—Such as in some things deserve commendation, are in others to be blamed: and God has many a controversy even with his saints, who are visited with rebukes and corrections according to their doings. (P. O. Job 10:1-7.)—We ought then to be followers of the most eminent believers in their most simple dependence on God, their fervency in persevering prayer, and their most unreserved obedience. We should select for our imitation the most distinguished parts of their conduct in which they are mentioned with most honour, and most evidently prevailed with God by their strength of faith and humble expectation.—If we have power with the great "Angel of the covenant," and lay hold of him and his salvation by vigorous faith; whatever our foes or fears may suggest, or however our sins and sorrows may cause us to join tears with our supplications, we shall certainly have power with God: for "he and the Father are One;" he is the "LORD God of hosts, the LORD is his memorial;" he has all hearts in his hands, and he can easily cause our most malignant enemies to be at peace with us.—Let us then "cease from man," and set ourselves to wrestle with him for the blessing, determined never to give over till we prevail. V. 7-14. They who neglect piety, are in general exceedingly defective in their moral conduct: and lawful, honourable, and useful, as commerce must be allowed to be, when properly conducted; yet too many called Christians are mere Canaanites in this respect; the "balances of deceit are in their hands, and they love to oppress." They think every measure allowable by which men grow rich: they prosper in the world, ascribe it to their own prudence, and spend their wealth upon themselves; and if they can keep up their credit with men, or excuse themselves by the maxims and customs of the commercial world, or of others in their own line of trade, their consciences are satisfied. Their deviations are trivial and justifiable; they are not worthy to be called transgressors against God; and such as condemn them are uncharitable enthusiasts, or men who know nothing of the world. But however God may wink at such things in the "days and places of total ignorance; he will assuredly mark and punish them in those who profess his truth and frequent his ordinances; and who have been favoured with the "multiplied visions and similitudes of the prophets," by the parables of Christ, the instructions of his apostles, and the stated ministry of the word. Iniquity in such places is peculiarly hateful; and it is often connected with idolatry, superstition, hypocrisy, or open impiety.—It is better to endure the hardest labour in the lowliest menial situation, under poverty and oppression, than to grow rich by sin: and we shall best form a judgment of our own conduct by comparing it with that of ancient believers, in their approved actions and in similar circumstances.—None will "despise prophesyings," but those who know not what things God has in former ages done for his church, by "the ministry of his prophets;" and he still honours and works by his faithful ministers: who endeavour by every scriptural means to bring men acquainted with his truth and will. All therefore who despise them, despise him that sent them, and provoke him to anger most bitterly; they will perish "with their blood upon their own heads," except they repent of this their wickedness; and the Lord will cause the reproach cast on him, to return and rest upon them.

NOTES.—CHAP. XIII. V. 1, 2. When Ephraim was little in his own estimation, and spake in a humble, diffident manner: when he feared the Lord, "trembled at his word," or lest he should offend him and forfeit his protection; he then grew considerable in Israel.—Joshua, the conqueror of Canaan, descended from Ephraim; and from his time, that tribe gained the ascendancy in the northern parts of the land, and preserved it, till Jeroboam, an Ephraimite, became king of Israel: and then the kingdom of the ten tribes was frequently called Ephraim, and was in many things prosperous. But when Ahab and the succeeding kings set up the worship of Baal, this prosperity declined; and the kingdom in general, and the tribe in particular, became like a criminal condemned to die, or a man languishing under a mortal disease. (Marg. Ref. a-d. Notes, 1 Kings 12: 16:30-33.) Yet nothing could induce the people to renounce idolatry. When Jehu had destroyed Baal, they adhered to the golden calves, and lavished their treasures, and employed their ingenuity in framing other idols: and when these were taken from them, they made others in their stead. (Marg. Ref. e-g. Notes, 2:8, 9. 8:2-6. 11:2. 2 Kings 10:29-31. 17:7-14.) The kings and priests, and other zealous worshippers, required those who brought sacrifices to "kiss the calves." By a peculiar arrangement the word for men is, in the original, next to that for calves. "The sacrificers, men, the calves let them kiss." That man (Adam), whom "God made in his own image and likeness," nay, man favoured with the oracles of God, should degrade himself by kissing, as an act of adoration and love, the lifeless image of a mean brute, is a won

'have made them molten images of their silver, and idols according to their own understanding, all of it the work of the craftsmen: they say of them, Let the men that sacrifice kiss the calves.

3 Therefore they shall be as the morning-cloud, and as the early dew that passeth away, as the chaff that is driven with the whirlwind out of the floor, and as the smoke out of the chimney.

4 Yet I am the Lord thy God from the land of Egypt, and thou shalt know no God but me: for there is no saviour besides me.

5 ¶ I did know thee in the wilderness, in the land of great drought.

6 According to thy pasture, so were they filled; they were filled, and their heart was exalted: therefore have they forgotten me.

7 Therefore I will be unto them as a lion: as a leopard by the way will I observe them.

8 I will meet them as a bear that is bereaved of her whelps, and will rend the caul of their heart, and there will I devour them like a lion: the wild beast shall tear them.

[Practical Observations.]

9 O Israel, thou hast destroyed thyself; but in me is thy help.

10 ¶ I will be thy King; where is any other that may save thee in all thy cities? and thy judges of whom thou saidst, Give me a king and princes?

11 I gave thee a king in mine anger, and took him away in my wrath.

12 The iniquity of Ephraim is bound up; his sin is hid.

13 The sorrows of a travelling woman shall come upon him; he is an unwise son; for he should not stay long in the place of the breaking forth of children.

14 I will ransom them from the power of the grave; I will redeem them from death: O death, I will be thy plagues, O grave, I will be thy destruction: repentance shall be hid from mine eyes.

derful proof of stupidity and depravity.—Thus Cicero describes a statue of Hercules, as having its mouth and chin worn something smoother, because the worshippers used not only to adore it with prayers and thanksgivings, but also to kiss it! (Notes, 1 Sam. 10:1. 1 Kings 19:18. Ps. 2:10-12, v. 12. Rom. 11:1-6, v. 4.)—Some render it, "Let the sacrifices of men kiss the calves." Marg. But it does not appear that human sacrifices were offered in the worship of the calves.

Trembling. (1) רָחַץ. The word occurs in no other place. Some interpret the clause of Jeroboam, a descendant of Ephraim, speaking words suited to excite horror, when he commanded the worship of the golden calves, in order to his own exaltation in Israel, and that of his family.

V. 3, 4. To punish these abominable idolatries, the prosperity of Ephraim, like his goodness, (Note, 64, 5.) would be "as the morning cloud, the early dew, the chaff before the whirlwind, or the smoke out of the chimney;" i. e. violently and speedily made to vanish and disappear. (Marg. Ref. k.) For, after all that the Lord had done for Israel, from their deliverance out of Egypt, they ought to have acknowledged and worshipped no other god, but him alone; for none but he was, or could be, a Saviour, or deliverer of his people, from temporal or eternal ruin. (Marg. Ref. l, m. Notes, Is. 43:8-13, vv. 11-13. 45:20-22.) This verse may be understood as a prophecy of what the Lord will do for Israel in future times. (Notes, 9-14, 14: Rom. 11:25-32.)

V. 5-8. God had acknowledged, regarded, and provided for Israel in the wilderness; when otherwise they must have perished by thirst, because it was a land of great drought. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. n, o. Notes, Deut. 8:2, 3. 32:10. Jer. 2:6.) Yet when they entered Canaan, and were like cattle placed in a good pasture; they gratified their appetites to excess, and their hearts were lifted up in pride. This caused them to forget God and their obligations to him, and so they apostatized to gross idolatry. (Marg. Ref. p-r. Note, Deut. 32:15.) Therefore he would meet them in vengeance, with the fierceness of a leopard, that watches by the way to seize upon the travellers; with the fury of a savage bear, enraged by the loss of her young; with the force of a lion, or as the most terrible beast that inhabited their forests. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. r, s.) They never venture to fire on a young bear, when the mother is near; for if the cub drop, she becomes enraged to a degree little short of madness; and if she gets sight of the enemy, will only quit her revenge with her life! Cooke's Voyage.

V. 9. "One hath destroyed thee, O Israel," that is, "Thou art destroyed."—Thou shouldst have trusted in me for thy help; but, having forsaken me, thou art destroyed.—Israel did not trust in God for help, and Sennacherib triumphed over them: Hezekiah and Judah did trust in God for help, and were delivered from him.—This seems the construction and sense of this verse; and the meaning is nearly the same as in our translation.—Israel need not blame others for his ruin; for he had destroyed himself; but he could not save himself, his help was in and from God alone. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Note, 4, 5.)

V. 10, 11. The Lord had all along undertaken to be Israel's King and Protector: and the judges, whom he raised up, delivered the people, by his authority and immediate help. But where was there any who could save them in all their cities; or of all their rulers, whom they had set up for themselves? (Marg. Ref. x, y. Preface to Judges. Note, Judg. 8:22, 23.) In the time of Samuel they would have a king; and God in anger granted their rebellious request, and gave them Saul, who, both during his life and at his death, was the occasion of great calamities to them. (Marg. Ref. z, a. Notes, 1 Sam. 8:1-5, v. 5. 6-9, 19-22. 12:8-19. 31: 2-6.) And the case had been similar with the kings of Israel, from Jeroboam's revolt, to the ruin of the kingdom of the ten tribes by the death of Hoshea their last king. This last event seems especially alluded to. "I will give thee a king in mine anger, and take him away in my wrath." (Notes, 1 Kings 12:16-22. 2 Kings 17:1-6.)

V. 12, 13. The nation had accumulated wickedness from age to age, which was, as it were, bound up in bags, and laid by in a secure place to be produced against the day of account. (Marg. Ref. b. Notes, Deut. 32:34, 35. Job 14:16-22, v. 17. Rom. 2:4-6.) The affairs of the nation were coming to a crisis; as the hour of travail approaches to the pregnant woman, and her sorrows can in no wise be avoided. But the event would be that of a woman, who dies without being delivered; for the people would make no more efforts to rescue themselves from their difficulties, than a dead child could do. They were so foolish, that they continued in a situation which must certainly end in ruin, without attempting any reformation or repentance: so that the souls of individuals, and the political existence of the nation, would perish together, like the mother and child in the case alluded to. They ought indeed to use endeavours most earnestly, without delay to extricate themselves, before it was too late; but they foolishly neglected or postponed every means! (Marg. and Marg. Ref. c-e.) The old translation reads it in a plainer sense, "Else he would not stand still like a stillborn child." As a child, if it could be supposed to have understanding, would deliver itself out of the straits of the womb, and not tarry there to the manifest danger of itself and the mother: . . . so if Ephraim, or Israel, had acted wisely they would have prevented the approaching destruction by a speedy reformation. Louth. (Notes, 2 Kings 19:3. 26:12-18, vv. 17, 18.)

V. 14. The predictions of the ruin of Israel, as a nation, were connected with intimations of a merciful and powerful interposition of God, to save a remnant of them, as from death and the grave: (Notes, Ez. 37:1-14.) yet this was only a shadow of the ransom of the true Israel, by the death, burial, and resurrection of Christ, from the wrath of God, the death of sin, the power of Satan, and finally from death and the grave itself at the last day. When Christ died, and was buried, and rose again, he, as it were, disquieted the dominions of death, and was the plague of that king of terrors; and at length he will be the destruction of both death and the grave. This was absolutely determined, and would certainly be accomplished, notwithstanding Israel's sins and miseries. (Marg. Ref. f, g. Notes, Job 19:23-27. Ps. 16:8-11. Is. 25:6-8. 26:19. John 5:28, 29. 1 Cor. 15:20-28, 50-58. 2 Cor. 5:1-4. Rev. 20:11-15.) The Lord would not repent of this his purpose and promise: he would even hide repentance from his eyes, as determined not to look at it.—Πού ἡ δίκη σου Σατανα: πού το κερρον σου, δόν; "Where is thy vengeance, O death? Where is thy sting, O grave?" or "O hell?" Sept. The apostle seems to have referred to the words, as thus translated, though he does not quote them. (1 Cor. 15:55.) The word, translated, I will be, is rendered in many versions, Where, both here and in the tenth verse. "Where is thy king?" and only the transposition of a single letter is requisite to authorize this construction.

V. 15, 16. Ephraim, (whose name signifies fruitfulness, Gen. 41:52.) had been very fruitful in respect of the numbers descended from him; yet he would certainly be destroyed by the Assyrians whom the Lord would send against him: as the east wind from the wilderness blights the spreading tree; or as when the springs from beneath dry up, and it withers for lack of moisture. (Marg. Ref. i, l. Notes, 9:11-14.) Thus his fountain would be dried up; and his treasures, and choice vessels of precious metal and rich furniture, would be spoiled. For when the land had previously been ravaged, Samaria would be desolated, by the most inhuman murder even of the women with child, and the sucking infants, among the other inhabitants. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. m, n. See on Note, 10:14,15.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-8. Humility, with the fear of the Lord, and a dependence on his mercy, truth, and power, form the grand requisite for honour and advancement, in the service of Israel's God and King. But they who exalt themselves shall be abased; and such as forsake God, to follow idols and iniquities, give a fatal wound to their own prosperity, and are the murderers of their own souls.—The way of transgression is down hill; and they who begin to descend, often "sin on more and more," till they come into the pit of destruction.—Many would spare no expense in religion, provided it might be regulated "according to their own understanding," to suit their own inclinations, and not according to the word of God. In this case they would adore the work of the craftsman, or the creature of their own imagination, with abundant reverence, devotion, and affection; and with as much stupidity, as the Israelites prostrated themselves before, and kissed, the dead image of a calf! But every fleeting object in nature might preach to such men the vanity of their religion, and the transient continuance of their prosperity. Surely, no one, who has read the Bible, should acknowledge any other God, than him from whom "cometh salvation!" And those who have experienced the power of converting grace, and have walked with God in the liberty of the Gospel, will be effectually preserved from such delusions: for none can be entitled to our worship, who cannot save us from all enemies and evils; and there is no other Saviour, but the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, into whose name Christians are baptized. He takes care of his people, in their lowest estate, and preserves them in every barren desert and land of drought, through which they pass.—But when sinners under terror of conscience, or in difficult circumstances, obtain ease or prosperity, and then run into excess, are lifted up in pride, or lulled into carnal security, and so forget God, they may expect to be punished with marked severity. This ingratitude, so natural to fallen man, excites his heaviest indignation, and turns his kindness into jealousy, which burns most fiercely against the objects of it. He can torture the inmost soul, and as it were, "rend the caul of the heart," of his rebellious and apostate worshippers: nor can words describe, or similitudes illustrate, the anguish which he is able, whenever he sees good, to excite in the heart and conscience: for "who knoweth the power of his wrath?" (Note, Ps. 90:11.)

V. 9-16. We have all destroyed ourselves, and ought never so to speak concerning the purposes of God, or Satan's temptations, or any other subject, as to forget, that our own wilful apostasy and rebellion have exposed us to that deserved wrath, which must have terminated in eternal ruin had not mercy intervened. Nor can we have any help but from the Lord: and, blessed be his name, in him is effectual help; and for us, if we are willing to accept of it. "All things are ready," the mercies of God are infinite, his redemption all-sufficient, his invitations free and unincumbered, his promises exceedingly great and precious; his wisdom, power, and truth are concerned to accomplish them to every believer: he will be the King, the Protector, and Ruler, of all who believe, and he will save them completely and for ever: (Note, Is. 33:20-22, v. 22.) but all other devices, for obtaining safety, and eternal life and salvation, are as vain as Israel's hope in their kings and judges; whom they rebelliously set up, when they rejected the Lord and "would not have him to reign over them."—What we inordinately desire, will perhaps be given us in anger; and whether granted, or withheld, or taken from us, it will be the occasion of wrath and tribulation to our souls.—The sins of unbelievers, with all the sword: "their infants shall be dashed in pieces, and their women with child shall be ripped up.

CHAPTER XIV.

Encouraging calls to repentance, and counsels respecting it, 1-3. Promises of secular blessings to Israel, 4-8. These things worthy of particular attention, 9.

their aggravations, are laid up in the omniscience of God, as if "hid among his treasures;" and who can conceive what a long and heavy account there stands out against each person! Except therefore sinners repent, and believe the gospel, anguish will soon come upon them, as the sorrows of a travelling woman, from which there will be no deliverance. He is then most unwise, who does not make haste to flee from the wrath to come. For, however men may be alarmed and affected; unless they "enter in at the strait gate," and become penitent believers, "new created in Christ Jesus unto good works;" they will as surely perish, as the child does whose mother's womb becomes its grave. But the great Redeemer is able and willing to extricate those who call upon him, out of this and every difficulty. He has paid the ransom of our souls with his blood, and begun his triumphs by his resurrection from the dead: and all, who accept his salvation and bring forth the fruits of it, may be assured, that he will also "ransom them from the power of the grave and redeem them from death;" till he has forced the devouring monster to disgorge his prey, and till he has become the destruction of the grave, and "mortality be swallowed up of life." Then will the millions of the redeemed rejoice, and praise the Lord, for having destroyed the last enemy, and for having restored them, in body and soul, to a glorious immortality. "These are true and faithful sayings;" for God has promised, and "repentance will be hid from his eyes." But without fruitfulness in good works, springing from the Spirit of Christ; all other fruitfulness will be found as empty, as the uncertain riches of the world: the wrath of God will wither its branches; the springs that watered it will become dry, and it shall be spoiled, and come to nothing.—In short, "tribulation and anguish" belong to those, who have rebelled against God, and are fixed immovably on all who impatiently persist in rebellion; and their woes will be far more terrible, than any that are experienced in that cruelty and carnage, which sometimes attend the storming of populous cities. From such miseries and murders, and from sin the fruitful parent of all sorrow, "Good Lord, we beseech thee to deliver us!"

NOTES.—CHAP. XIV. V. 1-3. This chapter is very different from the general tenor of the preceding prophecy; and perhaps it was delivered after the reduction of Samaria, and the ruin of the kingdom of Israel. Some pious persons, or penitents, might be found among the scattered remnant, who would exceedingly need encouragement. Others might be brought to repentance by means of their afflictions; and such exhortations and promises imply predictions of future events to the nation of Israel and to the church of God.—Israel is here exhorted to "return unto the Lord." (Marg. Ref. a. Notes, 6:1-3. 12:3-6. v. 6. Is. 55:6,7. Jer. 3:12-15. 4:1,2. 31:18-20.) JEHOVAH had always been known as their God; and they might expect all blessings from him by virtue of the covenant made with their fathers. (Notes, Lev. 26:40-42.) They ought then to renounce their sins and idols, by true repentance, by faith in his mercy and grace through the promised Redeemer, and by diligently attending on his worship and service. Thus they would be recovered from that ruined state, into which they "had fallen by their iniquities" and idolatries. (Marg. Ref. b. Note, 13:9.) In order to this, they must "take," not legal sacrifices, but "words" expressive of the desires of their hearts, and with them address the Lord. In order to guide their prayers, the prophet showed them what words suited their case. (Marg. Ref. c. Notes, Is. 63:15-19. 64: Matt. 6:9. Luke 11:4.) First they must entreat God "to take away all iniquity," conscious that they could neither expiate, nor subdue their sins; (Notes, Matt. 1:20,21. John 1:29. Tit. 2:14.) and beseech him to "receive them graciously," to take them of his rich mercy into his family, and to confer on them all the blessings of salvation. Or, "take good;" that is, all good things to bestow upon us. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. d, e. Notes, Ps. 68:18. Eph. 4:7-10, v. 8.) Then with their lips they would proclaim his praise, and give him the whole glory of their salvation; rendering him sacrifices of thanksgiving, far more acceptable than the calves of the stall. (Note, Heb. 13:15,16, v. 15.) At the same time, they must renounce their former heathen alliances and idolatries, and every carnal confidence: and profess that they would no more have recourse to the Assyrians, or attempt to multiply horses from Egypt, in order to resist, or pursue, or flee from their foes: that they would no more adore as gods "the work of their own hands," or expect help from their idols: but that they would come to the Lord; believing him to be always ready to relieve the destitute, the friendless, the helpless, and unworthy. (Marg. Ref. g-i. Notes, 4-8, v. 8. 5:13,14.)

V. 4-8. These verses contain most precious promises, to be performed in answer to the preceding prayers, whenever Israel should be excited to present them. (Note, Ez. 36:37.) God would "heal Israel's backsliding," or their manifold apostasies and idolatries; he would recall them from their wanderings, pardon their guilt, subdue their evil propensities, speak peace to their consciences, renew their souls, and establish them in holiness: and all this would flow from his free unmerited mercy and favour. Thus he would show that his righteous "anger was turned from them," and that he was perfectly reconciled. (Marg. Ref. l-n. Notes, Is. 12:1-3. 43:22-25. v. 25. Jer. 3:20-25. v. 22, 23. Mic. 7:18-20. Rom. 3:21-26. 2 Cor. 5:17-21. Eph. 2:4-10. Tit. 3:4-7.) Then he would be to them as the refreshing, fructifying dew, which silently distils on the plants and flowers all over the earth. Israel would become a holy people, growing rapidly, "like a lily," which is noted for its beautiful whiteness. Yet as this was only a fading flower, he would also send abroad his roots like a cedar in Lebanon: his branches would become spreading and beautiful as those of the olive-tree, and the savour of his graces would resemble the smell of the odoriferous plants of Lebanon. Thus he would be a most stately, fruitful, and delightful tree, uniting the greatest variety of excellences: multitudes from all parts of the earth would come to dwell under his shadow, and be converted to the true and living God. Being thus revived from the death of sin and misery, the people would grow up to maturity, as the corn ripens for the harvest; they would bear fruit as the vine, and be as delightful to all around them, as the celebrated wines made from the vineyards on the sides of mount Lebanon, which at this day are most excellent. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. o-q. Notes, Deut. 32:2. Ps. 52:8. 92:12-15. Cant. 1:3. 4:11. Zech. 8:20-23. 2 Cor. 2:14-17. Phil. 4:14-20. v. 18.) Then Ephraim, who had been "joined to idols," would be effectually divorced from them: he would speak as one ashamed of having ever worshipped them, and renounce them with indignation and abhorrence; and the Lord, in infinite mercy, would hear his prayers and confessions; and observing Ephraim, that he was at length become humble and penitent, he was ready to give grace and speak peace. (Marg. Ref. z-a. Notes, 1:3. Job 33:27-30. Jer. 30:18-20. Luke 15:20-24.) He would be to him, "like a green fir-tree," large, beautiful, and shady; in him Ephraim should find all things needful for safety and comfort, and from him would proceed all the pleasant effects of his repentance and faith, and all those holy fruits by which God is glorified, and men are benefited; and which abound to the account of those who produce them. (*Marg. Ref. b, c. Notes, John 1:16. 3:19-21. v. 21. 15:2-8. 1 Cor. 15:3-11. v. 10. Gal. 5:22, 23. Phil. 2:12, 13. The exquisitely beautiful poetry of these verses has excited the warm admiration of all competent judges.—The scent, &c (7) "The memorial" (Marg.) or remembrance. (Note, Cant. 1:4.)

V. 9. The due understanding and improvement of these directions and encouragements, would be the effect and proof of wisdom and prudence: and every wise and prudent man, in the things of God, would certainly thus know and improve them. This the righteous (the true convert and penitent believer) perceives, and comes to walk with God, in them; but obstinate transgressors (or, those who prevaricate) stumble at every part of his word and providence, and pervert the whole, to the increase of their impiety and presumptuous wickedness: and thus they are snared and perish, even by means of those things which in themselves are most excellent and divine. PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Sin is the prolific parent of all the misery in the universe, and we should trace all our sorrows to this source. Blessed be God, in this world we may be recovered, how long soever we be "fallen by our iniquity;" for we are called on to return to the Lord our God, as in "Christ reconciling the world unto himself," and when by faith we obey this call, we are raised up from the brink of despair and hell, reinstated in the full favour of God, and taught to rejoice in the hope of eternal glory.—The words, which flow from "a contrite heart," are far more pleasing to God, than ten thousands of bullocks and rams; as being uniformly connected with a disposition to look unto "the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world." (Notes, Ps. 51:17. Matt. 5:3. John 1:29.) We should not therefore, under any distresses, even when we have "fallen by iniquity," turn away from God, but rather turn to him, as our only Refuge and Salvation. We should first beseech him to teach us what to ask, and how to ask; and when the words of the Holy Spirit in the Scriptures correspond with our longing desires, we should take them with us, and present them before the Lord, that it may be done unto us according to them. We must especially be earnest with him to take away all our iniquity: if that is pardoned we are happy; as nothing but sin can prevent our receiving all good from our gracious God: and surely the whole glory of our salvation, and every possible expression of praise and gratitude, are justly due to our merciful Deliverer; and we can never refuse him the easy, and pleasant, yet honourable sacrifice of the "fruit of our lips, giving thanks unto his name." But the true penitent will also evince his sincerity by renouncing his former sins and carnal confidences: he does not want these sources of satisfaction or "refuges of lies;" since he has learned to trust in the tender love and compassion of that God, "in whom the fatherless findeth mercy," and who "withholds no good thing from them that walk uprightly." They, who thus come before God, will surely find him ready to "heal their backslidings," how great and many soever they have been: "he will love them freely, and turn away all his indignation from them:" he will refresh their souls with the dew of his grace; he will render them holy, amiable, steadfast, fruitful, and useful: and others will repair to them, and grow up into the experience and fruitfulness of the Gospel, through their converse, example, and prayers. Thus the cause of God revives in one place or another from time to time: believers ripen for heaven, or grow more serviceable on earth; God is glorified, the church is increased, and sinners saved.—Still the Lord "waits to be gracious," and he observes with pleasure the broken-hearted penitent; he is ready to refresh every weary soul; and to make those joyful and fruitful, who were most barren and disconsolate; for "from him is all our fruit found." May he give us that wisdom and prudence, which lead to the knowledge, experience, and practice of these things; may we learn to walk in the right ways of God, as his righteous servants; and may none of us, being disobedient and unbelieving, stumble at the word of his grace, or at any of its truths and requirements.

THE BOOK OF JOEL.

It is uncertain at what time Joel prophesied: some think he predicted those calamities which Amos lamented; (Am. 7:1-9, others that he lived afterwards. He prophesied to Judah exclusively: whether before or after the desolations of Israel. He foretold, or described, a terrible judgment on the land, by locusts and drought: which may also be considered as typical of the calamities, that were about to be brought on the nation by the Chaldean armies, and other invaders. These predictions were attended with earnest exhortations to solemn fasting, repentance, and prayer, and with promises of returning peace and prosperity. The conclusion contains prophecies of the glorious times, which were coming under the gospel dispensation, and of the righteous judgments to be executed on all the enemies of God and his church. In this he coincides with the other prophets: who (with perhaps the single exception of Jonah) all more clearly predict, or more obscurely intimate, these great events. But the most remarkable prophecy in Joel, is that which the apostle Peter quoted on the day of Pentecost, and which is more than once referred to in the New Testament. (Comp. 2:28-32. Acts 2:14-21. Rom. 10:12-17.) The effects of the Gospel, as the manifestation of the Spirit, both among Jews and Gentiles; and the consequences of opposing it, to the Jewish nation in particular, are here foretold in the fullest and plainest manner: and the event to this day fully attests Joel's divine inspiration.—The style of this prophet is allowed by the most competent judges, to be exceedingly beautiful: and few remains of ancient poetry (none, except those reserved in the sacred Scriptures,) contain such an assemblage of elegance, pathos, and sublimity, as are found in his writings. Whatever obscurity appears to us is wholly in the subject; for the language is uncommonly perspicuous: and consequently the critics have proposed much fewer alterations, than in the more concise, sententious, and obscure prophecies of Hosea; nor has our translation of it been exposed to similar objections.

B. C. 720.

CHAPTER I.

The prophet describes the entire destruction of the fruits of the earth, by drought and noxious insects, 1-7. He calls on the people to lament, over their calamities, with prayer and fasting, 8-17. He cries to God for them, and represents the very beasts as joining in his supplications, 18-21.

THE word of the LORD that came to Joel the son of Pethuel.

2 Hear this, ye old men, and give ear, all ye inhabitants of the land. Hath this been in your days, or even in the days of your fathers?

3 Tell ye your children of it, and let your children tell their children, and their children another generation.

4 That which the palmer-worm hath left hath the locust eaten; and that which the locust hath left hath the canker-worm eaten; and that which the canker-worm hath left hath the caterpillar eaten.

5 Awake, ye drunkards, and weep; and howl, all ye drinkers of wine, because of the new wine; for it is cut off from your mouth.

6 For a nation is come up upon my land, strong, and without number, whose teeth are the teeth of a lion, and he hath the cheek-teeth of a great lion.

7 He hath laid my vine waste, and barked my fig-tree: he hath made it clean bare, and cast it away; the branches thereof are made white.

[Practical Observations.]

8 Lament like a virgin girded with sackcloth for the husband of her youth.

9 The meat-offering and the drink-offering is cut off from the house of the LORD; the priests, the LORD's ministers, mourn.

10 The field is wasted, the land mourneth; for the corn is wasted: the new wine is dried up, the oil languisheth.

11 Be ye ashamed, O ye husbandmen; howl, O ye vine-dressers, for the wheat and for the barley; because the harvest of the field is perished.

12 The vine is dried up, and the fig-tree languisheth; the pomegranate-tree, the palm-tree also, and the apple-tree, even all the trees of the field, are withered: because joy is withered away from the sons of men.

NOTES.—Chap. I. V. 2, 3. The prophet opened his subject, by calling on the aged men, and all the inhabitants of the land, to attend with deep and serious reflection to the events which were about to take place. None of them could remember calamities so dire and complicated, nor had any such befallen Judah since it was a nation. (Notes, 4. Dan. 9:12.) They ought therefore to speak of them to their children, that the account might be transmitted by one generation to another, through succeeding ages, to warn their posterity not to provoke God to punish them with similar judgments. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Ex. 10:1, 2. Ps. 78:3-8.)

V. 4. The exact difference between these several species of insects, cannot easily be explained. Probably, the several species mentioned came in succession, at different seasons of the year. Sometimes one, and sometimes another of them, had been used to cause a partial devastation of the fruits of the earth; but on this occasion they followed each other, till they had utterly destroyed the whole. Indeed, some think that this was the case for several years together, and that it was an emblem of the repeated invasions and devastations of the Chaldeans. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, 5-12. 2:1-11, 18-20, 25. Ez. 10:6, 13-17. Am. 7:1-3.) We have no history of the completion of this prophecy; if indeed the passage be not historical rather than prophetic.—A future event which might be averted by repentance is spoken of, as having already taken place, to enliven the description, by setting the images before the eye of the reader. Bp. Newcombe.

V. 5-7. The prophet considering the effects of this heavy visitation, called on the drunkards to awake and bewail their miseries. Their sins, and the danger to which their souls were exposed, had failed to rouse them from insensibility; but this judgment was suited to affect them; as it would deprive them of their idolized indulgence, and force them to be sober in the most distressing circumstances. 'It carries along with it evident tokens of being sent as a punishment for their disorders,' Louth. (Marg. Ref. 1-n. Notes, Is. 24:1-12, v. 7-11. Hos. 9:1-3. Am. 6:3-8. Luke 16:19-26. 21:34-36.)—For though these insects were small and easily crushed; yet their unnumbered multitudes would render them as formidable as a mighty and populous nation invading the land. Their teeth, suited to destroy the vegetables and bark of trees, would be more formidable than those of a lion; and they would leave nothing growing, but leafless and naked stems. (Notes, 2:7-9, 10, 11, v. 11. 25. Prov. 30:11-14, v. 14. 24-28, v. 27. Rev. 9:3, 10.)

V. 8. Judah was here called upon to lament, on account of her miseries, as a betrothed virgin, who should be deprived of the intended and beloved husband of her youth, before the completion of her marriage; that is, with exceedingly great and unfeigned sorrow. This intimated how very heavy their calamities would be. (Marg. Ref. Note, Is. 32:9-14.)

V. 9. Some of the priests would piously lament the suspension of sacred ordinances, on so melancholy an occasion; the rest would naturally mourn over the diminution of their revenues, and means of self-indulgence. (Notes, 13-16. 2:12-17. Ism. 1:4-7, v. 4. Hos. 9:4-6.)

V. 10. Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, 17-20. Is. 24:1-12, v. 3, 4, 7. Hos. 4:1-3, v. 3.

V. 11. The husbandmen would be ashamed of their unsuccessful labours, in cultivating their fields and vineyards; as neither their skill, nor industry, on which they would be apt to depend, could prevent the most terrible famine: all their 13 "Gird yourselves, and lament, ye priests: howl, ye ministers of the altar: come, lie all night in sackcloth, ye ministers of my God: for the meat-offering, and the drink-offering, is withholden from the house of your God.

V. 13. "He shows, that the only means to avoid God's wrath, and to have all things restored, is true repentance."—The priests, especially those who kept the watches at the temple, are here called on to set the people an example of humiliation before God.—Instead of going to rest, or spending the watches in Psalmody; let them lie all night on the ground covered with sackcloth, and employ themselves in confessing their sins and deprecating the wrath of God. (Note, 2 Sam. 12:16.)—To suppose that they were only to sleep in sackcloth, instead of their ordinary covering, quite enervates the exhortation. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 9:212-14. Ps. 100:134:135:1,2.)

V. 14, 15. The priests had great influence in appointing fasts, though the authority of the kings was also employed. (Notes, 2 Chr. 20:3,4. Ezra 8:21-23. Neh. 9:1. Jer. 36:8-10. Jon. 3:5-9. Zech. 7:2-7.) They were not only called upon to lament before God themselves, with every expression of humiliation and repentance; but to appoint and keep holy, a solemn season, of public fasting and prayer; the elders (or the princes and rulers of the people) must be called on to assemble at the house of the Lord, to join in humbly deprecating his displeasure, and seeking forgiveness of their sins; and all the people were required to lament, that they ever saw such a day, which seemed to be a time of judgment and vengeance; and "of destruction" rather than of correction, "from the Almighty." (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, 2:1-3,15-17. Ez. 7:5,7,10,11. Am. 5:18-20. Zeph. 1:14-16. Luke 19:41-44. Rev. 6:15-17.)

V. 16. Neither priests nor people could now frequent the temple with peace-offerings, or sacrifices of praise, or joyfully celebrate their festivals, as formerly they used to do: they could only come before God to mourn and complain, because of their sins and miseries. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 9:13,12:12-14, v. 14. P. O. Deut. 12.)

V. 17, 18. A terrible drought, as well as locusts, and other devouring insects, was predicted or described: and dry hot weather often in those countries precedes the coming of the locusts.—The failure of the crops rendered granaries and barns useless; and so they were neglected, and left to go to ruins: yea the unoffending cattle groaned under the calamities inflicted for the sins of men. (Notes, 19:20. 1 Kings 18:5,6. Jer. 12:1-4, v. 4. 14:2-6. Hos. 4:1-3, v. 3. Rom. 8:18-23.)

V. 19, 20. All the produce of the land was consumed as if it had been by fire: and the rivers of water were all dried up: so that even the beasts seemed by their doleful outcries to join the prophet, in beseeching God to deliver them from their distresses: and thus they shamed those Jews, who refused to call upon him. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, Ps. 104:20-23, v. 21. 147:9.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-7. The word of God, among its other manifold uses, is intended to explain the dispensations of Providence; that the Author, the cause, the support, and the remedy of every affliction may be made known. What the Lord has taught us in this school, or in any other, we should carefully impart to our children; that they may receive the benefit, without the anguish, of our salutary chastisements, and may transmit the same instructive warnings to their children also.—The 19 O Lord, "to I see will I cry: for the fire hath devoured the pastures of the wilderness, and the flame hath burned all the trees of the field.

20 The beasts of the field cry also unto thee: for the rivers of waters are dried up, and the fire hath devoured the pastures of the wilderness.

CHAPTER II.

A figurative description of the locusts, as a mighty army, sent forth to ravage the land.—1-17. Repetition of calls to public fasting, prayer, repentance, &c.—18-19. Promises of manifold blessings, 18-27. Predictions of the pouring out of the Spirit, under the gospel; and of subsequent events, 28-32.

most insignificant insects at God's command become more tremendous to proud man, than even herds of savage beasts, or armies of hostile invaders: (Note, Ez. 8:16,17.) how then should we fear the power of his wrath, who can so easily arm the whole creation against us, or lift up his own heavy hand to crush us at once!—The more inordinately men indulge their appetites, the more grievously must pinching want press upon them: whereas habitual self-denial and temperance prevent the most distressing effects even of impoverishing losses. It is well, if any temporal sufferings serve to awaken the drunkard, the epicure, and the sensualists, to lament for their sins, and to flee from the wrath to come. But what must be the feelings of those who continue insensible, till they fall into that place, where not a drop of water can be procured to alleviate their misery; and where their howling and weeping will be without extenuation, intermission, or hope for evermore.—The bitter lamentations, the confusion and anguish, the hardships and miseries, which are the effects of extreme famine, should teach us to be thankful for a land of plenty, to be contented with a moderate portion, and to be temperate, liberal, and pious in our use of it.

V. 8-20. We are so dependent upon God in every thing, that no human wisdom or power can provide plenty, when he pleases he sends scarcity: without "his rain," the seed-corn must perish, the trees of the field must wither, and all our temporal joys must sicken and die: and such judgments are emblems of the great day of retribution, which will soon come "as a destruction from the Almighty." Even the brutes groan under the effects of man's sin; and they seem in their way, to cry and complain to the Lord, that without their fault they are reduced to perish by hunger and thirst, through the wickedness of their oppressor and tyrant, man. How stupid then are sinners, who are insensible under such judgments, or only lament with a rebellious and unhumiliated sorrow!—We should never rest in any expressions of mere grief; but should also humble ourselves before God on account of those sins which have provoked his chastening rod. All our other sorrows should lead us to that "godly sorrow, which worketh repentance unto salvation, not to be repented of." We ought to grieve under outward afflictions, chiefly when they deprive us of the comfort and benefit of divine ordinances, or when "joy and gladness are cut off from the house of the Lord." No self-denial, humiliation, or continued self-abasement before God, should appear too great, as there is yet hope of forgiveness of our sins, and deliverance from everlasting misery. "The ministers of God" especially should set the example, and use their influence, to promote a spirit of repentance and piety amongst the people. Public solemn seasons of fasting and humiliation, attended with the assembling together of the honourable of the land, as well as of the multitude to confess their sins, to bow down before God, and to pour out their prayers unto him, are proper means of averting national calamities. And though many will observe them formally, or wholly neglect them; yet God will hear the united prayers of the remnant of his servants, and often for their sakes rescue a guilty nation from impending destruction.—They, who who would excite other men to such duties, must take the lead in them, as being greatly affected, and desirous of affecting all around them. Thus individuals will find the comfort of acceptance with God, whatever may become of nations which proceed to greater ungodliness; and they will enjoy their gracious recompense, when the wicked, and all their possessions, shall be burnt up with the righteous indignation of "our God, who is a consuming fire." (Heb. 12:29.)

NOTES.—CHAP. II. V. 1-3. The priests were directed

3 A fire devoureth before them; and behind them a flame burneth: the land is as the garden of Eden before them, and behind them a desolate wilderness; yea, and nothing shall escape them.

4 The appearance of them is as the appearance of horses; and as horsemen, so shall they run.

5 Like the noise of chariots on the tops of mountains shall they leap, like the noise of a flame of fire that devoureth the stubble, as a strong people set in battle-array.

6 Before their face the people shall be much pained: all faces shall gather blackness.

7 They shall run like mighty men; they shall climb the wall like men of war; and they shall march every one on his ways, and they shall not break their ranks:

8 Neither shall one thrust another; they shall walk every one in his path: and when they fall upon the sword, they shall not be wounded.

to blow the trumpets at the temple; and to alarm the people, who assembled there, with the prospect of the near approach of the judgments before predicted; (Notes, 1:4-12,16-20.) that the report might thence be diffused throughout the whole land, and all the inhabitants might tremble at God's word, and be induced to repent and deprecate his displeasure. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. a-d. Notes, 15-17. Num. 10:2-10. Hos. 8:1.) For the Lord was about to execute judgment on a guilty nation, as on a solemn day of vengeance. (Marg. Ref. e. See on Note, 1:14,15.)—The visitation by the locusts seems to have been primarily intended: but the calamities preceding, attending, and following the destruction of the city by the Chaldeans, might also be referred to. This approaching "day of the Lord" would be "a day of darkness, a day of clouds, and of thick darkness, as the morning spread upon the mountains;" its light would resemble the faint glimmering of the dawn, which appears on the eastern mountains, and just deducts from the midnight darkness, that obscures the earth in gloomy and cloudy weather. (שחר. Note, Is. 8:20.) This may refer to the immense multitudes of the locusts, which have often been known to obscure the sun at noonday, and to render the regions through which they pass, for the time, more dark and dismal than during the night: or it may describe the state of the people's minds, which were filled with a horror little short of despair. This darkness and horror would result from the invasion of a mighty nation, attended with such effects, as the Jews had never before witnessed, and such as would not occur again for many ages. The progress of this army would resemble that of a conflagration: the lands, on which they had not entered, appeared verdant and fruitful, even as the garden of Eden; but they would make such entire destruction wherever they went, as to leave every place behind them like a barren wilderness. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. f, h, k-m. Notes, 10, 11,18-20,25. 1:5-7. Gen. 13:10-12. 19:24,25. Hos. 9:11-14. 11:8-11.)

Ever the like. (2) 'The locusts which plagued Egypt are described after the same manner. (Ex. 10:14.)—In both places we are to take it as a proverbial expression, to set forth the extraordinary greatness of the judgment, and not to understand it too strictly, according to the grammatical sense of the words.' Louth. (Marg. Ref. i. Note, Ex. 10:6.)

V. 4, 5. It has been often observed, that locusts greatly resemble horses in the shape of their heads: the impetuosity also of the progress made by these ravagers would be like that of horsemen; their noise, heard at the distance of several miles, would be as tremendous as that of chariots of war rattling over the mountains, or like that of a vehement fire consuming combustibles with great crackling and fury; and their progress at the same time so regular, that they would resemble a well-disciplined army upon the march, or attacking the enemy.—Many have with admiration observed this to be the case with the immense flights of locusts, which often ravage those eastern regions. (Marg. Ref. o, p. Notes, 7-9. Rev. 9:7-10, v. 9.)

V. 6. Not paleness, which may be occasioned by sickness, or fainting, or slighter terror; but "blackness," like that of the countenances of those who are expiring in convulsions, or whose blood is suspended from circulation by some inward or outward violence. The extremity of horror and anguish is intended. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Note, Jer. 8:21,22, v. 21.)

V. 7-9. 'The particles of similitude here, and in the fourth and fifth verses, show that real locusts are described,

9 They shall run to and fro in the city; they shall run upon the wall, they shall climb up upon the houses; they shall enter in at the windows like a thief.

10 The earth shall quake before them; the heavens shall tremble: the sun and the moon shall be dark, and the stars shall withdraw their shining:

11 And the Lord shall utter his voice before his army, for his camp is very great: for he is strong that executeth his word: for the day of the Lord is great and very terrible; and who can abide it?

[Practical Observations.]

12 ¶ Therefore also now, saith the Lord, 'Turn ye even to me with all your heart, and with fasting, and with weeping, and with mourning:

13 And bend your heart, and not your garments, and turn unto the Lord your God: for he is gracious and merciful, slow to anger, and of great kindness, and repenteth him of the evil.

14 "Who knoweth if he will return and repent, and leave a blessing behind him; even a meat-offering and a drink-offering unto the LORD your God?

15 ¶ Blow the trumpet in Zion, sanctify a fast, call a solemn assembly:

16 Gather the people, sanctify the congregation, assemble the elders, gather the children, and those that suck the breasts: let the bridegroom go forth of his chamber, and the bride out of her closet.

17 Let the priests, the ministers of the LORD, weep between the porch and the altar, and let them say, Spare thy people, O LORD, and give not thy heritage to reproach, that the heathen should rule over them: wherefore should they say among the people, Where is their God?

18 ¶ Then will the LORD be jealous for his land, and pity his people.

19 Yea, the LORD will answer and say unto his people, Behold, I will send you corn, and wine, and oil, and ye shall be satisfied therewith: and I will no more make you a reproach among the heathen:

20 But I will remove far off from you the northern army, and will drive him into a land barren and desolate, with his face toward the east sea, and his hinder part toward the utmost sea; and this stink shall come up, and his ill savour shall come up, because he hath done great things.

21 ¶ Fear not, O land; be glad and rejoice: for the LORD will do great things.

22 Be not afraid, ye beasts of the field: for the pastures of the wilderness do spring, for the tree beareth her fruit, the fig-tree and the vine do yield their strength.

23 Be glad then, ye children of Zion, and rejoice in the LORD your God: for he hath given you the former rain moderately, and he will cause to come down for you the rain, the former rain, and the latter rain in the full month.

24 And the floors shall be full of wheat, and the fats shall overflow with wine and oil.

25 And I will restore to you the years that the locust hath eaten, the canker-worm, and the caterpillar, and the palmer-worm, my great army which I sent among you.

26 And ye shall eat in plenty, and be satisfied, and praise the name of the LORD your God, might not return to them as a nation, and avert the public calamities which were otherwise coming upon them? At least they might hope, that he would mitigate the severity of the judgment, and leave part of the fruits of the earth, as "a blessing" for them, after the locusts had finished their depredations; out of which they might present before him a meat-offering, and a drink-offering; that he might not lose the honour, nor they the comfort and benefit, of their solemn worship. This also instructed them what part of the calamity ought most to afflict them. (Marg. Ref. n-p. Notes, 1:13-16. Jon. 3:5-9, v. 9.)

V. 15-17. The priests and rulers were again, and more particularly and earnestly, excited to announce the observance of a solemn fast, to be kept as a holy day to the LORD. (Note, 1:14, 15.) Let them convene the congregation of Israel into the courts of the temple, and prepare the people by external purifications and proper instructions, for the profitable solemnizing of the day. (Marg. Ref. s. Note, Ex. 19:10-15.) Not only the elders and the grown people, but even the children and the sucking infants, must be present, as a part of the congregation, that the consideration of the calamities, in which they would be involved, might the more affect the minds of the parents. Newly married persons, also, forgetful of the concerns and satisfactions peculiar to their situation, must be wholly engaged in the public humiliation and lamentation of their people. (Marg. Ref. t, u. Notes, Deut. 29:10-12. 2 Chr. 20:13. Zech. 12:9-14, v. 12-14. 1 Cor. 7:1-5, v. 5.) "The priests," as "the ministers of God," were to take the lead; and standing between the porch of the temple and the altar of burnt-offering, where they might most conveniently be seen and heard, they were required to weep for the sins and troubles of the nation, and to beseech the Lord "to spare his people and heritage," though deserving of punishment; and not to let them be utterly ruined by famine, and thus left enfeebled and destitute, to be reproached, insulted, and enslaved by idolaters: who would blasphemously inquire, what was become of Israel's God and Protector. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. x-d. Notes, Ps. 44:9-16. 79:8-13.)—This has been considered as an intimation, that other calamities, besides that of the locusts, were intended in these predictions.

V. 18-20. Whenever the elders, priests, and people of Israel should thus "turn unto the LORD," they would find him "jealous for" the honour of that land where his temple stood and his name was worshipped, and ready to rescue it from famine, and the oppressions of idolaters: and he would be compassionate to the miseries of his people, though brought upon them by their sins. They would then receive encouraging answers to their prayers, assuring them of an abundant supply of all their wants, and of every thing conducive to the enjoyment of life; nor would he again suffer the heathen to insult over them. He would also drive away the vast army of locusts, which from the north had invaded the land, into the deserts betwixt the southern extremity of the Dead Sea and the Mediterranean Sea, where they should die; and no effect of their ravages should remain, except the stench occasioned by the putrefying of so immense a quantity of insects; though they had done and threatened such immense mischief. (Marg. and Marg. Ref.) Jerome relates, . . . that in his own time, the heaps of locusts which were driven by the winds into the sea, afterwards putrefied upon the shore, and so corrupted the air as to bring a pestilence. Louth.—The locusts in Languedoc were about an inch in length, of a gray colour. The earth in some places was covered four inches thick with them, in the morning before the heat of the sun was considerable: but as soon as it began to grow hot, they took wing and fell upon the corn, eating up both leaf and ear: and that with such expedition, by reason of their number, that in three hours they would devour a whole field. After which they again took wing, and their swarms were so thick, that they covered the sun like a cloud, and were whole hours in passing. . . . After having eaten up the corn they fell upon the vines, the pulse, the willows, and even the hemp, notwithstanding its great bitterness. After this these insects died, and stank very much. Philosophical Trans.

V. 21-24. The land had been represented, by a bold figure, as mourning over its desolations, and the beasts as groaning, and even crying to the LORD, because of their sufferings: (Notes, 1:10, 17-20.) and here the promises of returning plenty and prosperity are introduced by a poetical address to the land, and to the cattle. (Marg. Ref. q, r, t.) As the locusts had done great things in destroying the fruits of the earth, "the LORD would do great things" in rendering the fields and pastures abundantly fruitful. (Marg. Ref. s. Notes, Num. 23:23. Ps. 126:1-3. 2 Thes. 1:5-10, v. 10.) The cattle would speedily be supplied with plenty: for "the pastures of the wilderness," or of those parts of the country which were least populous and cultivated, began already to spring; and the fruit-trees to put forth their several valuable productions: so that instead of sorrow and fear, the land and its inhabitants, and the beasts of the field, would soon exult for joy and gladness.—As the cattle had their share in the dearth; so now they shall receive comfort in the return of plenty. Louth. (Marg. Ref. u-y. Ps. 65:9-13. Is. 30:23-25.) "The children of Zion," however, ought not only to rejoice in the temporal abundance bestowed on them, but "in the LORD their God," considering him as the Giver of all their comforts, and using them to his glory. (Marg. Ref. a. Notes, Hab. 3:17-19. Zeph. 3:14-17. Luke 1:46-55, v. 46, 47.) "The season for" the former rain, was about the middle of our October. . . . The Hebrew word, rendered "moderately," signifies "according to righteousness," and is equivalent with "according to judgment," (Jer. 10:24.) or "in measure." (30:11.) . . . Our margin reads it "a Teacher of righteousness," which sense is followed by the Chaldaes paraphrast, and the vulgar Latin, and may be a proper introduction to the promise which follows. (28.) Louth. The

Every reader of taste must be struck with the poetical and sublime manner in which the allegory is conducted. There is not a more splendid piece of poetry extant." Bp. Newcombe. (Marg. Ref. f-h.)

V. 26, 27. The primary meaning of this prophecy is clear: but several expressions in these verses so accord to those used in respect of the deliverance of the Jews from captivity, their subsequent prosperity and security, and the prevalence of true religion among them, that it is not unreasonable to suppose, that the former part of the prophecy contained, under the primary meaning, a prediction of the desolations made by the Chaldeans; and the latter part, under the primary meaning, a prediction of the blessings in reserve for the nation, after their return from captivity, till the coming of Christ, and also after their conversion to him. (Notes, Ez. 34:23-31. 36:20-38. 39:21-29. Hos. 3:4,5.)—"My people shall not be disappointed of the trust they place in me; nor be reproached by the heathen, as if I had forsaken them." Louth. (Marg. Ref. i, k, m. Note, Is. 45:15-17. v. 17.)—And none else. (27) Marg. Ref. l. Notes, Is. 44:6-8. 45:20-22.

V. 28-32. The apostle Peter quoted almost the whole of this passage, and it is recorded by the historian nearly as it stands in the Septuagint, (Note, Acts 2:14-21. v. 16-21.) in addressing the Jews on the day of Pentecost, as a prediction of those events which then began to take place. St. Paul also quotes part of it, in speaking of the conversion of the Gentiles. (Note, Rom. 10:12-17.) After the events before more expressly foretold, or "in the latter days," the times of the Messiah, the LORD promised to pour out his Spirit upon all flesh.—"Though the Jews only are enumerated, there is a latent reference to the effusion of the Spirit on the Gentiles also, in the times of the gospel dispensation." Bp. Newcombe. This promise began to be accomplished on the day of Pentecost, when the Holy Spirit was poured out on the apostles; and on the assembled multitude, of whom great numbers were converted: and it was continued in the converting grace and supernatural gifts, conferred on the Jews and Gentiles through many nations. Then "the sons and daughters" of the Jews became prophets, and exercised many miraculous powers; both old and young men were favoured with prophetic dreams and visions; and even servants and handmaids, though in a state of slavery, were made partakers of the sanctifying grace and the extraordinary gifts of the Holy Spirit. But it is predicted, that about that time God would begin to show signs of his awful displeasure against the Jewish nation: and that extraordinary appearances, in the heavens and upon the earth, would be presages of the approaching destruction of Jerusalem and the dissolution of the ecclesiastical and political estate of the Jews; which would be attended with immense bloodshed, terrible conflagrations, and "pillars of smoke," such as ascend from the flames of burning cities. Then would "the sun and moon be darkened," or be "turned into blood;" this foretold, either the tremendous appearances in the heavens which preceded these calamities; or the total unwhinging of the Jewish constitution, the subversion of all rule and authority in church and state, and those terrible intestine convulsions and massacres, which made way for the final destruction of the city and temple, by the just judgment of God, who on that great and terrible day of vengeance poured his wrath on the devoted Jews by the hands of the Romans. (Marg. Ref. u, x. See on Note, 10:11. Notes, Is. 24:23. Mal. 3:1-4. 4:1. Matt. 24:29-31. Mark 13:24-31. Luke 21:20-28.) But in the midst of all these calamities, there would be deliverance and salvation for all, who should "call upon the name of the LORD."—"This St. Paul (Rom. 10:13) explains of those, who give themselves up unto Christ, and profess themselves his disciples." Louth.—"Neither is there any way, or means, to escape the terribleness of this judgment, but by believing in the Lord Christ, and calling upon his name. For in the church of God only shall salvation be had, and deliverance "from the wrath to come," which salvation shall lie open, both to the believers of the Gentiles, and to the remnant of those Jews, whom the LORD shall call." Bp. Hall.—It is evident, that, what is here spoken of "calling on the name of JEHOVAH," is repeatedly in the New Testament applied to "calling on the name of Christ." (Marg. Ref. y. Notes, Acts 2:14-21. v. 21. Rom. 10:12-17. vv. 12-14. 1 Cor. 1:2, v. 2.) And it is remarkable, that those who embraced Christianity, and "honoured the Son even as they honoured the Father," separated from the unbelieving Jews, before the siege of Jerusalem, and were preserved from the miseries here predicted: while the unbelieving Jews, though they professed to "call on the name of the LORD," were overwhelmed by them: "for he that honoureth not the Son, honoureth not the Father." He "that hath not the Son, hath not the Father;" and "the Supreme Being, which is worshipped by those who refuse adoration to EMMANUEL, is not the true God, "the God of Abraham," "the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ," but an idol, the creature of vain man's reasonings and imaginations.

I will pour out, &c. (28) (Marg. Ref. n-q.) In this prophecy of the "pouring out of the Spirit," express and particular mention is made of miraculous and prophetic gifts, as largely bestowed on young and old, bond and free, nay Jew and Gentile; which fixes the fulfilment of it to the day of Pentecost, and the subsequent times. (Notes, Acts 2:14-21. v. 16,17. 33-36. 62-66. v. 6,8. 8:5-8,14-17. 10:44-48. vv. 45-47. 21:7-14. v. 9.) But in other instances, in which the "pouring out of the Spirit" is predicted; and which are either general, or may be interpreted of later ages, and even events yet future; miraculous powers are not explicitly mentioned. (Notes, Prov. 1:21-23. Is. 32:15. 44:3-5. 59:20, 21. Ez. 36:25-27. 39:23-29. v. 29. Zech. 12:9-14. v. 9.) May not this intimate, that miraculous powers will not be given, in the future grand triumphs of Christianity, any more than in the partial revivals and successes in these later ages. The complete revelation now vouchsafed, connected with the astonishing fulfilment of ancient prophecies; accompanied by the pouring out of the "Spirit of grace and supplications," of regeneration and sanctification, will be abundantly sufficient.

In mount Zion, &c. (32) Marg. Ref. z. Notes, 3:9-17. v. 17. 18-21. Is. 2:2-5. 12:4-6. 28:16. Ez. 47:1-10. Zech. 14:6-9. v. 8,9. Luke 24:44-49. v. 47.—In the remnant, &c. This seems more immediately to point out the Jews, who embraced Christianity in the primitive times: yet it may also include all, whether Jews or Gentiles, to the end of time, who shall be called to the fellowship of our Lord Jesus Christ. (Marg. Ref. a. Notes, Rom. 9:24-29. 11:1-6.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-11. If the alarm of approaching temporal judgements should, in a distinct and audible manner, be given to offending nations and churches, that men may tremble, and seek to avert the impending storm; surely the ministers of the gospel should be very faithful and earnest, in warning sinners to seek deliverance from the wrath to come!—The day of judgment, with its decisive consequences, will soon arrive: but what "a day of darkness and gloominess" will that be, to the impenitent workers of wickedness! And how far will its terror exceed all that ever was experienced or imagined on earth! Yet those horrors will be but as "the morning," or the entrance on the subsequent endless state of misery and despair. Our grand business therefore here is to secure an interest in Jesus Christ, and his eternal salvation.—The meanest executioners of the wrath of God can soon consume all our outward comforts, and turn an earthly paradise into a dreary wilderness. We can neither resist, flee away, nor shelter ourselves, when "the LORD mustereth his host for the battle." What then will be the case, when "the heavens and the earth shall pass away with a great noise, the elements shall melt with fervent heat," and "the sun, and moon, and stars shall" for ever "withdraw their shining!" Then "the Lord Jesus will be revealed in flaming fire, with his mighty angels," to execute his threatened

6 The children also of Judah and the children of Jerusalem have ye sold unto the Grecians, that ye might render them far from their border.

7 Behold, I will raise them out of the place whither ye have sold them, and will return your recompense upon your own head:

8 And I will sell your sons and your daughters into the hands of the children of Judah, and they shall sell them to the Sabeans, to a people far off: for the LORD hath spoken it.

[Practical Observations.]

9 ¶ Proclaim ye this among the Gentiles; prepare war, wake up the mighty men, let all the men of war draw near; let them come up:

10 Beat your plough-shares into swords, and your pruning hooks into spears: let the weak say, I am strong.

11 Assemble yourselves, and come, all ye heathen, and gather yourselves together round about: thither shall thy mighty ones to come down, O LORD.

12 Let the heathen be wakened, and come up to the valley of Jehoshaphat: for there will I sit to judge all the heathen round about.

13 Put ye in the sickle, for the harvest is ripe:

come, get ye down; for the press is full, the fats overflow; for their wickedness is great.

14 Multitudes, multitudes in the valley of decision: for the day of the LORD is near in the valley of decision.

15 The sun and the moon shall be darkened, and the stars shall withdraw their shining.

16 The LORD also shall roar out of Zion, and utter his voice from Jerusalem; and the heavens and the earth shall shake: but the LORD will be the Hope of his people, and the Strength of the children of Israel.

17 So shall ye know that I am the LORD your God dwelling in Zion my holy mountain: then shall Jerusalem be holy, and there shall no strangers pass through her any more.

18 ¶ And it shall come to pass in that day, that the mountains shall drop down new wine, and the hills shall flow with milk, and all the rivers of Judah shall flow with waters, and a fountain shall come forth of the house of the LORD, and shall water the valley of Shittim.

19 Egypt shall be a desolation, and Edom shall be a desolate wilderness, for the violence against the children of Judah, because they have shed innocent blood in their land.

There are no events recorded in history which entirely correspond with these predictions; perhaps the ruin of the Pagan Roman empire, which had destroyed Jerusalem and dispersed the Jews, might be adverted to; but the grand accomplishment seems to be yet in futurity, and the event alone can fully clear them up. The enemies and persecutors of the Christian church may be included in the interpretation, but Israel as a nation is especially intended.—Grecians. (6) Javanim, Ionians, marg.—Note, Gen. 10:2-5.

V. 9-17. This is a challenge, publicly proclaimed, to the enemies of Israel and of the church, to excite themselves and each other to a combined assault. Let not only such as had been trained up to arms, and were warriors inured to battle, draw near; but let the husbandmen change their instruments of tillage into swords and spears; let the feeble and timid assume courage and affect strength; and let the heathen collect all their forces to battle against the worshippers of JEHOVAH. (Marg. Ref. z. Note, Is. 2:2-5, v. 4.)—

Peaceful times are described by contrary expressions of turning "swords into plough-shares, and spears into pruning hooks." Louth.—"The mighty ones," whom the Lord was called upon to cause to come down, may either mean those potentates, that he would bring down as appointed to the slaughter; or those whom he would employ as the executioners of his vengeance. Some explain it of angels, as ministers of his vengeance. His enemies would come down to battle, expecting victory and triumph: but he would bring them down as criminals to be judged, condemned, and executed. As their wickedness had been great, and they were ripe for judgment; the Lord would order his angels, or his servants, to put in the sickle, to reap the harvest, and to gather and tread the vintage, which would be very copious. (Marg. Ref. f-i. Note, Rev. 14:14-20.) There can no doubt that Joel predicted the same events, which John long afterwards did, in the passage referred to. Immense multitudes would be collected into "the valley of decision," or "concision," or "threshing;" (marg.) where their cause would be decided, and their doom pronounced, and executed in the approaching day of the LORD, which would be attended with most alarming prodigies. (Marg. Ref. j, k. Notes, Ez. 38: 39:1-10, 11-16. v. 11, 16. Dan. 11:40-45.) The Lord would roar as a lion against them out of Zion; as they were to be punished for their hatred to his cause, and their injuries to his people. (Marg. Ref. m.) Then the whole visible creation would be thrown into the most violent commotions, as if the final dissolution of all things were come: but in the midst of all these errors, the Lord would enable his people to hope and rejoice in his mercy, truth, and powerful protection, and thus strengthen them against their fears and temptations. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. l, n, o. Notes, Jer. 41:9-27. Nah. 1:2-6. Matt. 24:29-31.) They should know and experience his gracious presence in his church; and he would render her holy as well as secure; and preserve her from the injuries and intrusions of heathens, infidels, and such as were strangers to the power of godliness. (Note, l, z.)—Nothing took place in the interval between the captivity and the coming of Christ, either in respect of the nations which fought against the Jews, or the purity and peace of Jerusalem, at all answerable to this energetic language. Strangers, one after another, took Jerusalem, and even polluted the temple; and after the coming of Christ, the Romans destroyed both, and they have ever since been "trodden under foot of the Gentiles." But the Scriptures referred to, show that almost all the prophets foretell the same final victory of the church, over all the nations that oppose it; about the time when the Jews shall be converted, and restored to their own land; and just before the millennium, when "the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ." (Notes, Rev. 11:15-18. 19:11-21.) For, by comparing this prophecy with those in the Revelation of John, where Israel is not separately mentioned, we may learn, that the destruction of the enemies of the church, and the triumphs of true religion in general, are predicted, and not exclusively the restoration of Israel, and the destruction of his enemies. The sublime description cannot but lead the reader to think of the end of the world, the day of judgment, and the heavenly Jerusalem yet events preceding the millennium are evidently predicted.

Prepare war. (9) "Sanctify war, &c." Marg. (Note, Is. 13:2-5.) From this expression many conclude, that the war spoken of will be engaged in on religious pretences, and be a kind of proclaimed crusade, or holy war, for the extirpation of restored Israel, and of the true church of God: and indeed this does not appear at all improbable, from comparing the several prophecies already referred to. But as the fulfilment is yet future, I would by no means be confident as to the particulars of this last conflict, by which the glorious millennium will be introduced.

The valley of Jehoshaphat. (12) "Joel . . . informs us, that the battle of the nations shall not only be fought between the two seas, but "in the valley of Jehoshaphat." and St. John predicts very definitely, that the same battle shall not only be fought in a land which extends 1600 furlongs; but in a certain place of that land called Armageddon." The "valley of Jehoshaphat" therefore, and "Armageddon" are one and the same region. "Now the word Jehoshaphat signifies the judgment of the LORD; and the valley of the battle is indifferently styled by Joel, "the valley of Jehoshaphat," . . . and "the valley of concision or destruction." It is plain, therefore, that this is not the proper, but only a descriptive name of the place. . . Here then St. John steps forward, and furnishes us with the literal proper name of the region, which is thus to be made the scene of the just judgment of God Armageddon signifies the destruction of Megiddo. Faber Vol. II. p. 381. (Notes, l, z. Dan. 11:44,45. Rev. 16:12-16, v. 16.)

communication of divine influences will attend the administration of God's ordinances; there will be a rapid increase of converts, who will grow in grace, fruitfulness, and consolation in an extraordinary manner; and the gospel will spread very speedily into the remotest corners of the earth. These events are predicted under significant emblems: it will be, as if the mountains should of themselves distil wine and milk in abundance; and every part of the land should be well watered, and exceedingly productive. (Marg. Ref. 1, v. Notes, Is. 30:23—25. 41:17—20. 43:14—21. 44:3—5. 55:1—3, 12, 13.) Spiritual blessings are principally to be understood, as it appears from the prediction, "that a fountain should come forth of the house of the LORD, and water the valley of Shittim." (Notes, Ez. 47:1—12.) "So the holy waters (Ez. 47:) are described, as running from the altar as far as the Dead Sea, the east part of which bordered on the country of Moab, within whose border was the valley of Shittim." Louth. (Num. 25:1.)—"In this verse, (18) either the times of the Messiah are described; or we have a description of Jerusalem, after its final restoration, when a golden age shall commence among its inhabitants, and when the knowledge of God and his Christ, shall a second time be widely diffused from it.—Egypt. (19) There shall be a signal difference between Egypt and Idumea, whose people shall be lost in the mass of other nations, and whose sovereignty shall not be restored; and Judah and Jerusalem, whose inhabitants shall be reinstated after their captivity; and on their future return, shall dwell for ever in their land, JERUSALEM displaying his glory among them." Bp. Newcombe. "The word blood, (21) may signify pollution in general. (Is. 44. Ez. 16:6.)—But the words chiefly import, that God will pardon the Jews the great crime of shedding the blood of Christ, upon their sincere repentance; the guilt of which they had imprecated on themselves and their posterity; (Matt. 27:25.) and had felt the effects of God's displeasure on that account for many ages." Louth.—The promulgation of the gospel, and the progress of the work will be attended by the ruin of such nations and persons, as shall persist in opposing them; on whom vengeance will be taken for all the violence and persecutions, which they have committed. (Marg. Ref. z—b. Notes, Is. 34: 63:1—6. Ez. 29:2—7.) From this period the church will continue in a state of peace and prosperity to the end of time: the Lord will then purify her from all the errors, abuses, and pollutions, which have hitherto defiled and deformed her. For he "dwelleth in Zion," among his people, and will at length render his cause triumphant. (Marg. and Ref. c, d. Notes, Is. 12:4—6. Ez. 48:30—35, v. 35.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—8. The appointed period of the troubles, to which the church and the believer are exposed, is frequently "a day of vengeance" on their enemies and persecutors: and all who have scattered, plundered, or injured the servants of God, will certainly be called to a severe account.—While men spend upon one vice what they gain by another, they rapidly "treasure up wrath against the day of wrath," and show the atrociousness of their impiety and profligacy.—Enmity to God, and persecution of his people, have generally been connected with the most degrading sensuality. But how wonderful is it, that men can sport with the miseries of their own species! can give a momentary worthless gratification a decided preference to the most important and permanent interests of their neighbours! and can subject even those, who were incapable of offending them, to the extremity of hardship and anguish, without reluctance, from such mean and base motives! The Lord will review all these infamous transactions in due time: he will utterly disregard all the compensations, which oppressors would make for their crimes, by ostentatious liberality or hypocritical shows of piety; and their opposition to his will can avail nothing; but "swiftly and suddenly will he return their recompense upon their own heads." He will make them refund their treasures, which they have gotten by sacrilege, persecution, oppression, and cruelty; or by selling his rational creatures, or his worshippers, for slaves as cattle, tearing them from their beloved relatives, and removing them far from their borders. They cannot be sure, but that they may fall into the hands of those, whom they have thus cruelly injured; and perhaps their wrongs may be retaliated on them or their children; and their ill-gotten estates may descend with this incumbrance to their heirs.

21 For I will cleanse their blood that I have not cleansed: for the LORD dwelleth in Zion.

† Or, even if the LORD that dwelleth, &c. 17. Rev. 21:3.

V. 9—20. Most dreadful yet deserved punishment will certainly be inflicted on all impenitent oppressors, and sinners of every description, when the Lord shall call the nations to his tribunal. As men ripen for his judgments, they are cut down, like the harvest or vintage, by the executioners of his vengeance: and the whole multitude will shortly be assembled to hear the righteous sentence denounced against them. He, who now reigns on a throne of grace, as a merciful Saviour, will then avenge himself on the despisers of his grace, and the opposers of his cause; and his wrath from mount Zion will be more tremendous than that from mount Sinai. But amidst all the trials of life, "in the hour of death, and in the day of judgment," the Lord will be the Hope and Confidence of his people, and the Support and "Strength of the children of Israel."—Various degrees of peace, prosperity and purity have been, and will be, found in the church on earth; and we should look forward in hope and with earnest prayers, for those glorious days which are foretold: but in heaven alone will perfect holiness and felicity be enjoyed. No strangers will enter the church triumphant, to defile those happy regions; no sin, temptation, or infirmity will then disturb our peace: for the Lord will fully cleanse every one of the blessed company, previous to their admission; that he may manifest his presence and love with them for evermore. May we then be "numbered with his saints in glory everlasting;" and while we wait on earth for this our rest and inheritance; may our prayers be incessantly poured forth for the predicted enlargement, peace, and purity of the church, and our talents and influence employed to the utmost, in forwarding every scriptural plan and effort, for the promoting of that most blessed event.

BOOK OF AMOS.

THOUGH this prophet was of Tekoa, a city in the tribe of Judah: (2 Chr. 11:5,6.)... yet he dwelt in Israel, and prophesied chiefly against that kingdom. He was a shepherd, and herdsman, and a gatherer of sycamore fruit; (7:14.) but rural employments were general and honourable among his countrymen. However, in the words, "I was no prophet, neither was I the son of a prophet," he seems to distinguish himself from those who were educated in the schools founded by Samuel. He borrows many images from the scenes in which he had been engaged: and gives them force and dignity, by the eloquence and grandeur of his manner. We shall find in him many affecting and pathetic, many elegant and sublime passages. No prophet hath more magnificently described the Deity; or more gravely rebuked the luxurious; or reproved injustice and oppression with greater warmth and a more generous indignation. An eminent judge and master of style, (Bp. Louth.) pronounces him nearly equal to the very first prophets in elevation of sentiments and loftiness of spirit, and scarcely inferior to any in splendour of diction and beauty of composition." Bp. Newcombe.—Amos was contemporary with Hosea: but it is supposed by the most competent judges, that he began to prophesy before him, and continued in his office a much shorter time. He has been confounded with Amoz, the father of Isaiah: but the names in the original are very different. He delivered prophecies against several of the neighbouring nations, and against Judah; but he exercised his ministry chiefly in Israel. In coincidence with the other prophets, he foretold the captivity and dispersion of the whole house of Israel, their preservation in this dispersed state as a distinct people, the coming and kingdom of Christ, the conversion of the Gentiles, the final triumphs of the church, and the future restoration of Israel: and that part of these predictions, which has been most wonderfully accomplished, is a sure pledge for the fulfilment of all the rest. Two of his prophecies are expressly quoted in the New Testament; (Com. 5:23—27. with Acts 7:42 43—and 9:11,12, with Acts 15:15—17.) in both of which his prophetic character is strongly attested.

THE words of Amos, who was among the herdmen of Tekoa, which he saw concerning Israel in the days of Uzziah king of Judah, and in the days of Jeroboam the son of Joash king of Israel, two years before the earthquake.

3 ¶ Thus saith the Lord; For three transgressions of Damascus, and for four, I will not turn away the punishment thereof: because they have thrashed Gilead with thrashing instruments of iron:

4 But I will send a fire into the house of Hazael, which shall devour the palaces of Ben-hadad.

5 I will break also the bar of Damascus, and cut off the inhabitant from the plain of Aven, and him that holdeth the sceptre from the house of Eden: and the people of Syria shall go into captivity unto Kir, saith the Lord.

6 ¶ Thus saith the Lord; For three transgressions of Gaza, and for four, I will not turn

7 But I will send a fire on the wall of Gaza, which shall devour the palaces thereof:

8 And I will cut off the inhabitant from Ashdod, and him that holdeth the sceptre from Ashkelon, and I will turn my hand against Ekron: and the remnant of the Philistines shall perish, saith the Lord God.

9 ¶ Thus saith the Lord; For three transgressions of Tyrus, and for four, I will not turn away the punishment thereof: because they delivered up the whole captivity to Edom, and remembered not the brotherly covenant:

10 But I will send a fire on the wall of Tyrus, which shall devour the palaces thereof.

11 ¶ Thus saith the Lord; For three transgressions of Edom, and for four, I will not turn away the punishment thereof: because he did pursue his brother with the sword, and did cast off all pity, and his anger did tear perpetually, and he kept his wrath for ever:

NOTES.—CHAP. I. V. 1. There is no certainty in any of the conjectures, that have been formed concerning this prophet: and we know nothing more of him, than what is intimated in his prophecy. (7:14, 15.) The former years of Uzziah coincided with the times of Jeroboam, the grandson of Jehu. (Notes, 7:10, 11. 2 Kings 14:21, 23, 24. 15:8. Hosea 1:1.) We find elsewhere that a terrible earthquake happened during the reign of Uzziah: it is recorded by Josephus; and there is a general tradition among the Jews, that it took place when Uzziah invaded the priestly office, and was smitten with a leprosy. Yet, as Jotham, who managed the affairs of the kingdom when Uzziah was smitten with leprosy, was not born when Jeroboam died; this opinion is worthy of little credit. The earthquake, however, seems to have been very tremendous, and it is mentioned as such by Zechariah several ages afterwards. (Note, Zech. 14:4, 5.)—When the prophet collected his predictions, he added this respecting the time when the first was delivered. (Marg. Ref.)—The word rendered herdmen, occurs only in one other place in Scripture, and is there translated sheep-master. (2 Kings 3:4.)

V. 2. In Jerusalem and on mount Zion the Lord dwelt among his people, on a mercy-seat: (Notes, Hos. 5:15. Joel 3:18—21, v. 21.) but he would thence denounce and execute judgments, more terrible than the roaring of a lion, on his enemies, and especially on idolatrous and hypocritical Jews and Israelites. (Marg. Ref. h. Note, Joel 3:9—17, v. 16.) For, by a drought he was about to desolate the countries, not so much as sparing the habitations of the shepherds, or leaving any verdure on the most fertile mountains and regions. (Marg. Ref. i, k.)

V. 3—5. The prophet first began with denouncing judgment against the several oppressors of his people. Damascus was the capital of Syria. Three and four, or seven, transgressions do not mean an exact number of offences; (Marg. and Marg. Ref. l.) but it is thus intimated, that in many things the persons spoken of had provoked the wrath of God, and were ripe for vengeance: and one offence is mentioned as more aggravated than the others, which was the immediate cause of their calamities. This, in the case of the Syrians, was their oppression of the inhabitants of Gilead beyond Jordan, whom they treated with as great cruelty, as if they had thrashed them with thrashing instruments of iron: or perhaps they actually tortured, in this inhuman manner, such of them as fell into their hands. (Marg. Ref. n.) This alludes to the thrashing vain, described by Isaiah. (41:15.) It moved on serrated wheels, and at once forced out the grain, and cut the straw.† Bp. Newcombe.—Hence the word is used for the weak's being crushed by the mighty. Lowth.—Therefore, the wrath of God, as a consuming fire, would enter the house, or among the descendants, of Hazael king of Syria, and consume those palaces, which Ben hadad his predecessor had erected at

Damascus, or those which his son Ben-hadad should inhabit (Note, Hos. 8:14.) The Lord would also break down the bar of that city, open her gates to the besiegers, cut off the inhabitants of the open country, wrest the sceptre from the hands of the reigning family, and carry the people captive into Kir, in the land of Media. (9:7. Is. 22:6.)—This sentence seems to have been executed by the Assyrians. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. m, o—s. Note, 2 Kings 16:7—9, v. 9.)

V. 6—8. Gaza, Ashdod, Ashkelon, and Ekron were the principal cities of Philistia: probably Gath was at this time in the possession of the kings of Judah.—The Philistines had added to their other crimes, a recent instance of cruel revenge against the people of God. On some occasion, they had taken captive a multitude of Jews, or Israelites, and had sold the whole company as slaves to the Edomites, who they well knew would treat them with the utmost rigour. (Notes, 9—12.) The Lord would therefore no longer delay to punish them according to their deserts; but would destroy their cities, dethrone their princes, and extirpate the remnant of the nation. (Marg. and Marg. Ref.)—This was executed afterwards by the Assyrians, Jews, and Chaldeans. (Notes, Jer. 47:)

V. 9, 10. The Tyrians had forgotten the brotherly covenant, which had subsisted between David and Solomon kings of Judah, and Hiram king of Tyre; (Marg. Notes, 2 Sam. 5:11. 1 Kings 5:1—11. 9:11—14. 2 Chr. 2:3—16.) and other treaties of amity, which had been entered into for their reciprocal advantage: and they had been guilty of great cruelty to the nation, after the example of the Philistines. (Notes, 6—8.) This provoked God to send those judgments upon them, which were afterwards inflicted by Nebuchadnezzar and by Alexander the great. (Marg. Ref. d. Notes, Is. 23: Ez. 26—28:)

V. 11, 12. Edom, or Esau, was Jacob's brother: yet the Edomites were more cruel to the descendants of Jacob, than any of the strangers by whom they were surrounded! (Marg. Ref. h. Note, Ps. 137:7—9.) After the example of their progenitor, they pursued the Israelites with the sword: they readily purchased them for slaves, from those who made them captives: (Notes, 7—10.) they were void of compassion towards them, and full of furious revenge, which they gratified by the most outrageous cruelties: but this would kindle the fire of God's wrath against their strongest cities, and reduce them to desolation.—This was executed by the Assyrians and Chaldeans, and others, and finally by the Jews. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. g—l. Notes, Is. 34:63—6. Jer. 49:7—22. Ez. 25: 35: Joel 3:18—21, v. 19. Obad. 1—16. Mal. 1:—4.)

V. 13—15. The Ammonites to the east of Gilead were as cruel to the inhabitants of that district, as the Assyrians to the north had been. Their enmity and avarice had induced them to be guilty of the most horrid barbarities, in order to four, I will not turn away the punishment thereof: because they have 'ripped up the women with child, of Gilead, that they might enlarge their border:

14 But I will kindle a fire in the wall of 'Rabbah, and it shall devour the palaces thereof, with shouting in the day of battle, with a tempest in the day of the whirlwind:

15 And 'their king shall go into captivity, he and his princes together, saith the LORD.

CHAPTER II.

The judgment of God against Moab, for his impotent revenge on the dead king of Edom, 1-3. On Judah, for his contempt of God's law, 4, 5; and on Israel, for idolatry, iniquity, and ingratitude, 6-16.

THUS saith the LORD; 'For three transgressions of Moab, and for four, I will not turn away the punishment thereof: because he burned the bones of the king of Edom into lime:

2 But I will send a fire upon Moab, and it shall devour the palaces of 'Kiriath: and Moab shall die with tumult, with shouting, and with the sound of the trumpet:

extirpate the people, and to enlarge their border. This was about to bring down the vengeance of God on Rabbah, their capital city, which would be taken by storm, and destroyed suddenly as by a whirlwind; and this would be succeeded by the captivity of the king and his princes. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, Judg. 11:12-23, Jer. 49:1-6, Ez. 25:1-7.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

God has often chosen the instruments of his work, in the sacred ministry, and in other important services, from inferior stations in society: and they need not be ashamed of their mean extraction or former low occupations, and should not be reproached on account of them: provided they faithfully discharge the duties to which they are called.—The neglect of warnings from God frequently precedes the execution of his severe judgments: and while from his throne of grace, he delights to exercise mercy to the humble believer, he will thence denounce and execute the severest vengeance on his enemies. He bears long with transgressors: but he will no longer "turn away the punishment" of those, who have filled up the measure of their guilt.—Cruelty to the helpless, and persecution of his people, ripen nations and individuals for destruction with great rapidity. His wrath consumes flourishing families and magnificent palaces, like a tremendous fire: it breaks down the gates of fortified cities, depopulates fertile regions, dethrones princes, and reduces potent nations to captivity and slavery. Thus oppressors are visited in rotation, according to the degree of their cruelty, treachery, violation of relative duties, or contempt of sacred treaties; or to that of their enmity and oppression.—"They shall have judgment without mercy, who have showed no mercy;" and they who cast off all pity for their brethren, and whose wrath and revenge have raged perpetually against them, have no reason to expect any mercy from God. Yet what cruelty will not men commit to increase their estates! And what villany will not ambitious princes and even republics countenance in order to enlarge their territories! But the day of retribution will come on all such inhuman monsters, as an overwhelming tempest and an irresistible whirlwind: and what will they then do? or whither will they flee from the vengeance of God, and from the devouring fire of his incensed justice?

NOTES.—CHAP. II. V. 1. Marg. Ref.—Because, &c. The Lord noticed this expression of impotent revenge of the Moabites against the dead body of an idolatrous prince, and assigned it as a reason of the severe judgments which he was about to inflict on that people.

V. 2, 3. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Is. 15:16, Jer. 48: Ez. 25:8-11, Zeph. 2:8-10.)—"The judge" seems to mark out the principal magistrate, or ruler: for there is no mention of a king in the prophecies against Moab; though the nation was governed by a king, in the days of Jehoshaphat king of Judah. (2 Kings 3:4-26.)

V. 4. Judah was not indicted for any particular outrage against the dictates of humanity or natural conscience, though guilty of very many; but for contempt of the law and authority of God, who had committed to the nation his sacred oracles. (Note, Rom. 3:2.) Despising his worship, ordinances, and commandments, they hearkened to their false teachers, and worshipped idols, which were vanity and lies. 'Seeing the Gentiles... were thus punished, Judah, which was so fully instructed in the Lord's will, might not think to escape.' (Marg. Ref. Notes, Ps. 51:4, 106:6, 147:19, 20, Jer. 8:8, 9, 11:2-8.)

V. 6-8. After the prophet had given a general warning to the surrounding nations, and to Judah: he more particularly, in the name of God, addressed the Israelites, to whom he was especially sent. They also had filled up, or were about to fill up, the measure of their sins, and the Lord would not avert from them the merited punishment. Several atrocious crimes were charged on them, some of which were sanctioned by the authority and example of the rulers. The smallest bribe, even the value of a pair of shoes, would induce the magistrates to give up a poor man to the will of his merciless oppressor, to be cast into prison, reduced to slavery or put to death; though his cause and character were most evidently righteous; nay, perhaps for that very reason! (Marg. Ref. n, o. Notes, 5:10-13, vv. 11, 12, 8:4-10, vv. 4-6, Is. 5:22, 23, Mic. 3:1-4.) The least property of a poor man, though scarcely more valuable than the dust of the earth that fell on his head, excited their covetousness, and they panted after it till they had got it from him: or, as some render the clause, "They tread down the heads of the poor into the dust of the earth." Thus they perverted the cause of such as were too weak, timid, or gentle to resist their oppressions. (Marg. Ref. p, q. Notes, 4:1-3, v. 1, Is. 10:1-4, Mic. 2:1-3, 8-10, v. 9.) At the same time they were equally regardless of the divine law, and even of common decency, in their sensual indulgences: for, both the father and his son would cohabit with the same woman, to the scandal of their religion; when the Gentiles themselves would not allow a man to marry his father's wife. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. r, s. Note, 1 Cor. 5:1-5.) Instead of restoring, according to the law, the garments of the poor when taken as pledges; they made use of them, especially when they prostrated themselves before their idols; when they feasted, or slept, or committed abomination, before their altars; and the wine, which they poured out as libations, or drank in their idolatrous feasts, was received as a bribe for the condemnation of innocent persons, or as a fine unjustly levied from them! (Marg. and Marg. Ref. 6:3-8, Notes, Ez. 22:25-27, Deut. 24:10-13.) The word rendered "their god," may be translated "their gods." Either the golden calves, or other idols, are evidently meant.

V. 9-12. The peculiar favours, which God had shown to Israel, aggravated the guilt of their iniquities and idolatries. He had destroyed before their fathers the gigantic Amorites, and the other formidable inhabitants of the land, on purpose to put them in possession of it. Not only were some individuals, among these nations, of extraordinary stature and strength: but the whole collective body of them resembled a deep-rooted and strong oak; which the Lord for Israel's benefit destroyed, root, branch, and fruit together. (Marg. Ref. y-a, d. Notes, Gen. 15:16, Num. 21:21-25, 34, Deut. 3:11, Josh. 11:21-23, 15:14, 1 Sam. 17:4-7, 48-53, 2 Sam. 21:15-22.) This was indeed the continuation of his former favours to that nation, in delivering them from the Egyptians, and preserving them in the wilderness. (Marg. Ref. b, c. Notes, Deut. 8:2-5.) He had also greatly honoured them.

and he was strong as the oaks; yet I destroyed his fruit from above, and his roots from beneath.

10 Also I brought you up from the land of Egypt, and led you forty years through the wilderness, to possess the land of the Amorite.

11 And I raised up of your sons for prophets, and of your young men for Nazarites. Is it not even thus, O ye children of Israel? saith the LORD.

12 But ye gave the Nazarites wine to drink; and commanded the prophets, saying, Prophecy not.

13 Behold, I am pressed under you, as a cart is pressed that is full of sheaves.

14 Therefore the flight shall perish from the swift, and the strong shall not strengthen his force, neither shall the mighty deliver himself:

16 And he that is courageous among the mighty shall flee away naked in that day, saith the LORD.

CHAPTER III.

God expostulates with Israel and Judah, and warns them of approaching judgment, 1-8. He calls the Philistines and Egyptians to behold the punishment of Samaria and the ten tribes for their sins, 9-15.

HEAR this word that the LORD hath spoken against you, O children of Israel, against the whole family which I brought up from the land of Egypt, saying,

2 You only have I known of all the families of the earth: therefore I will punish you for all your iniquities.

The illustration, according to either rendering, is taken from the scenes in which the prophet had been conversant.

V. 14-16. Neither agility of man or horse, nor vigour, numbers, or valour, would deliver the people from the judgments which were coming upon them; few would escape, and those few would be destitute fugitives in other countries, or naked captives in the hands of their enemies.—The desolations occasioned by the earthquake before mentioned (1:1) may perhaps be here referred to; but the destruction of Samaria, and the captivity of Israel by the Assyrians, must principally be intended. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, 9:1-4. Ec. 9:11, 12. Is. 30:15-17. Ez. 5:1-4.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

In what varied and horrid forms do the malignant passions of the human heart break forth, on different occasions! But the Lord keeps an exact account of the conduct of ungodly men even towards each other: and he will punish every expression of a vindictive and cruel disposition, towards the living or the dead.—They, who insult over the fallen or the miserable, may expect to be insulted over, perhaps when in extreme agony; and to die “with tumult and shouting, and with the sound of a trumpet;” and judges and princes, when ringleaders in wickedness, may have the pre-eminence of more aggravated misery than their subjects. But it is a small thing for those, “to whom are committed the oracles of God,” to avoid the gross enormities of benighted heathens: even without crimes so atrocious in the sight of men, they may fill up a large measure of guilt, and ripen speedily for vengeance, “by despising the law of the LORD, and not keeping his commandments;” and by preferring their own imaginations or inclinations to his holy truths, ordinances, and precepts. False doctrines, delusive superstitions, idolatries, and direct and aggravated violations of the word of God, have often been perpetuated by tradition in the visible church; and one generation after another has “erred through the lies, after which their fathers have walked,” till the wrath of God has burned like fire, to consume even “the palaces of Jerusalem.”—When actions which are known to be criminal are deliberately ventured upon for worldly gain, men will by degrees proceed to perpetrate the basest villainies for the lowest recompense, and become callous to all the miseries of the poor: nay, they will take pleasure in trampling on the righteous and the meek, out of contempt and enmity to their characters! Such nominal Christians will grudge the poor servant, labourer, and mechanic the smallest advantage or indulgence; and eagerly pursue every iniquitous method of extorting their little from them, to increase their own abundance.—Injustice and rapacity are generally accompanied with sensuality and licentiousness, and lead to impiety, infidelity, or abominable idolatry. But no wrongs will be so fatal to the injurer, as those which are done to the poor and meek, who cannot, or will not, avenge themselves.—When the obligations are considered, which professed Christians have received from God in his providence; and by his word, ministers, and ordinances, and the good examples set before them; it must be evident, that their crimes are far more aggravated than similar practices of ignorant Pagans.—Those who hate self-denial and piety themselves, will commonly attempt to seduce such as profess them, either to renounce or disgrace their profession: too many, who seemed to “run well,” have thus been led into those “worldly lusts which war against the soul;” and as “every one that doeth evil, hateth the light,” we need not wonder at the pains which wicked men take, to silence, intimidate, or corrupt the ministers of God. Thus they add obstinacy to iniquity, and do the work of Satan, as well as that of the fallen children of Adam. When this becomes the general character of churches or nations, it cannot be expected that the Lord will any longer endure them; but they will be given up to complicated misery, notwithstanding all their idolized power, courage, or resources: nor can individuals, who profess, and thus disgrace, the gospel, escape the future wrath of an offended God.

NOTES.—CHAP. III. V. 1-3. This chapter begins another message from God, which was addressed to all the posterity of Jacob. This whole family which the Lord had brought out of Egypt, had been owned, noticed, and favoured by him in such a manner as no other people had been, especially in having his oracles and ordinances among them, and being admitted into a covenant relation to him as his worshippers. But instead of being, on that account, connived at in their wickedness; his honour required that they should be punished with distinguished severity. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. d-f. Notes, Ez. 19:4-6. Ps. 147:19, 20. Is. 63:7-19. Ez. 9:5-7. Matt. 3:7-10. 11:20-24. Rom. 3:1, 2.) They could not reasonably expect to continue in friendship and peace with God, and under his protection, while their conduct was directly contrary to his holy law. Without coincidence in judgment, inclinations, and pursuits, men cannot be intimately united in friendship, or live together in harmony and comfort. They, therefore, who do not count the Lord worthy of all love, honour, worship, and obedience; who do not love his law, nor regard his service as liberty and felicity, but dislike his way of saving sinners, and seek not his glory; cannot walk together with him in his ordinances, commandments, and providence. Notions, forms, sects, or outward conduct, cannot supply the want of reconciliation with God, and that conformity to him, which must be derived from the regenerating grace of the Holy Spirit. (Marg. Ref. g. Note, Gen. 5:21-24.)—“Can two go together except they meet by appointment?” As a journey, in which two engage, supposed a settled meeting; so the denouncing of God’s designs by his prophets shows that he has made himself known to them. Bp. Neucombe.—Others seem to put the same construction on this verse; and the context is thought to favour it. Yet it does not appear how the prophet’s mission could thus be proved till his predictions were accomplished; and certainly, the instruction on the preceding interpretation, is very important, and accords with the plain meaning of the words, and the general tenor of Scripture. “Can two walk together, except they meet by appointment.” Thus God and man meet, according to his appointment, when the sinner repents, and is converted; when he believes, and is justified, and reconciled; and sanctified: and thenceforth he walks with God, as his Father, Friend, Guide, Guardian, and Portion.

V. 4—8. These animated interrogations were intended to convince the people that they had cause for alarm, and should earnestly seek to avert the threatened wrath of God. The lion in the forest, and the young lion in the den, are observed to roar over their prey, or as urged by hunger for want of it, when they have it in view, or as devouring it; and not at other times: in like manner the Lord would not have "roared out of Zion," had he not marked out the idolatrous Israelites as the objects of his righteous indignation, which was about to seize upon them with irresistible force. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. h.)—Birds are not caught in a snare by chance; but it is laid for them, and generally not taken up till some of them be ensnared: so the calamities which befell the people, were the effect of the Lord's purpose of punishing them for their sins; and would not be removed till they had effected their reformation, or their ruin.—The trumpet announcing the approach of the enemy would excite the people to run together, and concert measures for their security: and ought not Israel to take the alarm at the terrifying messages delivered to them in the name of God? (Marg. and Marg. Ref. i.)—Notes, Jer. 4:5—7. 6:1. Ez. 32:2—9. Hos. 5:8—10. 8:1. They would not surely ascribe their troubles to any other cause; for was there any evil, or calamity in a city, which was not from him, and the effect of his wrath? (Marg. and Marg. Ref. m. Notes, Gen. 50:20. Is. 45:7. Jam. 1:13—18.) Indeed he would do nothing, (especially respecting Israel,) without revealing his secret purpose to his servants the prophets; who being thus informed of what was about to come to pass, must declare it to the people, that they might take warning and act accordingly. Nor could they do otherwise: for who could help trembling at the roaring of a lion? And who could help prophesying when the Lord God spake to him of the judgments which he was about to execute upon transgressors? The people ought not, therefore, to blame the prophets for their awful predictions; but to approve their conduct, and to take warning to repent and return to God, if so be his wrath might be averted or deferred.—The grand outlines of the plan of divine Providence and the events of history, to this day and to the end of the world, were made known to the prophets of Israel and Judah; and a very large proportion of them, many ages before they took place: so that a general history of mankind, as to the most important facts, might be composed from their writings. Yet, these prophets excepted, no nation has had fewer good authors, no nation has been more generally disregarded, and despised. (Marg. Ref. n—p.)

V. 9—15. The heathen neighbours of Israel, and those who had most oppressed and annoyed them, as the Philistines and Egyptians, were summoned to assemble at Samaria, that they might behold their crimes and punishment. (Marg. Ref. q—t. Notes, Deut. 29:21—25. 1 Kings 9:7—9.) There they would behold a city full of tumults, occasioned by vice, injustice, and varied oppressions; to which they were so habituated, that they knew not how to act honestly or conscientiously; but were continually storing up the gains of violence and robbery, even in the palaces of their kings and nobles. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. u, x. Notes, 2:6—8. 4:1—3. 8:4—10. Zeph. 1:9.) For these crimes the Lord, in vindication of his own honour, would send Shalmaneser and the Assyrians to invade the land, and besiege the city, and level it with the ground. The inhabitants would then be so generally massacred, that only a few obscure persons would escape. As with great difficulty and danger the

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

It is lamentable to consider, how often peculiar advantages only serve to increase the guilt and punishment of their possessors; we should therefore take heed not to presume on external privileges, without sanctifying grace rendering them effectual to our souls.—The proud, the sensual, the covetous, the unmerciful and deceitful, cannot enjoy communion with a holy God: he can have no pleasure in them, nor they in him. And as all our happiness must arise from his love and from walking with him; we should be the more earnest in seeking conformity to his Image, as connected with reconciliation to him through Jesus Christ.—Let none suppose, that the threatenings of God's word were intended merely to frighten them, or that he has no ground for the severity which is denounced, or that he does not intend to execute it. Impenitent sinners are the prey against which he utters his tremendous voice; and not one of them will escape his righteous vengeance. Their present troubles spring from his anger, and will either end in their repentance, or destruction. Surely then, sinners should take warning, and escape for their lives; and we all ought to "submit to God's righteousness," in the evil which he inflicts upon us for our sins. "His secret is with them that fear him," and he has made known the rules of his dealings with us by his holy prophets: nay, his faithful ministers, though not acquainted with his secret counsels by immediate revelation, may see most evidently that judgments are about to be executed on the wicked; and they cannot but speak, that men may fear and flee from impending destruction.—Even idolaters will at length be called upon to witness, and to approve, God's judgments upon apostates and hypocrites. The tumults of prosperous wickedness, sensuality, and oppression, which blind the understanding, and harden the heart to every sentiment of feeling of justice or mercy, tend to tumults of a still more terrible nature, and provoke the most ruinous judgments of God against nations and individuals. Indeed "a remnant according to the election of grace" will be secured by our great and good Shepherd, as from the jaws of destruction, in the worst of times; but generally they consist of the poor, obscure, and neglected: while the rich oppressors "who store up robbery in their palaces," the delicate, the luxurious, and magnificent, are marked out for judgment; and their hypocritical or idolatrous forms of worship serve only to increase their condemnation.

NOTES.—CHAP. IV. V. 1-3. The cattle of Bashan were remarkable for their size, fatness, and wantonness; and the wealthy, luxurious, and profligate rulers and nobles of Samaria seem to have been intended; though some interpret it of the haughty matrons. (Marg. Ref. a, b. Notes, Ps. 22:11-13. Ec. 39:17-20.) But the princes might be described as kine, rather than bulls, to reprove their effeminacy and cowardice when assaulted by their enemies; while they crushed and trampled upon their unresisting brethren, and sold them for slaves; saying to the masters, who bought them, "Bring us wine that we may drink." Having made the iniquitous bargain, perhaps on low terms, they required from the purchaser, in this slave-trade, to be treated with wine. (Marg. Ref. c-e. Notes, 2:6-8. Joel 3:3-8, v. 3. Mic. 3:1-4.) But the Lord had sworn by his own holiness, that they and their posterity should be dragged out of their habitations, as helpless fishes are drawn by the hook out of the water to be destroyed. (Marg. Ref. f, g. Notes, Jer. 16: 16. Ez. 29:2-5. Hab. 1:12-17, vv. 14-17.) The wall of Samaria would be broken down by the besiegers: then every one of these oppressors would endeavour to escape by that breach which was nearest to his station; they would cast away the treasures which they had hoarded in their palaces; or they would throw them down there, that they might be the more unincumbered in fleeing from the enemy: and yet they would not be able to escape. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. h. Notes, 2 Kings 7:6-9. Is. 2:19-21. Matt. 16:24-28, v. 26. Phil. 3:8-11.)

V. 4, 5. This is an ironical or sarcastical address to the idolatrous Israelites. Let them go to Beth-el or Gilgal, and multiply transgressions. (Marg. Ref. i, k. Notes, 5:4-6. Ez. 20:39. Hos. 4:15. 9:15-17. 12:10, 11.) Let them offer daily oblations to their idols, and employ in their service the second tithes, which every third year ought to have been consumed in religious feasting, with their priests, Levites, and poor brethren; (Marg. Notes, Deut. 14:22-29. 26:12-15.) and let them openly present their peace-offerings and free-will-offerings to their golden calves, proclaiming the sacrifices and inviting guests, in imitation of the worship paid to God at Jerusalem: for this conduct would be agreeable to their inclinations, and consistent with their character. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. n-p.) "Burn a thank-offering of leaven," in contempt of the law. (Jer. 7:12, 13.) ^q Sp. Newcombe. (Notes, Lev. 2:11. 7:12-14.)—^r Your hearts are so set upon your idolatrous worship, that it is in vain to use any arguments to persuade you to the contrary. (Ps. 81:12.) ^s Louth.—"He speaketh this in contempt of them who resorted to these places; thinking that great devotion, and good intention, had been sufficient to have bound God unto them."

(Marg. Ref. 8. Notes, Jer. 14:2-6. Joel 1:17, 18.)

V. 9. (Notes, Joel 1:4-12. 2:1-20.) These visitations were suited to convince the Israelites of their sin and folly, and to bring them to "repent and turn to God, and do works meet for repentance;" but, not having this effect, they eventually hastened the ruin of the nation. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Hag. 2:15-19, v. 17.)

V. 10. In consequence of famine, drought, and locusts, dreadful pestilences prevailed in the land; like those with which God had visited the Egyptians, especially when the first-born were destroyed; and in this enfeebled state, the people were harassed by the incursions of the Assyrians and other enemies, who slew their chosen young men, and seized on those horses, which, at great expense, had been procured from Egypt for their cavalry. Being thus obliged to keep their armies encamped, when pestilence raged, and many were slaughtered, and perhaps left unburied through the distress of the survivors; their camps became exceedingly offensive, and this greatly augmented the dire and complicated calamities, with which they were visited. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, Ex. 9:6. 12:29, 30. 15:25, 26.)

V. 11. (Marg. Ref. Note, Gen. 19:24, 25.) Perhaps this judgment was the effect of the earthquake before mentioned, (1:1.) "You were almost all consumed, and a few of you wonderfully preserved." (Note, Zech. 3:1-4, v. 2.)

V. 12, 13. As the Israelites persisted in impenitent rebellion and idolatry, notwithstanding all these warnings, judgments, and respite; the Lord was determined to do thus unto them; that is, to bring upon them the calamities which had before been predicted. (Note, 3:9-15.) He warned them therefore "to prepare to meet their God," as their offended Judge and Adversary, who was about to denounce sentence, and to execute righteous vengeance upon them by the Assyrian armies. They would then have to contend with the Creator of the mountains, the sovereign Disposer of winds and storms, the heart-searching omniscient Judge, who sheweth to every man even his secret thoughts; the Arbiter of every man's prosperity or adversity, who turneth the morning of hopeful success into the darkness of misery and despair; and the omnipotent Lord, who is able to tread down the stoutest of the great ones of the earth, and to "put all enemies under his feet." PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The luxurious and cruel oppressors of the poor are often as destitute of manly courage as of compassion; and their wanton tyranny over their helpless inferiors, is attended with as abject a servility towards their powerful opposers.—Careless and prosperous sinners will soon be entangled in their own devices, or by the judgments of God, as in a net; and they will be disappointed in all their efforts to escape deserved vengeance.—How miserable are they, whose religion, the result of their corrupt reasonings and inclinations, serves only to multiply and aggravate their transgressions, whose diligence, expense, and superstitious devotion, ripen them for destruction; and whose confidence and self-satisfaction in anti-scriptural observances, prove that they are given over to "a strong delusion to believe a lie!" Let us then compare our sentiments, conduct, and worship, with the standard of holy Scripture; and pray continually to be guided into the way of peace and holiness.—To what diversified miseries has sin exposed us, even in this world! But let us remember, that this is a state of probation and discipline; and that afflictions are employed as rebukes, corrections, and warnings, and should be thus improved. For they tend to show the evil of sin, the power of divine wrath, the vanity of this world, the danger of continuing impenitent, and our need of the mercy, grace, and comfort of the Gospel.—But when famine and pinching hunger and thirst, when impoverishing dispensations, when wasting pestilences and wars, when earthquakes and conflagrations, when urgent distresses, affecting examples in the case of others, and marvellous escapes in their own, do not lead men "to repent, and turn to God, and to do works meet for repentance," they manifest the hardness, depravity, and enmity of their hearts, and so display the justice of God in their final condemnation. Ere long we must meet our God in judgment: but we shall never be able to stand before him, if he be severe in marking our iniquities: we cannot deny or excuse our crimes; we cannot withstand, escape, or endure his righteous vengeance: for what can a poor worm do, who has to contend with the omnipotent, omniscient, and ever-lasting Creator and Sovereign of the universe? If we would "prepare to meet our God" with comfort, at that awful period; we must now meet him in Christ Jesus, the eternal Son of the Father, who came down from heaven, to bleed and die in our nature, to save lost sinners: we must meet him upon a mercy-seat, by faith and prayer: we must "seek him whilst he may be found, and call upon him whilst he is near;" that so his "saving grace may teach and enable us to deny ungodliness and worldly lusts, and to live soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world;" and then "we shall have confidence, and not be ashamed before him at his coming."

none to take it up? Louth.—God would forsake the people; and there would be none able to raise them from their ruined condition, or to prevent their being carried away into captivity by the Assyrians. They would soon be so diminished and enfeebled, by intestine convulsions and foreign invasions, that their cities would not be able to furnish more than a tenth part of their former number of soldiers; and so they would be utterly unable to resist the power of the Assyrian invaders. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 4-6. Notwithstanding all these denunciations, the Israelites would have nothing to blame for their ruin, except their own obstinate impenitence in rebellion. Still the Lord assured them, that if they would seek him they should live and be preserved from their enemies; that is, if they sought his favour and protection, by repentance, faith, and prayer, and by returning heartily to his worship and service. And any individuals, who thus sought him, would save their souls alive; and might be rescued from the general ruin of the nation. But they must not imagine, that going to worship the calves at Beth-el, or Gilgal, or Beer-sheba, (which last, probably, was in the hands of the kings of Israel at that time,) would avail them any thing. (Notes, 4:4, 5.) All the worship and sacrifices presented in those places were an abomination; and they must protest against them, and seek the Lord according to his word. For Beth-el and Gilgal, and their inhabitants, idols, priests, and worshippers, would speedily fall into the hands of the enemies; and none of them would be able to avert or to quench, the fire of God's indignation, which was about to devour the whole house of Joseph, or the kingdom of Israel, of which Ephraim and Manasseh formed a principal part. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 14:15. Is. 55:6, 7. Jer. 29:11-14. Zeph. 2:1-3. Matt. 6:33, 34. 7:7-11.) "The original runs thus, 'Beth-el shall become Aven.' Beth-el signifies 'the house of God:' when the place was defiled by idolatry, it was named by way of reproach Beth-aven, that is, the house of vanity, or idolatry; (Hos. 4:15.) and it is here called so in another sense, viz. as vanity is the same with a thing of naught, or of no continuance. . . . The idol you worship will not be able to deliver you, but will itself be involved in the common calamity." Louth.

V. 7-9. The rulers and magistrates of Israel were here particularly addressed; their iniquity rendered their judicial proceedings a source of oppression and misery; and they had left off all regard to justice, as well as to religion, throughout the land. (Marg. Ref. t, u. Notes, 10-13. 6:12-14, v. 12. Is. 10:1-4. Ez. 22:27, 28. Hos. 10:4. Hab. 1:2-4. Zeph. 3:1-4.) Thus they provoked that glorious God, whose favour they should have sought: even Him, who had created the stars in their constellations, which were supposed to have a great influence on the seasons, for rain or drought, for plenty or scarcity. For he could as easily raise men from the depth of misery to felicity, or cast them down from the summit of prosperity into distress and despair, as he changes the darkness of the night into the light of the morning, or the brightness of the day into the gloom of the evening. (Marg. Ref. x-z. Notes, 4:12, 13. Ez. 10:21-23. Job 9:4-13.) He was able again to pour the waters of the ocean upon the earth, and cause a second deluge, if he saw good; for he is the eternal, self-existent, and all-sufficient JEHOVAH. He could even give strength to a few plundered and dispirited captives to vanquish the mightiest conquerors, or to take the most strongly fortified cities. What then had his enemies to expect, but inevitable destruction? (Marg. and *Marg. V. 25-27. The generation of Israel, to whom the prophet spake, copied and exceeded the crimes of their forefathers, even from the time of their leaving Egypt. For almost forty years, during their continuance in the wilderness, the prescribed sacrifices to the Lord were greatly neglected or interrupted; and yet with great toil and expense, they carried along with them shrines or models of the tabernacles, in which their idols had been worshipped, with images in them, as learned men suppose. (Marg. Ref. m. Notes, Ez. 20: 7-9, 13-15.)—Moloch is a name familiar to the student of Scripture; but nothing satisfactory can be known of "Chiun," or "the star of their god, which they made to themselves;" perhaps some of the planets or constellations were worshipped under this name, and the image of it might be decorated or distinguished by the figure of a star. (Acts 7: 42, 43.) Some remains of this idolatry, probably, existed in the time of Amos.—Ye shall be removed further from your own country, than when Hazael king of Syria carried away so many Israelites captives to Damascus. (14.) ... The king of Assyria carried the ten tribes captives, as far as Media, (2 Kings 17:6.) ... at a much greater distance than Babylon ... (Acts 7:43.) ... The captivity of the ten tribes would be far worse than that of the two remaining, and with less hopes of returning to their own country. Louth. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. o-q. Notes, Lev. 18:21. 20:2-5. 2 Kings 23:5, 11. Acts 7:37-43. vv. 42, 43. 19:23-31. vv. 24, 26.)—The ten tribes might indeed be especially addressed; but it is evident, that all the descendants of those Israelites who came out of Egypt, were concerned in the expostulation and the prediction.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-13. Pious minds will often be constrained to lament over the corruptions and calamities of the visible church: for if those, who profess to worship the one living and true God, provoke him to forsake them, they have none to raise them up from their fallen state. But the true church, though often distressed and apparently diminished, still maintains its ground, and will again be replenished.—While "the Judge standeth at the door," ready to execute vengeance on evildoers, he still proclaims mercy to those who will accept of it in his way: but men often expect deliverance, by those idolatrous or superstitious forms, which ensure and enhance their condemnation: and so long as they refuse "to seek the LORD," and to come to him by Jesus Christ, that "they may live;" the fire of divine indignation breaks forth upon them, and none of their devices or teachers can quench it.—No man can too much regard, or reasonably disregard the wrath or favour of God, who orders all things in heaven and earth as he pleases. He destroys countries by drought or fire, by deluges or hostile invaders, in an irresistible manner. He can envelope men in natural or spiritual darkness, or involve them in terror and despair; or he can give light, joy, and prosperity, as he sees good: and while oppressors "turn judgment into wormwood, and leave off righteousness in the earth," they forget that "the LORD can strengthen the spoiled against the strong," and execute vengeance on them, by the hands of the poor outcasts whom they despise. But hardened oppressors can seldom be induced to fear the wrath, or seek the favour of God: "they hate the light," and those faithful preachers, who speak not good of them, but evil, and who rebuke their crimes as openly as they commit them. Intent on enriching and indulging themselves, they trample on the poor, and iniquitously, as well as unmercifully, deprive them of their hard-earned pittance, that themselves may riot in sensuality and magnificence. But the Lord notices with abhorrence all their "afflicting of the just," and all their bribery, percolation, and perversion of law and equity; and he will soon terminate their prosperity and oppression together. It is, however, generally prudent for men, if they can do it consistently with their duty, to keep silence in such evil times, and to leave the matter with the Lord; lest improper intermeddling should render a bad condition still worse.

V. 14-27. The ministers of Christ must speak, whatever they venture or suffer: they must continue to call on men to "seek the good and not the evil, that the LORD God of hosts may be with them." And as we must learn "to hate the evil and love the good," if we would acceptably serve God on earth or be fit for heaven; it behooves us earnestly to plead his promises, and to beseech him to "create in us a clean heart and to renew a right spirit within us;" and then all piety and righteousness, and every relative duty, will readily and constantly be attended on.—The Lord is ever ready to be gracious to the souls that seek him; and we may hope for his returning favour to the remnant of diminished churches, when they seek him in humility and sincerity. But mourning and lamentation must come on all who neglect him, even in those places where joy and gladness did most abound; and it is a vain presumption, for the impenitent and unbelieving to hope for favour "in the day of the LORD," which will be to them "darkness and not light, even very dark, and no brightness in it;" for though ungodly men, persisting in impenitence and unbelief, may escape the most complicated temporal judgments, none of them can avoid everlasting destruction. God abhors even the most pompous services of the proud, impenitent, and hypocritical; and is offended at their very songs of praise. But, it is grievous to reflect how his word has been disregarded, even by his worshippers, in every age of the church; and how much more labour, expense, and self-denial have been exercised by idolaters and the devotees of superstition, than have been observable among those, who professed to adhere to the scriptural and spiritual worship of our God.

NOTES.—CHAP. VI. V. 1. The wealthy and haughty inhabitants, both of Jerusalem and Samaria, seem to be here addressed. They confided in their fortifications and external advantages, or profession of being God's people; thus they carelessly indulged themselves, and were heedless about consequences, though destruction impended over them. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. a, b. Notes, Job 21:7-16. Is. 32:9-14, vv. 9-11.)—Some, however, understand the passage differently. —"The word ... rendered "are at ease," signifies also to be insolent; in which sense the words may fitly belong to the ten tribes, who despised Zion and the temple, "which God chose out of all the tribes of Israel, to place his name there." ... Zion, or Jerusalem, and Samaria are the chief seats of the two kingdoms, whither is the greatest resort of the whole nation. ... The Chaldee interprets it, "who give names to their children, according to the names of the chief of the heathen, to whom the house of Israel apply themselves for protection." Thus in the later times, some of the Jews took the names of Alexander, Antipater, Agrippa, and the like, to compliment some great men among the Greeks or Romans of those names. Louth.—Chief of the nations. "First-fruits." (Marg. Note, Jam. 1:16-18, v. 18.)

V. 2. To show the people what little ground they had for their confidence and carnal security, the prophet calls on them to consider some of the neighbouring cities, which had once been flourishing, but probably were then in ruins. Had these cities been more favoured, than the kingdoms of Judah and Israel? Or had they been more prosperous? Or was their border larger? That is, did they more deserve the indignation of God, for their ingratitude? or had they more to "emphatically

V. 3—8. The persons here addressed either thought that no evil would come upon them, or they considered it as very distant: and they supposed that there was no necessity at the present for repentance or reformation. As assured of prosperity and impunity, they ^{called} for the seat of violence, and openly committed iniquity and oppression, under colour of law and justice. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. i, k. Notes, 12—14. 5:10—13, 18—20. Ps. 94:20, 21.) At the same time, they lay down to sleep on beds richly ornamented with ivory, and reclined to feast upon magnificent couches; selecting the best of the lambs and calves for their luxurious and intemperate meals; regaling themselves with songs; inventing instruments of music for their carnal pleasure, as David had done for the honour of God and the service of the sanctuary; and drinking wine, not from small cups, but out of bowls, and to excess; and anointing themselves with the most costly ointments and perfumes. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. l—o. Notes, 5:21—24. Is. 5:11—17, vv. 11, 12. 22:8—14, vv. 12, 13. Luke 12:15—21, v. 20. 16:19—25. Jam. 5:1—6, vv. 4, 5.) Thus they stupefied their consciences, and rendered their hearts callous: so that they disregarded the miseries of their oppressed brethren, and the calamities occasioned to the people, in other parts of the land, by famine, pestilence, and hostile invasions; and those which the prophets foretold were about to come upon them. But these selfish, luxurious persons would be the first who would go into captivity; they would be torn away from their luxurious banquets, to penury, slavery, or death. For the Lord solemnly swore by himself, (or, “by his soul,”) that “he abhorred all the excellency of Jacob,” or all those things on which the descendants of that patriarch valued themselves; whether they were riches, or strength, or outward privileges, or their empty profession of being God's people; especially their splendid palaces, which were builded and maintained by oppression: and he would therefore give them up with all the rich furniture, and jewels, and treasures, with which they were replenished, to be plundered and desolated by the Assyrians and Chaldeans. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. q—r, t—y. Notes, 5:21—24. Ps. 47:4. Ez. 24:19—24.)—The word rendered excellency, often means pride, or arrogance, which God especially abhors.—“These verses” (4—6,) “are an elegant description of the ill uses men too often make of a plentiful fortune; that it shuts out all serious considerations, makes them void of compassion towards those that are in misery; and to regard nothing but the present gratification of their senses. . . . The words allude to the afflicted state of Joseph, when he was sold by his brethren.” Louth. (Marg. Ref. p. Notes, Gen. 37:19—30. 42:21, 22.)

V. 9—11. Previous to that final desolation of the city, the ravages of famine and pestilence would be so great, that in many instances none would survive of the most numerous families. Their relations would be constrained to burn the bodies, (which was not customary in Israel,) or bury the bones of the dead, with very little assistance, and in silence and astonishment. They would scarcely venture to express their griefs to their nearest neighbours and fellow-sufferers; and they would despair of pity or help from God; whom they would suppose to have utterly rejected them, and to be ready to add to their punishment if they presumed to mention his name: thus they would pine away under these calamities, in terror, enmity, and despair. “This obscure verse (10) seems to describe the effects of famine and pestilence, during the siege of Samaria. The carcass shall be burnt, and the bones shall be removed, with no ceremony of funeral rites, and not with the assistance of the nearest kinsmen. Solitude shall reign in the house: and if one is left, he must be silent and retired, lest he be plundered of his scanty provisions.” Bp. Newcombe. For, at the Lord's command, both their stately palaces, and the more humble habitations, would be desolated with proportionable distress, and all ranks involved in one common ruin. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, 5:1—3, 10—14, v. 13. 13:1—3. 9:1—4. 2 Kings 6:32, 33.)

V. 12—14. It was as perilous even to endeavour the reformation of the people, as it would be to ride a race on the top of a craggy rock, where both horses and horsemen would be in great danger of being killed; and as vain, as to plough there with oxen, when no impression could be made or increase expected.—Is it possible that horses should run upon the steep and craggy cliffs? . . . So impossible is it that ye Israelites should continue to prosper, while ye remain thus sinful? Bp. Hall. The ancients did not shoe their horses.—The administration of public justice, and even their religious observances, had proved as nauseous as gall, and as poisonous as hemlock; instead of being a source, or an example, of equity and piety. (Marg. Ref. f, g. Notes, 5:7—9, v. 7. Ps. 94:1—7, 20, 21. Is. 10:1—4.) Yet they continued to rejoice in their idols, their wealth, fortifications, or successes, which were things of no value; and they boasted of being able to provide for their own defence; which was as absurd, as if an animal should suppose, that it had assumed, or could assume, “horns by its own strength.” These boasts perhaps were occasioned by the successes of Jeroboam. (Notes, 2 Kings 14:23—28.) The Lord would therefore raise up against them the Assyrians, who would oppress Israel, as afterwards the Chaldeans would waste Judah: the whole land from one end to the other should be laid desolate. The mention of “the river of the wilderness,” the border of the promised land on the southwest, shows that Judah, as well as Israel, was intended. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. h—i.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Careless sinners in every situation are in constant danger of destruction; but those “who are at ease in Zion,” and possess seared consciences and vain confidence, under the means of grace, are in the most perilous state; and no pre-eminence in rank or station in the church, no distinction of sect or party, will secure those who are destitute of the sanctifying grace of God. Nay, every other advantage, in this case, will increase pride, rebellion, and condemnation.—Ungodly men are prone to put off the evil day: they presume that they shall live many years, and that they shall escape with impunity; or at least, that there is no danger as yet, nor any need of repentance, self-denial, and prayer. Many of them seek to amass wealth by crimes, and spend it in every kind of self-indulgence, and continued pleasure and dissipation; whilst their ingenuity is employed in inventing new methods of gratification, to dissipate reflection, to silence conscience, and harden their hearts. No wonder then that they become insensible to the miseries of the poor, or to the persecutions and afflictions of the church; and that they spend that on their lusts, by which God should have been honoured, and his people relieved; for they are continually neglecting, and even wilfully murdering, their own souls! The just and holy God must abhor the excellency, and hate both the palaces and temples, of such professed Christians. Their carnal ease and riotous banquets will soon be removed; and how dreadful will it be, when luxury and excess shall end in hopeless and endless misery. (Note, Luke 16:24—26.) Even on earth sinners may be so loaded with afflictions, or driven to desperation, that sullen silence and astonishment may seize upon them; and every thought of God, or of Christ, or prayer, may increase their agony, and every temper of hell may be experienced and manifested. Men should therefore take warning not to stifle their convictions, or harden their hearts; and not to discourage the labours of ministers for their good: for if God give them up to obduracy, all efforts to bring them to repentance will be unavailing. Nothing tends more to this judicial obduracy than premeditated injustice; or confidence in our own wisdom, righteousness, and strength, in opposition to the word of God, and from enmity to it; and “those who thus walk in pride, the Lord knoweth how to afflict, or to destroy.”

NOTES.—CHAPTER VII. V. 1—3. The Lord, in vision, showed Amos the judgments which he was about to bring upon Israel. He appeared to him as forming grasshoppers,

CHAPTER VII.

The judgments of grass hoppers and of fire are averted by the prayer of Amos 1-6. By a wall and a plumb-line is shown the strict justice of God in Israel's punishment, 7-9. Amoziah, the priest, accuses Amos to Jeroboam, and forbids him to prophesy at Bethel, 10-13. Amos shows how God had called him to prophesy, and predicts the ruin of Amoziah and his family, 14-17.

THUS hath the Lord God 'showed unto me; and behold, 'he formed 'grasshoppers in the beginning of the shooting up of the latter growth; and lo, it was the latter growth after the king's mowings.

2 And it came to pass, that 'when they had made an end of eating the grass of the land, then I said, 'O Lord God, forgive, I beseech thee: 'by whom shall Jacob arise? 'for he is small.

3 THE LORD 'repented for this: It shall not be, saith the LORD.

4 ¶ Thus hath the Lord God 'showed unto me: and behold, the Lord God 'called to contend by fire, and it devoured the great deep, and did eat up a part.

5 Then said I, O Lord God, 'cease, I beseech thee: by whom shall Jacob arise? 'for he is small.

6 The LORD 'repented for this: This also shall not be, saith the Lord God.

7 ¶ Thus he showed me: and behold, the LORD stood upon 'a wall made by a plumb-line, with a plumb-line in his hand.

8 And the LORD said unto me, 'Amos, what or locusts, in order to send them forth to waste the land. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. a-c. Notes, Joel 1:4-7. 2:1-9, 18, 20.) It is probable that the king was used to take a great part of the first mowing of the meadows, for the provender of his horses; so that the cattle of the people chiefly depended on the second growth, and the failure of that supply would have greatly distressed them.—The prophet seeing in his vision this calamity coming on them, and fearing that it would be inflicted in reality; earnestly interceded for his people, that the Lord would forgive their sin and remit their punishment: for, if he thus proceeded against them, by whom could Jacob, or his church, be recovered from its present enfeebled and desolate condition? This plea, in which the honour of God was nearly concerned, prevailed; and the Lord remitted or mitigated the punishment. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. d-f. Notes, Ez. 32:11-14. Num. 14:13-19. Josh. 7:6-9. Jer. 14:7-9.)—Some suppose this to have been an emblem of the first invasion of the Assyrians, which was not so fatal as might have been expected. After Ahab and his family had reduced Israel to the brink of ruin, they began to revive again under the government of Jehu, his son Joash, and his grandson Jeroboam: yet desolations awaited them from the Assyrians, which would soon begin; but they were restrained, or retarded, in answer to the prayers of the prophets. (Notes, 2 Kings 14:25-27. 15:19, 20.)—It is probable, that Amos made known to the people these visions in order, as he received them.

V. 4-6. God next showed the prophet, that he was preparing to contend with Israel by fire; either by excessive heat and drought, or lightning, or the breaking forth of subterranean fires. This appeared to him to waste, not only the rivers, but the waters of the ocean, as well as to consume a part of the land and the people; which implied, that entire ruin was threatened, and was begun to be inflicted. This induced the prophet to renew his former plea, and with similar success; and the more tremendous effects of the judgment were prevented. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 4:11. Mic. 1:2-4. v. 4. Nah. 1:2-6.)—Some understand this of the ravages that Tiglath-pilezer made in the land, which occasioned only temporary and partial calamities, though they threatened entire desolation. (Notes, 2 Kings 15:29. 1 Chr. 5:25, 26.)

V. 7-9. The Lord next appeared to Amos upon a wall, that had been formed by a plumb-line. This might represent the church of Israel, as originally formed according to those rules, which God, in infinite wisdom, justice, truth, and goodness, had prescribed by Moses. The plumb-line in his hand implied, that he was examining, with exactness, how far the people had deviated from their rule and original constitution, being about to judge and punish them according to their sins. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 2 Kings 21:13. Is. 28:17-19. Rev. 11:1, 2.) This vision seems to have discouraged the seest thou? And I said, A plumb-line. Then said the Lord, Behold, I will set a plumb-line in the midst of my people Israel: 'I will not again pass by them any more:

9 And the high-places of Isaac shall be desolate, and the sanctuaries of Israel shall be laid waste; and 'I will rise against the house of Jeroboam with the sword. [Practical Observations.]

10 ¶ Then Amaziah 'the priest of Beth-el, sent to Jeroboam king of Israel, saying, Amos 'hath conspired against thee in the midst of the house of Israel: the land is 'not able to bear all his words.

11 For 'thus Amos saith, 'Jeroboam shall die by the sword, 'and Israel shall surely be led away captive out of their own land.

12 Also, Amaziah said unto Amos, 'O thou seer, 'go flee thee away into the land of Judah, and there 'eat bread, and prophesy there:

13 But 'prophesy not again any more at Beth-el: 'for it is the king's 'chapel, and it is the 'king's court.

prophet's intercession: he saw their idolatries and iniquities to be so many and heinous, and the judgments predicted against them to be so righteous, that he could say nothing to it. But the Lord, having called his strict attention to the vision, showed him that he was about to proceed against Israel in exact justice; that the threatened and deserved punishment should not be remitted or delayed; that the strong holds, cities, and idolatrous temples should be desolated; and that this would begin in the destruction of the family of Jeroboam by the sword of a conspirator. (Marg. Ref. o-q. Notes, 2 Kings 15:8, 12.)

V. 10, 11. Amaziah, the chief priest, or president over the idolatrous worship, at Beth-el, was highly displeased with Amos for declaring these alarming judgments at that place; and especially for the last, for the preventing of which he had not prayed. (Marg. Ref. r. Notes, 1 Kings 12:26-29, 31. 2 Chr. 13:4-12, vv. 8, 9.) Probably he feared, lest it should set the people against the worship of the golden calves, undermine his credit and interests, and even alienate them from the established government. He therefore sent word to Jeroboam, (who seems to have been then at Samaria,) accusing the prophet of having conspired against him, and of exciting the people to revolt and rebellion: so that "the land was not able to bear all his words," and would certainly be greatly injured, unless he were silenced and punished. (Marg. Ref. s, t. Notes, 1 Kings 18:17. Jer. 18:18. 38:1-6.) But he offered no proof of this conspiracy, except Amos's predictions of approaching judgments: and in reporting his words he bore false witness against him: for he had not said, that "Jeroboam should die by the sword;" but that the Lord "would rise against the house of Jeroboam with the sword," which took place after Jeroboam's death, in the murder of his son Zachariah by Shallum who succeeded him. (2 Kings 15:12.)—He traduces the prophet as a stirrer up of sedition. The same crime was objected to Jeremiah, . . . to Christ, . . . and to St. Paul. Louth. (Marg. Ref. u-y. Notes, Jer. 26:7-9, 11. Matt. 27:57-62. Luke 23:1-5. Acts 6:9-14. 24:1-9, v. 5.)

V. 12, 13. It does not appear that Jeroboam noticed Amaziah's information: either despising the prophet and his predictions, or having a more favourable opinion of him than to suspect him of any seditious design. But Amaziah was desirous of driving him away by any means. He therefore ironically called him "a seer," or a prophet; but intimated that he only meant to get a livelihood by that employment: and he advised or charged him to flee away from Beth-el into the land of Judah, where he would be more welcome, and fare better than in Israel. He must, however, by no means prophesy any more at Beth-el, which was "the king's chapel," or sanctuary, where his established worship was conducted and graced with his presence, and where he had a palace and kept his court. It was therefore very improper and not tolerable, that he should revile the king's religion, and denounce the judgments of God against him and his family and people, in the very place where his chapel and court were.—“Thou shalt not add to prophecy.” Heb. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, 1 Sam. 9:5-10, vv. 7-9. 1 Kings 13:1, 2.)

V. 14-17. Amos answered Amaziah with great boldness, yet with modesty and propriety. He declared, that he had not formerly been a prophet, nor was his father a prophet; nor had he been educated in the schools of the prophets. But he had been a herdsman, and a gatherer of a fruit, (a wild fig), which grew on some kind of sycamore-trees, and was used for food by the poor people, or perhaps by the cattle. In these rural occupations he had been inured to hard labour and homely fare: and he had followed them contentedly, till the Lord, by express revelation, commanded him to go and prophesy to his people. (Marg. Ref. e, f. Notes, 1 Kings 19:20, 21. 2 Kings 2:3. 4:1. Zech. 13:4-6.) Yet Amaziah, in direct opposition to the divine mandate, forbade his prophesying against Israel, or dropping a word against that people at Beth-el! (Marg. and Marg. Ref. g-1. Note, Deut. 32:2.) The prophet was therefore commissioned to denounce: sentence against him; that his wife, through either extreme indigence or licentiousness, should become a harlot in the streets of Beth-el; that his children should be slain by the sword of war or of the murderer; that his estates should be divided by line among those who seized on it; that he should die in a heathen land; and that Israel would surely go into captivity unto another land. (Marg. Ref. m-p. Notes, 2:9-12, p. 12. Jer. 20:1-6. 28:15-17. 29:21-23, 24-32. vv. 31, 32. Hos. 4:12-14. Acts 4:13-22, vv. 17-20. 5:27-31.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-9. The prayers of pious ministers and believers avert many calamities from churches and nations, which would otherwise overwhelm them: though this is seldom considered, or brought into the account, in the measures of princes and senates.—Those who most faithfully denounce the terrors of the Lord against sinners, should be most earnest in prayers for their repentance and forgiveness.—The low estate of the church, and of any part of it, may be pleaded with God as a reason why he should pardon and spare it: for it is his cause; he would be deprived of his revenue of worship and honour, should it be totally ruined; and none but he can raise Jacob from his low estate, when he is so weak and has so many and powerful enemies.—Our gracious God will for a time regard his people's prayers for their irreligious neighbours and relatives, and defer the execution of deserved punishment: but he will at length examine the cause of every community and individual, by the line and standard of his word: and then all the unbelieving and impenitent will be condemned; and even they, who have before most earnestly pleaded in their behalf, will have no more to say for them. (Note, Luke 13:6-9. P. O. 1-9.)

V. 10-17. No fervent prayers or self-denying labours of ministers, can induce proud sinners to bear with their faithful reproofs and warnings. They will be accused of wishing for those miseries, which they warn men to flee from; their opposition to established impieties and iniquities will be construed into disaffection, or rebellion against the king or common wealth; and their ministry will often be considered as an intolerable grievance. Men in general cannot bear with their alarming and reproving words: but mercenary and ambitious priests, the ringleaders of heresy, or superstition, or idolatry, will be the most inveterate and intolerant. Men of this character have commonly been false accusers of the Lord's servants to princes, and the first movers of persecution: for their reputation, authority, and quiet enjoyment of their preferments, are endangered by the prevalence of truth and righteousness. Sometimes, however, even irreligious or idolatrous princes have been indisposed to listen to their insinuations, or to adopt their counsels; and they have been forced to employ menaces against those, whom they would have more imperiously silenced, if they could: or they have given them counsel, that savoured of their own character. They will perhaps intimate, where and how ministers are most likely to obtain preferment, or to escape the cross; but not where good may be done to souls. They consider it as the extreme of folly, insolence, or rusticity, to declare alarming offensive truths before the great; or where error, impiety, and vice are sanctioned by high authority, long established customs, or eminent examples: as if smooth and soothing heresies alone were fit to be prophesied in the chapels of kings, and soft deceitful words alone would pass current in their palaces! and as if they were the enviable prerogative of royalty and privilege of nobility, to tread, unmolested and unadmonished, the broad road to everlasting misery! Indeed none ought to intrude themselves into such places and services: nor are all, who are called to the ministry, qualified to assails iniquity, impiety, infidelity, or superstition, in these strong-holds. But when the Lord has work to do of an extraordinary kind, he will raise up and furnish proper instruments for it. In doing this, he often deviates from men's rules, and takes such as have not been regularly educated, but perhaps were engaged in some laborious occupation, where they were inured to hardship, kept at a distance from the luxuries and indulgences of the affluent, and taught indifference to the interests and splendour of the world. They, however, who are selected to these services, must declare the whole word of God, without reserve, or respect of persons, to princes or people, to whatever treatment they may be exposed: and those who oppose or attempt to silence them, will do it at their peril. We cannot indeed speak too humbly of ourselves and our poor attainments and services, but as ministers we ought to “magnify our office,” and though we should not apply the denunciations or examples of God's word personally to our opposers; yet we should not hesitate to declare, that they, who despise the least of those whom the Lord sends forth to preach his word, are despisers of him; and that all who injure them may expect severe rebukes, in their families, persons, and circumstances, and even fatal effects to their souls, except they repent. Nor can the most haughty and powerful prevent any of those judgments, the denunciation of which offends them; while their opposition provokes God to contend with them in particular, as his avowed adversaries.

2 And he said, ¹Amos, what seest thou? And I said, ²A basket of summer-fruit. Then said the LORD unto me, ³The end is come upon my people of Israel; ⁴I will not again pass by them any more.

NOTES.—CHAP. VIII. V. 1-3. Under the emblem of a basket of summer-fruit, which must be used immediately or it will perish, the speedy approach of the predicted judgments upon Israel was denoted, for which they were fully ripe. (Marg. Ref. b-e. Notes, 7:7-9. Is. 28:1-4, v. 4. Jer. 1:11, 12. 24:1. Ez. 7:2-11.) This may be supposed to have begun in the murder of Zachariah the son of Jeroboam: as the subsequent contests, between the successive usurpers of the throne, made way for the Assyrian invasions, which terminated in the entire ruin of the kingdom of Israel. (Notes, 2 Kings 15:3-30. 17:1-6.) These approaching events would turn the songs, which were used in the temple of Beth-el, or those of their other idol-temples, or in the palace, into howlings of terror and despair. Numbers would die in every place by the sword, pestilence, and famine, whose bodies the survivors would cast forth, without the customary solemnities of burial; as hardened in grief, and regardless of their nearest friends and relatives, through anxious concern for their own safety. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. f-h. Notes, 4-10, vv. 9, 10. 6:9-11. Lev. 10:3-6. Hos. 10:5, 6.)

V. 4-10. The rich and powerful in Israel were exceedingly addicted to injustice and cruel oppression, as well as ringleaders in impiety and idolatry: and the approaching calamities would fall more heavily on them than on others. They ought therefore to consider how they might escape, or how they could endure, such miseries: instead of oppressing the poor, as if they would devour and extirpate them by their exactions. (Marg. Ref. i, k. Notes, 2:6-8. 5:10-13, vv. 11, 12.) It seems, that trade and commerce were suspended, even in the kingdom of Israel, on the new moons and sabbath-days, which they observed with some forms of devotion. But this was a weariness to the covetous oppressors; who were ready to say to themselves, and to each other, “When will this tedious day be over? When will this wearisome task of religion be ended? They longed to return to their worldly pursuits: they were in haste to set forth corn and may 'set forth wheat, 'making the ephah small, and the shekel great, and 'falsifying the balances by deceit?

6 That we may 'buy the poor for silver, and the needy for a pair of shoes; yea, and sell the refuse of the wheat?

7 The LORD hath 'sworn by the excellency of Jacob, Surely 'I will never forget any of their works.

8 Shall not 'the land tremble for this, and 'every one mourn that dwelleth therein? and it shall 'rise up wholly as a flood: and it shall be cast out and drowned, as by the flood of Egypt.

9 And it shall come to pass in that day, saith the Lord God, 'that I will cause the sun to go down at noon, 'and I will darken the earth in the clear day:

10 And 'I will turn your feasts into mourning, and all your songs into lamentation; and I will bring up 'sackcloth upon all loins, and baldness upon every head; and I will make it 'as the mourning of an only son, and the end thereof as 'a bitter day.

11 ¶ Behold, the days come, saith the Lord God, that I will send a famine in the land, not a famine of bread, nor a thirst for water, 'but of hearing the words of the LORD:

12 And they shall wander from sea to sea, and from the north even to the east, they 'shall run to and fro to seek the word of the LORD, and shall not find it.

13 In that day shall 'the fair virgins and young men faint for thirst.

14 They that 'sware by the 'sin of Samaria, and say, Thy god, O Dan, liveth; and, The 'manner of 'Beer-sheba liveth; even they 'shall fall, and never rise up again.

other provisions to sale, in order to increase their riches. In managing this traffic, which so nearly concerned the labouring poor, they made "the ephah," or bushel, too small, and thus cheated in the quantity of what they sold; and they weighed the silver, with which they were paid, by too heavy a weight, and thus cheated in the sum which they took for it; nay, they used artifice in the act of weighing, and imposed in that way also on their customers; and they even took advantage of the people's necessities, to sell the refuse-corn, which was scarcely fit for use. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. 1—o. Notes, Neh. 13:15—22. Prov. 11:1. Is. 58:13, 14. Mic. 6:10—15. 7:1—4. Mal. 1:12—14. Rom. 8:5—9.) By these methods, the poor became their debtors, and they obtained a supposed right to sell them for slaves; which they inhumanly took advantage of, when they gained a very trivial sum by depriving them of liberty. (Marg. Ref. p. Notes, 1:6—8. 2:6—8. Neh. 5:1—13. Joel 3:3—8. v. 3:6—8.) But the Lord swore by himself, who was the real "Excellency of Israel," or most honourable distinction of his people, that he would never forget or omit to punish any of their works. (Marg. Ref. r. Notes, Is. 43:22—25, v. 25. Jer. 31:33, 34. Hos. 7:1—3, v. 2:8. 13:9, 10.) These crimes would provoke him to send upon them those judgments, which would make the land to tremble, as in an earthquake; it would be desolated by overwhelming calamities from one end to another, as Egypt is annually covered by an inundation of the Nile; the prosperity and hopeful prospects of the people would be suddenly darkened, as if "the sun should go down at noonday," and the clear light should at once be exchanged for midnight darkness. Their idolatrous or sensual feasts, and the songs accompanying them, would be turned into lamentations; every expression of extreme grief and dejection would be universally employed by the survivors, as if each of them had lost an only child; and instead of a joyful end to their troubles, they would terminate most bitterly, in the captivity and dispersion of the nation. (Marg. Ref. s—b. Notes, 1:3. 5:7—9. 6:3—8. 9:5. 6. Ps. 114:3—5. Is. 8:6—8. 13:9, 10. 24:17—22. Jer. 4:19—27. 15:8, 9. Joel 2:28—32, vv. 30, 31. Zech. 12:9—14, v. 10.)

V. 11—14. In accession to all outward miseries, the remnant of Israel would be visited with "a famine," not of bread only, and with "thirst," not for water only, but "of hearing the words of the LORD;" and they would wander far and wide to seek information of the will of God respecting them, and yet entirely lose their labour.—The kingdom of Israel seems to have been favoured with fewer prophets, during some time before the Assyrian captivity, than in former ages. After that catastrophe, the motley people and religion of the Samaritans succeeded in the land. The dispersed Israelites were either incorporated with the heathen: or lived without prophets, or teachers qualified to explain the Scriptures to them, and far removed from divine ordinances and means of grace: nor could any of their efforts or inquiries supply this want to their souls. (Marg. Ref. d, e. Notes, Ps. 74:9. Is. 5:5, 6. 30:20, 21. Ez. 7:25, 26. Hos. 3:4, 5. Mic. 3:5—7. Rom. 11:7—10.) But some think, and not improbably, that the present state of the Jews was also predicted. After they rejected Christ and his apostles and ministers, they were punished with a famine and thirst of the words of God: and in vain have they ever since sought and waited for another Messiah, or other teachers, to instruct them in his truth and will.—In that day, it was predicted, "the fair virgins and young men would faint for thirst," which may mean, that the most amiable and zealous, who were best disposed to religion, would rest in outward forms and decency of conduct; and, being destitute of "the wells of salvation," would at last perish for want of that water of life, which Christ alone can bestow.

Marg. Ref. f. Notes, Is. 40:27—31, vv. 30, 31. Zech. 9:17.)

Thus, those who swear, as an act of solemn worship, by the idols which were the sin of Samaria, by the golden calf that was the god of Dan, and by the idol which was worshipped at Beer-sheba, after the manner prescribed there by its priests, would at length be punished. Though this was a dead idol, they swore by it as the living God! But they would fall to rise no more. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, 5:4—6. 1 Kings 12:26—29. 14:14—16. 16:24. Hos. 8:5, 6. 10:5, 6. 13:1, 2. Zeph. 1:5.)—From the north even to the east. (12) "The prophet omits naming the south; because the idolaters, to whom he directs his discourse, would choose to inquire any where rather than of the true prophets of the Lord; (1 Kings 22:7. 2 Kings 3:1.) who dwell in... Judah, which was situated in the southern parts of the nation." Louth.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

We should carefully notice, and endeavour to deduce instruction from, every discovery which it may please God to afford us of his truth and will.—Nothing tends more to alarm the consciences of careless sinners, than a conviction that their end draws near, and that the Lord is about to punish them for their transgressions; but if men will not take warning, and improve present mercies and opportunities; their carnal mirth, self-confident joy, and hypocritical songs of praise, will soon end in howlings of terror and despair.—Those who are most averse to hear the awful messages of God, should on some occasions be more directly addressed.—Times of public calamity will be peculiarly dreadful to the sensual, the avaricious, and the secure.—The ordinances of God must be a weariness to the carnal mind; the sabbath will therefore either be profaned, or be a dull and heavy day; the sermon and service will be thought intolerably tedious; the return of these seasons will be considered as a sad deduction from the enjoyment, or interruption of the business, of life; for such persons are all the time out of their element. And could we witness the fraudulent and covetous practices, which, in diversified forms, render the mercantile transactions of numbers "an abomination to the LORD," we should not wonder to see them so averse to his worship, or so soon weary of it; for their consciences cannot but be at some times disquieted, as well as their darling pursuits interrupted, by such spiritual exercises. But what place will they be fit for in another world, who have here delighted in iniquity and ungodliness? They may conceal their works, or forget them; but the Lord registers them all in his book of remembrance; and, seeing nations tremble and mourn for sin, and dark and gloomy calamities spread most flourishing kingdoms, and turn all their joys into howlings and distress; what will be "the weeping, and wailing, and gnashing of teeth" which sinners will experience, in that "bitter day," which will succeed to their sinful and sensual pleasures!—No earthly calamity should be so much dreaded, as the want of the instructions of God's word, and the means of grace: this is a far more fatal famine, than that which only kills the body; as it directly leads to the miserable perdition of the immortal soul. This judgment is often inflicted on those, who abuse, despise, or neglect the gospel; and who prefer antisciptural notions and forms to the religion of the Bible. (Note, John 12:34—36. P. O. 34—50.) When God in anger thus visits a degenerate church, their own schemes and endeavours, to find out a way of salvation, will stand them in no stead. Let us then value, and seek to profit by, our peculiar advantages, and fear provoking God to deprive us of them: and let it be remembered, that even if these blessings be continued in our land, death will soon remove ungodly men to that place, "where there is no repentance unto salvation," and where "the filthy continue filthy still;" for they, who fall into that pit of destruction shall rise no more for ever.

NOTES.—CHAP. IX. V. 1-4. The altar, on which the prophet in vision saw the Lord standing, and giving orders for the destruction of the temple and the worshippers, is generally understood of the altar at Beth-el: for the sacrifices offered on it to the golden calf chiefly provoked God to take vengeance on Israel. He therefore from thence commissioned the Assyrians, to smite the lintel of the door, and cause its posts and pillars to shake; to destroy that temple and put an end to that idolatry; and mortally to wound the king, princes, priests, and people, who worshipped there; for he was determined to slay the last of them by the sword of his vengeance, from which there should be no method of escape. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. a-e. Notes, 2:14-16. 3:9-15, v. 14. 8:1-3. Ps. 68:21. Is. 6:1-4. Hab. 3:12, 13.) But as the vision seems to coincide with some predictions of the Lord's departure from the temple at Jerusalem; (Notes, Ez. 8: 9: 10: 11:) it may be questioned, whether that event were not also intended by the Spirit of prophecy.—The devoted objects, however, of the divine indignation would find no place of refuge from their omnipresent and omnipotent Avenger. Could they even dig to the centre of the earth, or descend to the place of condemned spirits, his hand would there arrest them: could they climb up into heaven, his arm would cast them down: should they hide themselves in the rocks, at the summit of mount Carmel, he would search them out, and drag them from their recesses: or should they endeavour to elude his search by diving to the bottom of the ocean, he would order the serpent, or some destructive sea-monster, to bite or devour them there. The executioners of his vengeance would pursue them into every place whither they fled from them: and even the remnant, that would be dispersed, as captives and slaves in the land of their enemies, would be followed by the destroying sword; for the Lord would watch over them for evil and not for good. (Marg. Ref. f-k. Notes, Ps. 139:7-12. Is. 14:12-15. 27:1. Jer. 16:16. 23:23, 24.)—The contrast between hell and heaven (2) shows that the unseen world, and not the grave, is here meant. (Note, Ps. 16:8-11.)

V. 5, 6. The eternal, almighty God, would even cause the land to melt like wax at his touch; and all the inhabitants to mourn because of the wide-spreading calamities which would follow. For it was he "who formed" and occupied the heavens as his "chambers," or exalted throne; who has appointed the creatures of this lower world as a "troop" of his armies, to annoy his enemies; and who can at his pleasure, bring all the waters of the ocean to cover the whole earth.—"The power and sure vengeance of the Deity are very abundantly described in this and the four preceding verses." Bp. Newcombe. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, 5:7-9, v. 8. 8:4-10, v. 8. Gen. 2:1. Ps. 46:6. 93:3, 4. 104:3. Is. 64:1. 3. Mic. 1:2-4. Nah. 1:2-6. Hab. 3:9, 10. 2 Pet. 3:5-7, * 10-13. 9:24, 25, 10:6, 7.)—"The sense seems to be, Trust not in you ancestors who were so highly favoured by me. Your vices have made you vile in my sight. Trust not in my deliverance of you from the land of Egypt. . . . Other nations have been transplanted into fertile countries as well as you, and particularly your neighbouring enemies." Bp. Newcombe.—Little is certainly known about the events here referred to doubtless they were well known in the prophet's days. (Marg. Ref. x, y.)—But though the Lord would destroy the sinful kingdom of Israel from off the earth; yet he would not utterly extirpate all the posterity of Jacob. He intended to scatter the remnant of them through all nations, and to harass them with manifold calamities, as the corn is shaken in the sieve: yet he would preserve all that were valuable of them with the most exact care, and not suffer one of them, however mean and inconsiderable, to perish. (Notes, Luke 22:31-34. John 6:30-40. 1 Pet. 1:3-5.) The astonishing preservation of the Jews as a distinct people, through all their dispersions to the present day, is here evidently predicted (Marg. and Marg. Ref. z-e. Notes, Num. 23:9. Is. 6:11-13. 27:7-11. Jer. 30:10, 11. 31:35-37. 46:27, 28. Hos. 1:11. 3:4, 5. Matt. 3:11, 12. Rom. 11:1-6, 25-32.)—"I will mingle the Israelites among all nations, just as good and bad grain are mingled in a sieve: but will so order it, that none of the good grain shall be lost. Louth. "Though I will thus mix the Israelites with distant nations; yet there shall be a general restoration of them to their own land. . . . The most secure and presumptuous sinners of the Israelites shall fall by the sword." Bp. Newcombe.—The whole house of Jacob, the families brought out of Egypt, are here certainly intended, and not the ten tribes only.

V. 11, 12. "On the restoration of the Jews after their captivity, the Messiah came, and the Gentiles (or the rest of mankind besides the Jews) were admitted into the church: and on the future grand restoration of the Jews, the borders of the Christian church will be enlarged among the Gentiles." Bp. Newcombe.—The foregoing prophecy evidently included the rejection of the Jews, and their dispersion by the Romans, with which the establishment of the Messiah's kingdom was closely connected. The palace of David became "a tabernacle," by the defection of the ten tribes and by subsequent calamities: this tabernacle fell down at the Babylonian captivity, and it lay in ruins till the coming of Christ: so that these expressions may denote the mean estate of David's family, the degeneracy of Judah, and the very depressed state of true religion. But by the incarnation and birth of Christ, the Seed of David, and in consequence of his death, resurrection, ascension, and heavenly exaltation, that "tabernacle" was again erected, its breaches were closed, its ruins repaired, and it was advanced to far greater prosperity, than even in the days of David and Solomon. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, Is. 9:6, 7. 11:1-10. Jer. 23:5, 6. Ez. 17:22-24. Hos. 3:4, 5.) The kingdom of the Son of David became conspicuous, glorious, and extensive: it acquired the ascendancy over its enemies, many of whom became the subjects of Edom, and of all the heathen ^m which are called by my name, saith the LORD that doeth this.

13 Behold, the days come, saith the LORD, that ^athe ploughman shall overtake the reaper, and the treader of grapes him that ^ssoweth seed; and ^tthe mountains shall drop ^ssweet wine, and all ^tthe hills shall melt.

Christ; and this was the case among the heathen nations in general; they were called by the grace and by the name of Christ; the LORD JEHOVAH here spoken of, who predicted and performed all these things: for the Gentile converts, as well as other Christians, were called by the name of Christ, and called upon his name. (Note, Acts 15:13-18, vv. 16, 17.) The apostle's quotation comes nearer to the translation of the LXX than to the Hebrew: though it rather gives the general sense, than the words of the former. Especially, instead of "That they may possess the remnant of Edom;" it is in the Acts, "That the residue of men might seek after the Lord, &c." The LXX translators seem to have read Yidrasu, instead of Yirashu, and Adam instead of Edom.—It is however plain, on either reading, that the conversion of the Gentiles, and not the reducing of them to subjection, is predicted. "That they may be heirs with the remnant of Edom, and with all the nations which are called by my name," or "upon which my name is called." (Marg. and Marg. Ref. l.)

V. 13-15. ^a As the prophecy in the foregoing verse was to commence from the coming of Christ, but not to receive its full completion, till the fulness both of Jews and Gentiles come into the church: so these verses ought to be understood of the happy state of the Millennium, which may be supposed to begin, after the Jews are restored to their country. (Joel 3:18.) ^b Louth.—"This part of the prophecy will receive its completion, on the future restoration of the Jews to their land." ^c Neucombe. The passage may have some reference to the primitive times; but will receive a more glorious accomplishment in those expected events which all the prophets more or less foretold.—The plenteous harvest would take up so much time in gathering and securing, that the ploughman, preparing to sow for the ensuing crop, would overtake the reaper; whilst the treader out of the grapes would immediately follow: all hands would be full of business, and all meet with much encouragement and advantage. This represents the great diligence and success of the preachers of the gospel, and the vast numbers of flourishing and joyful converts, which they shall then make. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, Lev. 26:5. John 4:35-38.) The mountains dropping sweet wine, and the hills melting into rivulets of wine or oil, denote the abundant consolations and fruitfulness of believers, through the abundant influences of the Holy Spirit upon their souls. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. o, p. Notes, Is. 30:23-25. 35:1, 2. 55:12, 13. Hos. 14:4-8. Joel 3:18-21.) Then the Lord will bring again the captivity of his people, and they will be planted and prosper in their own land, and will no more be pulled up out of it. (Marg. Ref. q-t. Notes, 5:10-13, v. 11. return of the Jews from the Babylonish captivity; for they were afterwards driven out of their land by the Romans, and continue excluded from it to this day; so that the future conversion of the Jews, and their restoration to their own land, and the security and felicity of the church in times to come, must be here predicted.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Hypocrisy, the obstinate preference of human inventions and traditions to God's appointments, and idolatrous and superstitious observances of divers kinds, render men's religious observances their most heinous and ruinous crimes.—Wherever ungodly men flee to hide themselves, they meet the frown and vengeance of their offended Sovereign, which would suffice to turn a local heaven into a real hell. Wretched then must they be, on whom the Lord "sets his eyes for evil, and not for good," for all creatures are ready at his command to pursue and fight against his enemies.—When professed Christians copy the crimes of infidels or idolaters, they become still more abominable in the sight of God: and no external advantages, or favours, can prove us the objects of his special covenanted love. While he watches over sinful kingdoms to destroy them; he will not fail to preserve his church. His servants may be scattered, persecuted, tempted, and harassed in a variety of ways; but not one of them shall be lost: for the least true believer shall infallibly be taken care of, through all the revolutions of nations, in the hour of death, and amidst the convulsions of expiring nature; but the tares will be gathered from amidst the wheat, and cast into the fire to be burned; and then hypocrites will know the truth of those threatnings, which they here presumptuously despised.—Blessed be God, we live in the days, when the kingdom of David is set up, in the Person of his Son the divine Redeemer, and we Gentiles are become his possession and are called by his name; let us be thankful for our privileges, and endeavour to walk worthy of them. Yet we still witness many breaches in the tabernacle of our King: many divisions, abuses, and scandals yet deform the church; the power of godliness is declined in many parts of it; other parts of it are harassed by oppressions and persecutions; and a great part of mankind yet continue strangers and enemies to the gospel; we should therefore continue in prayer for the complete performance of these predictions, in the more perfect peace, purity, and beauty of the church; in the increase of diligent, able, faithful, and successful ministers; in the ruin of all obstinate enemies; and in the conversion of Jews, Gentiles, and Mohammedans to the faith of Christ.—But only in heaven shall we be so planted and established, as to experience no more changes, fears, temptations, sins, or sorrows: for there alone is fulness of joy for evermore.

THE BOOK OF OBADIAH.

It is probable, that Obadiah delivered this short prophecy, about the time when Jerusalem was destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar.—Obadiah signifies the servant of the LORD, which was a common name in Israel: but the prophet Obadiah must be distinguished from all others that bore it.—He seems to have been contemporary with Jeremiah, and uses several of the same expressions in prophesying against Edom as Jeremiah did: (Jer. 49:7-22.) and he concludes, (as almost all the other prophets do,) with predicting victory and prosperity to Israel and to the church.

A prediction of the ruin of Edom for his pride, and his malice against the descendants of his brother Jacob, 1-16. Promises of glorious times, in the latter ages, 17-21.

THE vision of Obadiah. Thus saith the LORD God ^aconcerning Edom; ^bWe have heard a rumour from the LORD, ^cand an ambassador is sent among the heathen, ^dArise ye, and let us rise up against her in battle.

this vision alone was preserved for the benefit of future generations.—The prophets had heard a report from the LORD, though thou set thy nest ^{among} the stars, thence will I bring thee down, saith the LORD.

5 If thieves came to thee, if robbers by night, ("how art thou cut off!") would they not have stolen till they had enough? if the grape-gatherers came to thee, would they not leave ^{some} grapes?

6 How ^{are} the things of Esau searched out! how ^{are} his hidden things sought up!

7 All ^{the} men of thy confederacy have brought thee ^{even} to the border: the men that were at peace with thee have deceived thee, and prevailed against thee; ^{they that eat thy bread have laid a wound under thee: there is none understanding} in him.

8 Shall I not in that day, saith the LORD, ^{even} destroy the wise men out of Edom, and understanding out of the mount of Esau?

9 And ^{thy} mighty men, O Teman, shall be dismayed, to the end that ^{every} one of the mount of Esau may be cut off by slaughter.

[Practical Observations.]

10 ¶ For thy violence against thy brother Jacob, ^{shame} shall cover thee, and thou shalt be cut off for ever.

11 In the day that thou stoodest on the other side, ⁱⁿ the day that the strangers carried away captive his forces, and foreigners entered into his gates, and cast lots upon Jerusalem, ^{even} thou wast as one of them.

12 But ^{thou} shouldest not have looked on the day of thy brother in the day that he became a stranger; neither shouldest thou have rejoiced over the children of Judah in the day of their destruction; neither shouldest thou have spoken proudly in the day of distress.

13 Thou shouldest not have entered into the gate of my people in the day of their calamity; yea, thou shouldest not have looked on their affliction in the day of their calamity, nor have laid hands on their substance in the day of their calamity;

14 Neither shouldest thou have stood in the crossway, to cut off those of his that did escape; neither shouldest thou have delivered up those of his that did remain ⁱⁿ the day of distress.

15 For the day of the LORD is near upon all the heathen: ^{as} thou hast done, it shall be done unto thee: thy reward shall return upon thine own head.

16 For ^{as} ye have drunk upon my holy mountain, so shall all the heathen drink continually, yea, they shall drink, and they shall swallow down, and they shall be as though they had not been.

that ruin was preparing for the insulting enemies of the Jews, the Edomites; and ambassadors were sent among the nations, to excite each other to war against them; by which means the Lord would shortly make them small and greatly despised among their heathen neighbours. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Jer. 49:14, 15. Lam. 4:21, 22.)

V. 3-6. (Notes, Jer. 49:9-11, 16.) The Edomites inhabited a mountainous country, which they had strongly fortified: they had for some time been prospered, and they proudly confided in their strength and munitions, and concluded that no enemy could prevail against them. But the Lord was become their adversary; and even if they were like the eagle, which builds her nest at the top of the loftiest cedar; nay, if they could exalt themselves as much above their other enemies, as the stars are out of the reach of man; yet he would certainly bring them down, and their pride would only help to deceive and ruin them. With astonishment the prophet saw, as it were, the hostile invaders not only making depredations and slaughter, and then departing; but cutting off all their multitudes and ransacking their most secret treasures, till they had plundered the whole of them. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, Job 20:4-9. 39:26-30. Prov. 11:2. Is. 14:12-15. 16:6. Jer. 51:52, 53. Am. 9:1-4. Rev. 18:4-8.)

V. 7-9. These calamities would be brought upon Edom, by the defection and treachery of all their confederates; who would march to their borders as if to assist them, and induce them to go forth to meet them as friends, and thus deceive and prevail against them. The very troops, that took pay to defend them, would most fatally assault them; nor would they have understanding to see or avoid this danger, or to take warning from this prediction.—Those that were maintained at thy cost, as thine allies, have given thee a secret blow which thou wast not aware of. Louth.—The Edomites seem to have been joined in alliance with the Chaldeans and tributary to them, when Jerusalem was taken: but within about five years after, they and their confederates invaded and desolated Edom.

V. 10-14. The prophet shows, what the conduct of Edom towards his brother Jacob ought to have been; and thus, with peculiar energy, by the implied contrast with their actual conduct, in the several circumstances adduced, exposes the cruelty, violence, insolence, rapacity, and treachery, which he had committed in various ways, during the distresses of the nation. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, Gen. 27:39-42. Ps. 137:7-9. v. 7. Ez. 25:12-14. 35: Joel 3:3-8, v. 3. Am. 1:9-11. Mal. 1:2-5.)

V. 15, 16. Israel and Judah had experienced a day of the Lord's righteous judgment on them for their sins, by the hands of the Assyrians and Chaldeans, and their allies; while the Gentiles seemed to escape with impunity, and to prosper in their wickedness: but the day of the Lord was at hand, in which he would judge all those nations, that had injured his people, and retaliate their oppressions upon them. The Jews had drunk the cup of God's indignation, even on mount Zion:

and the heathen should drink, continually and abundantly, of the same cup, until they were utterly destroyed.—The ruin of the several nations which bordered on Israel and had fought against him, was predicted; but they were types of the enemies of the Christian church, who will be utterly destroyed in due season. (Notes, Is. 34: 63:1-6.) 'The prophet speaks of the Jews here, as already under a state of captivity; as they actually were before this prophecy was fulfilled.' Louth. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Ps. 76:10. Is. 49:24-26. 51: 17-23. Jer. 25:13-28. 49:12. Lam. 4:21, 22. 1 Pet. 4:17-19.)

V. 17-21. When this prophecy was delivered, mount Zion either lay desolate, or was about immediately to be desolated, while the enemies of the Jews had dominion over them.—"But upon mount Zion shall be those that escape," (or an escaping): "and it shall be holy." Bp. Newcombe.—Thus it was foretold, that there would be "deliverance and holiness" at Jerusalem, and that the house of Jacob would again occupy their ancient possessions. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. p-r. Notes, Is. 2:2-5. 4:3, 4. Joel 2:28-32. v. 32. 3:9-17. v. 16, 17.) Then Israel and Judah would become as a flame to consume the Edomites as stubble, till they were utterly destroyed; and the remnant of the people, who were at that time captives, would not only possess the land of Canaan, but the adjoining districts; which they would take out of the hands of those who now oppressed them.—The remaining tribes would possess the country, which had belonged to those who continued in their dispersions, to the utmost borders of the promised land, and even beyond them. (Marg. Ref. s-x. Notes, Is. 11:11-16, v. 14. Ez. 38:18-23. Joel 3:18-21, v. 19.20. Mic. 5:7-9. Zech. 12:6-8.) Thus one part of Judah would possess mount Seir to the south; and another the land of the Philistines towards the west; and others would recover possession of mount Ephraim and Samaria, though at that time possessed by strangers. Benjamin would inherit Gilead, beyond Jordan, which the Ammonites had seized on; and the residue of the ten tribes would gain possession of all the country, formerly inhabited by the Canaanites, even to Zarephah, or Sarepta, which bordered on Zidon. It is not agreed, what is meant by Sepharad: but some think, that it was the name of a city in Edom, which the remnant of those, who were led captive from Jerusalem, would possess with the cities of the south. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. y-e. Notes, Zeph. 2:4-7.) For "saviours," or deliverers would be raised up on mount Zion, to judge and execute vengeance on the Edomites; and the kingdom or dominion, would actually be possessed and exercised by ИЕХОВАН, for the benefit of his worshippers. (Marg. Ref. f, h.)—Many parts of this prophecy were accomplished, when the Jews returned to their own land by Cyrus's decree; when the temple was rebuilt, and the worship of God restored; when Jerusalem was re-established in prosperity, and the land replenished with inhabitants; when the Jews, under the Maccabees and other leaders entirely subjugated the Edomites, and incorporated the remnant of them among themselves as proselytes; and in their subsequent prosperity, till the days of Christ.—No mention is made of the Philistines in the New Testament. They seem, before that time, to have been extirpated from the land.—But the salvation and holiness of the gospel, its success and spread, by the faithful preaching of the word, and the conversion of the Gentiles, were also intended; especially the future restoration of Israel, the destruction of antichristian opposers, and that prosperous state of the church, to which all the prophets evidently bear witness. Then, and not till then, in the full sense of the words, shall “the kingdom be the Lord’s.” (Notes, Dan. 2:34, 35, 44, 45. 7:13, 14, 19—27. Matt. 6:10. Rev. 11:15—18.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—9. The Lord exalts or abases individuals or collective bodies, and renders nations honourable or contemptible, “according to the counsel of his own will;” but always in perfect wisdom, justice, truth, and goodness.—Self-confidence, reliance on external advantages, ambitious projects, and carnal security, uniformly lead to calamity and contempt; and thus the pride of men’s hearts deceive them. No exaltation or power can secure those, whom God is concerned in honour to bring down.—Renowned warriors are generally the most rapacious and insatiable of all thieves and robbers; the prosperity of others only excites and sharpens their appetite for plunder; and thus riches conduce to the ruin of their possessors.—They who rely on plausible and mercenary helpers are deficient in understanding: for there is so much treachery in man, that such confederates commonly give the most fatal wounds. They only are happy who trust in the Lord, for in the day of his displeasure, he destroys the wisdom of the prudent, and mars the courage of the mighty, that all his enemies may receive deserved punishment; and his friends may be rescued from oppression, and rejoice with thankful praises in his salvation.

V. 10—21. God will surely confound those who oppress their brethren, of the same nature with themselves; and those especially who hate such as the Lord loves, and afflict them because they belong to him. They who rejoice in the calamities which others inflict, will be numbered among the oppressors; and all that would escape their doom, must take care not to sanction their cruelties by their presence or approbation in any way. It is criminal to behold, with the least degree of satisfaction, or even without deep concern and compassion, the distresses of our neighbours; and far more heinously wicked to insult over them under their calamities. If we cannot enter the doors of the oppressed and afflicted, to sympathize with them, and to sooth or relieve their sorrows; we had better keep at a distance, lest we should increase their distress, or appear to take pleasure in their misery. How base then must they be, who seize on such opportunities to lay hands on the property of their neighbours, or to wreak their revenge or satiate their cruelty, by giving assistance to the principal actors in these bloody tragedies!—But let both the sorrowful believer and the insolent oppressor know, that “the day of the Lord is near upon all the heathen;” that the injuries, which the persecuted have endured, will be recompensed upon their persecutors, who will drink of that cup, which they have been employed as willing instruments in putting into the hands of others; and that the troubles of the righteous will soon be over, but those of the wicked will be eternal and complete. (Note, 2 Thes. 1:5—10.) Happy then is the inhabitant of Zion, even in the most afflicted times! there alone is deliverance from the wrath to come and from every evil; there holiness is communicated and resides; and while the Lord purifies his redeemed “from all their iniquities, to be unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works;” he both marks them out as his own, and prepares them to possess their purchased inheritance. His people will also be victorious, and as a flame to consume their enemies: and they shall “inherit all things,” whilst others shall lose even what they seemed to have.—Blessed be God, for the divine Saviour and Judge on mount Zion, and for those whom he sends forth as his ministers to bring sinners to partake of his salvation! May all employed in this work be faithful and successful! so that their word may be “a savour of life unto life” to large numbers, and a “savour of death unto death” to all that reject it, as judging and condemning obstinate unbelievers; and in both respects “a sweet savour” to the Lord whose is “the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, for ever, Amen.” (Notes, Matt. 6:13. 2 Cor. 2:14—17.)

THE BOOK OF JONAH.

JONAH was no doubt more ancient than any of those prophets, whose writings are preserved in this part of the sacred Scriptures.—He predicted the successes of Jeroboam, the son of Joash; (2 Kings 14:25.) and it is probable that the prophecy was delivered a considerable time before its accomplishment. Some think, that Jonah executed his prophetic office, as early as the latter part of Jehu’s reign: but it is not agreed, whether the events recorded in this book, occurred at his entrance on that office, or at a later period.—Nothing more is known of him, except that he was of Gath-hepher, a town in the tribe of Zebulun; (Josh. 19:13. Githa-hepher;) which was situated in Galilee: (John 7:52.) and the traditions extant concerning him, are unworthy of the least notice.—The book before us is rather a narrative than a prophecy. Several of the events recorded in it are of a very extraordinary nature; which has induced some to explain it as an allegory, and emboldened others profanely to ridicule it. But it should be remembered, that our Lord himself has repeatedly attested the truth of the narrative; and shown, that the most wonderful event in it was intended as a type or emblem of his own death, burial, and resurrection on the third day. (Matt. 12:40—42. 16:4. Luke 11:32.) The knowledge of “the power of God,” as recorded in the Scriptures, and as displayed in his works of creation and providence, will fully satisfy the humble mind respecting the miracles here recorded: and a deep knowledge of our own hearts will greatly abate our astonishment at the extraordinary conduct of the prophet himself.—The fame of Jonah’s deliverance appears to have spread among the heathen nations: and the Greeks who were accustomed to adorn the memory of their heroes, by every remarkable event and embellishment which they could appropriate, afterwards added to the fictitious adventures of Hercules, that of having continued three days without injury in the belly of a dog, sent against him by Neptune. The fable of Arion and the Dolphin, of which the date is fixed at a time nearly coeval with the period of Jonah, is possibly a misrepresentation of particulars recorded in this sacred book. Gray’s Key. Jonah lived almost as early as the most ancient Greek poets.—His impartiality in recording his own sins is worthy of being noted: for this conduct is peculiar to the sacred writers.

CHAPTER I.

God commands Jonah to go and prophesy against Nineveh. 1, 2. Fleeing from the service, he attempts to sail to Tarshish; but is overtaken by a tempest, and discovered by lot, 3-10. The mariners reluctantly cast him into the sea; the storm abates, and they sacrifice to JEHOVAH, 11-16. Jonah is swallowed by a great fish; and continues in its belly three days, 17.

NOW the word of the LORD came unto *Jonah the son of Amittai, saying,

2 Arise, go to *Nineveh, that great city, and cry against it; *for their wickedness is come up before me.

3 But Jonah rose up *to flee unto Tarshish from the presence of the LORD, and went down to *Joppa; and he found a ship going to *Tarshish: so he paid the fare thereof, and went down into it, to go with them unto Tarshish from the presence of the LORD.

4 ¶ But the LORD sent out a great wind into the sea, and there was a mighty tempest in the sea, so that the ship was like to be broken.

5 Then the mariners were afraid, and cried every man unto his god, and cast forth the wares that were in the ship into the sea, to lighten it of them. But Jonah was gone down into the sides of the ship; and he lay, and was fast asleep.

6 So the shipmaster came to him, and said unto him, *What meanest thou, O sleeper? Parise,

NOTES.—CHAP. I. V. 1. Some think that Jonah had before this, for some time, exercised his prophetic office in Israel; others, that he was at this time first called to it. But nothing beyond conjecture can be adduced on the subject. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 2, 3. Nineveh, the capital of the Assyrian empire, was one of the largest cities of which we read; being thirty miles in circumference, if historians may be credited. (Marg. Ref. b. Note, 3:1-4. 4:9-11. Preface to Nahum.) Other prophets foretold the destruction of heathen cities for their crimes: but Jonah was ordered to go to Nineveh, that he might, on the spot, denounce the judgments of God against it.—Some think that he declined this service, because he was jealous for the honour of Israel, and was not willing that the Gentiles should partake of the benefits of prophecy; and indeed he afterwards intimates his fear, that God would mercifully spare Nineveh, and that he should be despised and punished as a false prophet. (Note, 4:1-4.) But, when we consider the perils and hardships to which this journey and message were likely to expose him; when we imagine to ourselves the probable reception of a despised prophet of Israel in this proud idolatrous city, come avowedly to predict its speedy destruction; and that this might draw upon him the resentment both of the rulers and the multitude: when we reflect how such a message would be received in the streets of London at this day; we shall not wonder that he was extremely reluctant to undertake the service. Strong faith, and a habit of unreserved obedience, were necessary to overcome the reluctance which Jonah must have felt: and perhaps he was a young man, and not as yet inured to perilous employments.—He seems to have supposed that the Spirit of prophecy would not rest on him if he left the land of Israel to go some other way than to Nineveh; he desired to be freed from those prophetic impulses with which he had not courage and faith to comply; and he therefore purposed "to flee unto Tarshish from the presence of the LORD." (Marg. Ref. e, f. Notes, Gen. 38. Ps. 139:1-12.) Accordingly he went to Joppa, a seaport town computed to be about forty miles from Gath-hepher, and in the opposite direction from Nineveh. (Marg. Ref. g.) There he met with a vessel about to sail to Tarshish, and, paying the fare, went aboard; as if he thought that now he should be removed to a distance from the immediate presence of God, and as not expecting to be pursued by a more imminent danger, than any of those from which he fled.

Tarshish. (3.) Marg. Ref. h. Notes, 1 Kings 10:22. Is. 2:10-18, v. 16.—Bochart says, that there were two places of this name; one, Tartessus in Spain... near the pillars of Hercules; the other in the Indian Ocean, near Ophir... which island is thought to be the modern Ceylon. To this latter men sailed from Ezion-geber on the Red Sea. Bp. Newcombe.—Some versions, however, and expositors, suppose Tarsus in Cilicia to be here meant.

V. 4-6. During the time which was occupied in this rebellious project, Jonah seems to have received no more impulses of the prophetic Spirit; and to have been left to great call upon thy God, if so be that God will think upon us, that we perish not. [Practical Observations.]

7 And they said 'every one to his fellow, Come *and let us cast lots, that we may know for whose cause this evil is upon us. So they cast lots, and the lot fell upon Jonah.

8 Then said they unto him, *Tell us, we pray thee, for whose cause this evil is upon us; *What is thine occupation? and whence comest thou? what is thy country? and of what people art thou?

9 And he said unto them, *I am a Hebrew; *and I fear the LORD, the God of heaven, which hath made the sea and the dry land.

10 Then were the men exceedingly afraid, and said unto him, *Why hast thou done this? for the men knew that he fled from the presence of the LORD, because he had told them.

11 ¶ Then said they unto him, *What shall we do unto thee, that the sea may be calm unto us? for the sea wrought, and was tempestuous.

12 And he said unto them, *Take me up, and cast me forth into the sea; so shall the sea be calm unto you: for I know that for my sake this great tempest is upon you.

insensibility of conscience. "But the LORD sent out a great wind into the sea; so that there was a mighty tempest." This was commissioned to arrest the ship, and it was in the utmost danger of being wrecked. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. i. Notes, Ps. 107:23-30. 135:7. 148:7-12, v. 8.) It seems that the tempest was of an extraordinary nature. The affrighted mariners, therefore, having some sense of a superior power but no right knowledge of the true God, and being of different countries, cried every one to the idol he had been used to worship, for deliverance from death: at the same time they cast overboard their merchandise, or tackling, to lighten the ship and preserve it from sinking. (Marg. Ref. k, l. Notes, Acts 27:18,19,33-38, v. 38. Phil. 3:1-7, v. 7.) Yet, during all this confusion and hurry, Jonah lay asleep below deck, and heard nothing of what was doing! having perhaps had little sleep for some time, through fatigue and uneasiness. This caused the shipmaster to address him as a very stupid and indolent person; to reprove him for sleeping when all their lives were in such imminent peril; and to excite him to arise, and call upon the God whom he had been used to worship, if so be he might be induced to regard, compassionate, and deliver them.—Thus he who, as the messenger of JEHOVAH, ought to have been reproving the Ninevites, received a just and severe rebuke from an idolatrous mariner! (Marg. Ref. m-q. Notes, 3:5-9, v. 9. Joel 2:12-14. Am. 5:14, 15.)

V. 7. The extraordinary nature of this tempest, and the general notions of a superior power, and of right and wrong, which these men entertained, induced them to conclude, that some atrocious criminal sailed with them, for whose cause this evil had befallen them. (Note, Acts 28:3-6.) According therefore to the custom both among the Gentiles, and also among the worshippers of JEHOVAH, they agreed to decide, by casting lots, who the criminal was. This was an appeal to the heart-searching God and his providence; and he was pleased to determine the matter for them, by causing the lot to fall upon Jonah. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Lev. 16:8-10. Num. 32:23. Josh. 7:13-18. 1 Sam. 10:17-22. 14:36-44. Prov. 16:33. 18:18. Acts 1:23-26.)—This was an usual method of referring things to the appointment or discovery of Providence. Louth.

V. 8-10. When Jonah had been thus singled out as the culprit, whom divine vengeance pursued, the mariners did not proceed against him with violence, as might have been expected, considering their loss and extreme danger; but, perceiving perhaps something grave and serious in his demeanour, they calmly entreated him to inform them, whether he were not conscious of some great crime, for which this calamity was come upon them; and whether he could deny that it was on his account. They desired also to know, what his employment was, whether lawful or not; whether he were not now upon some criminal project, or fleeing from justice. And in short, who he was, and of what country. (Marg. Ref. x, y. Note, Josh. 7:19.) Accordingly he, without reserve, informed them of his people and religion, as a worshipper of "JEHOVAH the God of heaven," the Creator both of the sea it to the land; ¹but they could not: for the sea wrought, and was tempestuous against them.

14 Wherefore ¹they cried unto the LORD, and said, We beseech thee, O LORD, we beseech thee, let us not perish for this man's life, and lay not upon us innocent blood: ²for thou, O LORD, hast done as it pleased thee.

15 So ¹they took up Jonah, and cast him forth and the dry land; and ingenuously confessed his heinous sin. (Marg. Ref. z-c.) This exceedingly alarmed them; either as it showed them the power of that God, who was contending with them, and whom they knew not how to appease; or because they were in doubt how to behave towards his prophet, perceiving extreme danger whether they kept him in the ship, or cast him overboard. They, however, remonstrated with Jonah for rebelling against the command, and attempting to "flee from the presence" of the great Creator; and for involving them as well as himself, in such imminent danger. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. d-f. Notes, 11-16, v. 14. Josh. 7:25, 26, v. 25. John 19:8-12, v. 8.)

V. 11-10. The mariners, perceiving that the tempest continued to increase more and more, and not knowing how to act, inquired of Jonah himself, as JEHOWAH's prophet, what they ought to do in this emergency. And he, convinced of his sin and folly, submitting to the justice of God, and expecting death for his crime, and perhaps receiving some intimation of the divine will, counselled them to cast him into the sea; and thus the tempest would cease, for he knew that it was raised on his account. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. h, i. Notes, Josh. 7:20, 21. 2 Sam. 24:17.) He would not, however, cast himself overboard; for that would have been an act of suicide. But the men, probably affected by the candid confession and the disinterested submissive conduct of Jonah, and fearing to lay hands on the servant of JEHOWAH, used every effort to get into port or near the land; that, putting him on shore, they might preserve his life and their own also. When they found their endeavours to be in vain, (as "the sea grew still more and more tempestuous," they prayed, not every one to his god as before, but to JEHOWAH, entreating him, that they might not perish for taking away Jonah's life, nor be deemed guilty of murdering the innocent; as his sovereign appointment had laid them under the necessity of doing this for their own preservation. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. l-n.) After this appeal, they cast Jonah overboard; and, as the storm immediately ceased, they were so impressed with what they had seen and heard, that they exceedingly feared the power and revered the authority of JEHOWAH, and worshipped his name; and either at that time, or as soon as they could, they offered to him sacrifices of thanksgiving for their deliverance, and made vows of becoming his servants and worshippers.—We may conclude, that some of them at least were savingly converted, by means of these extraordinary transactions.—"Disclaiming all their idol-gods, they offered a sacrifice to the only true God, and made vows to him, (which they would certainly perform upon their return,) to worship him at Jerusalem." Bp. Hall. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. p-r.)

V. 17. As it was the will of God sharply to chastise Jonah, but not to cut him off; he had prepared a great fish near the ship, to receive him into its stomach. Christ has called it a whale, and repeatedly authenticated the whole narration; and probably some of that species have throats wide enough to swallow a man, though others may not. (Marg. Ref. t.) The whole affair was miraculous: the preservation of Jonah, from suffocation in the belly of the whale, could only be effected by a continued exertion of almighty power; and the most daring infidel will scarcely venture to say, that God could not prepare so great a fish for this purpose, and effect Jonah's deliverance in such a manner. In this situation Jonah remained for three days and three nights; at least (according to the Hebrew phraseology) one whole day and night and a part of two others. In this he was a type of Christ, as dead and buried, and rising again on the third day. "The precise time was thus determined, to prefigure the period of our Lord's continuance in the grave." Bp. Newcombe. (Note, Matt. 12:38-40.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-6. They, who serve God in the work of the ministry, must prepare for implicit and unreserved obedience amidst manifold hardships and dangers; and should arm themselves with faith and patience, and a spirit of self-denial. They must arise and go to every place, whither Providence calls them; and not spare to reprove the sins of the great or of the many, or to denounce against them the judgments of that God, before whom their crimes have been committed.—Unbelief and the fear of man start a thousand objections to such services: and even pious men are capable of most absurd notions and extravagant actions, when desirous of escaping the cross, or declining obedience in perilous circumstances: nay, like Adam, they may be tempted to hide themselves from the presence of the Lord, by flight, or by vainly attempting to conceal themselves "among the trees into the sea: ¹and the sea ²ceased from her raging.

16 Then the men feared the LORD exceedingly, and ¹tendered ²a sacrifice unto the LORD, and ³made vows.

17 Now ¹the LORD had prepared a great fish to swallow up Jonah. And Jonah was ²in the belly of the fish three days and three nights.

of the garden!" Thus awakened sinners have sometimes removed from the preachers or companions, who have disquieted them, in hopes of being again easy in their beloved sinful course of life: and thus even pious ministers, when greatly opposed or discouraged, are apt to seek impatiently for removal to some other place, and to think they could do better any where, or in any situation, than in that assigned them by their Lord and Master. But there is in all possible cases more danger from disobeying than obeying God: he can arrest his fugitives by storms from without or from within: and nothing but shame and distress can come on those, who flee from their proper place and work.—Sin and temptation may render even a believer, for a time, more insensible than the most ignorant heathen! in imminent danger, when natural conscience extorts from the latter a cry of distress to an imaginary or "unknown God," and induces them to part with their possessions in hopes of saving their lives; the former may remain secure and asleep, without any sense of guilt or fear of wrath. But the Lord rebukes and chastens those whom he loves; and the very persons, whom he sometimes employs for this purpose, serve to cover his offending servants with shame, and to fill them with anguish.—Surely the people of the world in general may be thus addressed: "Shall men part with all their substance to save their lives; and will they not renounce worldly interests and pleasures, to save their souls? What do men mean by sleeping on in sin, when the word of God, and the convictions of their consciences, warn them, to arise, and call upon the LORD, if they would escape everlasting misery?—And do we not all need such reproofs on some occasions? What do we mean, amidst all our fears, temptations, difficulties, and perils, and those of the church or the community, to be so supine and heartless? Should we not admonish and excite each other to awake, and arise, and call upon our God; 'if so be he will think upon and deliver us, that we perish not?'"

V. 7-17. In great distresses, it behoves us to inquire, on what account, and for whose cause, the evil is come upon us. And though it may not be deemed expedient to use the lot, amidst the abuse and profanation of it that prevail; yet we may appeal to the Lord in prayer; and by his word and Spirit, and in his Providence, he can readily show us the cause and remedy of all our troubles.—They who rebel against God, often cause or occasion great calamities to those with whom they associate: yet they should not be treated with harshness or virulence, and careful inquiry ought always to precede the punishment of culprits.—When the true believer has been betrayed into sin, and is evidently become the criminal cause of harm to others, and when he is brought to a proper sense of his misconduct, he will frankly confess his guilt, and speak honourably of God, though to his own shame and condemnation: and indeed it may justly cause the profligate and profane to tremble, when they consider with what marked severity the Lord often punishes the transgressions of his worshippers. In such circumstances they will condemn themselves, and submit patiently to any temporal punishment, if so be they may hope to be "delivered from the wrath to come;" nay, they will rather choose chastisement in their own persons, than to become the occasion of ruin to others. (1 Chr. 21:17.) Such behaviour will sometimes win upon the ungodly, when they cannot but see their criminality, and are suffering in consequence of it; and it is proper to do all we can to save the lives, even of those who have greatly offended; for the natural conscience has a horror at the thoughts of wilful murder.—When necessity constrains men to take away life, it should be done with extreme reluctance, and only in order to preservation from death, or for other important ends. And it ought not to be done, if it can be avoided by any tolerable loss or hardship; for the persons concerned should be able humbly to appeal to God, that they could not avoid the painful expedient, and be confident that "innocent blood will not be laid to their charge."—When the cause of evil is removed, the effect will commonly cease; and the renunciation of sinful pleasures or interests, makes way for a sweet sense of the pardoning love of God.—His servants will scarcely ever be entirely useless; he often takes occasion, even from our sins and follies, to promote the glory of his name and the salvation of souls: and if men's lives be endangered and their property diminished, through their acquaintance with his worshippers; yet if their discourse or example bring any to fear, trust, worship, and obey God, their gain will be great.—Surely the conduct of these heathen mariners will rise up in judgment against great numbers of those called Christians, who neither offer prayers in their distresses, nor sacrifices of thanksgiving for their most signal deliverances.—The Lord will humble, but he will not destroy, his offending servants: and he can preserve or punish, in numberless ways of which we have no conception.—But let us not overlook him, who gave himself up to death, to rescue us from the wrath of God: the storm that he suffered to appease, was wholly of our raising; and he died, was buried, and on the third day rose again, to sanctify death and the grave to his people, and to be the First-fruits of their resurrection to everlasting life and glory.

NOTES.—CHAP. II. V. 1, 2. Jonah was brought into such a situation, as no other man ever was in before or since: yet his life was not only preserved, but he was enabled to exercise his reason, and to collect his thoughts for prayer! He was reduced to this condition of extreme misery and peril, by the righteous judgment of God; he could not possibly be delivered except by miracle; he must be oppressed with guilt and terror: yet he still hoped in the mercy of God, and ventured to call upon him. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. a-c. Notes, 2 Chr. 33:11-13. Ps. 130:1, 2. Lam. 2:52-57.) His close confinement, his heavy load of guilt, and the state of his mind, rendered his situation "as the belly of hell," or the state of the dead, where there is no hope, and whence there is no escape: yet even then he cried unto the Lord, and was heard and delivered. (Marg. Ref. d, e. Notes, 2 Sam. 22:5-16. Ps. 40:1-5, 86:12, 13, 88:1-7, 116:3, 4. Heb. 5:7-10, v. 7.)—Then Jonah spent that time in his earnest prayers to God, and in his humble and hearty confessions of his sin: . . . and after, when he was by the power of God delivered, . . . he penned this song of thanksgiving for so wonderful a mercy. Bp. Hall.—"Those devout thoughts, which he had at that time, he afterwards digested into the following prayer; and added a thanksgiving for his deliverance at the end of it. So several of David's Psalms were probably composed after his trouble was over: but in a manner suitable to the thoughts he had at the time of his affliction, and with a grateful sense of God's mercies for his deliverance out of it. (Ps. 54:120.) Louth. (Notes, Ps. 142: title. Is. 38:9-13, v. 9.)—¹Being now swallowed up of death, and seeing no remedy to escape; his faith burst out unto the Lord; knowing that from the very hell he was able to deliver him."

V. 3, 4. The Lord had not only permitted and directed, but he had even constrained the mariners to cast Jonah into the sea: so that he recognized the hand of God, and submitted to his justice in that dispensation. (Notes, 1:1-16. 2 Sam. 16:5-14, vv. 10-12. Ps. 39:10, 51:14.) He was compassed about with floods of waters in the great deep: whilst all the waves and billows passed over him. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. f, g. Notes, Ps. 42:6-8, v. 7. 69:14, 15.) He had attempted to flee from the presence of the Lord; and now he feared that he "was cast out of his sight." (Marg. Ref. h, i.) Yet he would not quite despair; but would still look to God for help, with a believing regard to his "holy temple," the sacrifices there offered, and the mercy-seat from which he communed with his people: he would still pray for forgiveness, and hope to be permitted again to go up to the temple; or at least to be admitted into the sanctuary above, if he died in his present situation. (Marg. Ref. k. Notes, 1 Kings 8:28-30. Dan. 6:10, 11.)

V. 5-7. When Jonah was cast into the sea, the waters surrounded him, "even to the soul," or life, or so as to reduce him to the condition of a dying man; the seaweeds were wrapped about his head, either before the fish swallowed him, or being sucked in with the water into his stomach. And thus he was carried to the bottom of the sea, and to the deep-rooted bases of those mountains that formed the shore; and he seemed as effectually precluded from all hope of deliverance, as if he had been buried in the centre of the earth, and her perpetual rocks and hills had been the barriers of his tomb. Yet from this pit of corruption the Lord brought him forth alive, and at that time he "saw not corruption," as without a miracle he must have done!—Thus the Lord Jesus having endured the wrath of the Father due to our sins, was laid in a new sepulchre hewn out of a rock, closed with a large stone, sealed and guarded by Roman soldiers: yet from that pit of corruption, he was brought forth alive by the power of God, without having seen corruption. (Marg. Ref. l-o. Notes, Ps. 16:8-11. 2:2-3. Is. 38:17-20, v. 17. Lam. 3:52-57, v. 54. Acts 11:65-32.)—When Jonah's heart fainted through terror and distress, he remembered the Lord, and his power, mercy, and truth; his prayer was heard in heaven and accepted; and thus he was delivered. (Marg. Ref. p-s. Notes, 1 Sam. 30:6. Ps. 27:13, 77:5-12. Lam. 3:21-23. 2 Cor. 1:8-11.)

V. 8, 9. Jonah had been severely corrected: yet he was fully sensible how much better it was to worship God, than to regard the idols of the heathen; or any of the superstitions which prevailed in Israel. These were all deceitful vanities; in forsaking God and his instituted worship to observe them, men forsook their own mercies and privileges: and they were equally deluded, who sought safety and peace by disobeying God, as Jonah had done. He was now convinced of his guilt and folly: and was determined, if he should be delivered, that he would present his sacrifice of praise, with thankful acknowledgment of God's mercies, and pay the vows that he had made in his distress: for salvation, temporal, spiritual, and eternal, was from the Lord, and the glory of it should be ascribed to him alone. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Gen. 35:1. 1 Chr. 10:13, 14. Ps. 31:6, 56:12, 13, 66:13, 14, 107:31, 32, 116:17-19, 118:17, 18. Rev. 7:9-12.)—This may be considered as his language after his deliverance; and some think that he vowed, when in the fish's belly, that, in case he were spared, he would readily go to Nineveh according as he had been commanded.

V. 10. God so overruled this monster of the deep, that it was led to get near the shore, and disgorge its prey alive upon the dry land; probably not far from the place where Jonah had embarked.—Thus death and the grave were commanded to restore the body of the crucified Redeemer. (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

We cannot be in any place or circumstances, in which we are excluded from the mercy-seat of God: and sharp afflictions are often sent to excite those to earnest cries for mercy, who were negligent in prosperity, and under the rebukes of his word.—Even believers may be reduced by sin, temptation, affliction, terror, and a sense of divine wrath, to a situation which bears some resemblance to "the depths of hell;" but their discouragements will differ from despair, in that they will never totally cease to seek help from God; and faith and hope will still struggle against the gloomy suggestions of unbelief.—The hand of God should be acknowledged in all our troubles: a proper estimate should be formed of the greatness of our difficulties, and the urgency of our distresses; in order that our faith may be fixed more simply upon the almighty power of the Lord for deliverance, and that afterwards we may be duly sensible of our obligations: and we should endeavour to attain to a proper sense of the greatness of our guilt, that we may more value his rich mercy and free salvation.—When we have been rescued from pressing difficulties, we should call to remembrance our fears and sorrows, and the weakness and wavering of our faith and hope: that we may be the more affected with the loving-kindness of the Lord, in hearing our supplications; and that we may "offer the sacrifices of thanksgiving, and pay our vows," with greater alacrity and zeal.—Our case can never be desperate, while we are out of hell: but as far as a believer is overcome by temptation, to copy those "that observe lying vanities," he "forsakes his own mercy," and changes the consolations which he would enjoy, for distress and dismay. It is our happiness, that we may worship and hope in God, who is able and willing to save all that call upon him, from sin and its eternal consequences; and from its temporal painful

CHAPTER III.

Jonah, at God's renewed command, goes to Nineveh, and denounces its destruction, 1-4. The Ninevites excited by the king, believe, fast, pray, reform, and trust in God's mercy, 5-9. The Lord repents him of the evil, 10.

AND the word of the LORD came unto Jonah the second time, saying,

2 Arise, go unto Nineveh, that great city, and preach unto it the preaching that I bid thee.

3 So Jonah arose, and went unto Nineveh, according to the word of the LORD. Now Nineveh was an exceeding great city of three days' journey.

4 And Jonah began to enter into the city a day's journey, and he cried, and said, Yet forty days, and Nineveh shall be overthrown.

5 ¶ So the people of Nineveh believed God, and proclaimed a fast, and put on sackcloth, from the greatest of them even to the least of them.

effects, as far as it is good for them: yea, "he is able to do exceeding abundantly, above all that we ask or think."—Amidst all our varying experiences, and the changing scenes of life, we should keep the eye of faith fixed upon our own suffering and dying, but now risen and ascended Redeemer. "All the waves and billows" of the wrath of the Father, due to our sins, went over him; "the floods of ungodly men" compassed him, the powers of darkness assailed him, death seemed to prevail against him, the grave was opened to receive his body, and his soul departed into the place of separate spirits: but he was again brought alive out of "the pit of corruption;" that through him the salvation of the Lord might be communicated to all believers. Let us then humbly confess our sins; consider his resurrection as the first-fruits of our own; and thankfully receive every temporal and spiritual deliverance, as the beginning and pledge of our eternal redemption.

NOTES.—CHAP. III. V. 1-4. It was proper that Jonah should have his commission renewed, before he resumed his office, after his late perverse disobedience; and that he should prove the sincerity of his repentance by performing that service, which before he had declined. He was therefore commanded to go and preach to Nineveh the preaching that God commanded him; and he promptly obeyed without regard to consequences.—Nineveh was so large a city, that it would take a man three days to walk round it, or to go into all the principal streets of it. When Jonah therefore came thither, and had entered into the city, he made one day's journey about it, proclaiming, as the herald of JONAH, that within forty days Nineveh would be overthrown, by an earthquake, or by some other awful and sudden judgment, such as had befallen Sodom. This respite and warning intimated, that there was a reserved condition of mercy, in case they repented; and probably the proclamation was attended with proofs of their most notorious sins. In this progress he met with no interruption; and it is probable that his first day's preaching produced such effects, as rendered it unnecessary for him to proceed any further. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, 1, 2, 3.) Diodorus Siculus informs us, that Nineveh was 480 furlongs in compass, which make sixty of our miles. . . . So that it was bigger than Babylon, which, according to his account, was but forty-eight. Lowth.

V. 5-9. Some think, that Pul was king of Nineveh at this time; but it is probable, that these events occurred before his days. (Notes, 2 Kings 14:25, 15:19, 20.)—There were no outward indications of the overthrow of Nineveh, and Jonah wrought no miracle in confirmation of his prediction: yet the Ninevites believed it to be the word of God, and that it would be verified; probably through a conviction excited in their minds of the greatness of their guilt, and from a recollection of the many wonderful judgments that Israel's God had inflicted on his enemies. Perhaps they had also heard of the wonderful things, which God had wrought in respect of Jonah. "The fame of the wonderful works God had wrought for the Jews was spread over the eastern parts of the world. This might make the Ninevites hearken to a man of that nation, that came to them as sent by God. And it is likely that he gave them an account of the miraculous circumstances which attended his own mission. But without question, a sense of their own guilt, and their deserving whatever punishment heaven could inflict, was a principal reason that moved them to have regard to his message. And by the men of Nineveh's repenting at the preaching of Jonas, God designed to upbraid the stubbornness of his own people, and shame them as it were, into repentance, for fear the men of Nineveh should rise up in judgment

6 For word came unto the king of Nineveh, and he arose from his throne, and he laid his robe from him, and covered him with sackcloth, and sat in ashes.

7 And he caused it to be proclaimed and published through Nineveh by the decree of the king and his nobles, saying, Let neither man nor beast, herd nor flock, taste any thing: let them not feed, nor drink water:

8 But let man and beast be covered with sackcloth, and cry mightily unto God: yea, let them turn every one from his evil way, and from the violence that is in their hands.

9 ¶ Who can tell if God will turn and repent, and turn away from his fierce anger, that we perish not?

10 ¶ And God saw their works, that they turned from their evil way; and God repented of the evil that he had said that he would do unto them; and he did it not.

against them." (Matt. 12:41.) Lowth.—They therefore dreaded the threatened vengeance, yet had some hope of escaping it; and without delay they used every means which they could devise, in order to appease the wrath of God. For when the preaching of Jonah was made known to the king, he was so alarmed, that he laid aside all his ensigns of royalty, put on "sackcloth and sat in ashes;" and, with the concurrence of his nobles and the approbation of his subjects, he ordered a fast to be proclaimed and observed with the greatest strictness. Not only were the people required to abstain wholly from food; but the very oxen and sheep were to be kept from all provender and water, that their mournful lowings and bleatings might add to the solemnity of the awful occasion. All the inhabitants likewise, from the least to the greatest, were commanded to wear sackcloth; nay, the very horses and mules which appeared in the streets were thus covered, instead of wearing their former gaudy trappings; while the inhabitants, as with one voice, united in the most earnest prayers to the God of Israel, to have mercy on them, and spare the city: at the same time they were required to repent, and forsake all their sins, but especially their violence, oppression, and injustice.—"Natural religion instructed them that their earnest prayers, without true amendment, would not avail them before God; nor would their repentance be thought sincere, unless they returned to the true owners, what they had gained by violence and injustice." Lowth.—The proclamation of approaching destruction had not been attended with any express call to repentance, or promises of mercy, yet they proceeded upon this general encouragement, from their apprehensions of the goodness of the Lord, that they could not tell but he might be induced to remit their punishment; or (speaking after the manner of men) to change his mind and repent of his purpose; his vehement anger being appeased by their submissions, humiliation, and supplications: at least this was the most probable way of escaping the impending destruction. In all this, something beyond natural conscience, even the special blessing of God on his own word, influencing them to believe it, and to act accordingly, must be acknowledged. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, 2 Chr. 20:34. Ps. 2:10-12. Joel 1:14, 15. 2:12-14. Acts 11:18. 14:24-28. v. 27. Heb. 11:5, 6.)

V. 10. We may conclude, that this fast was observed in a very strict and solemn manner, in all parts of Nineveh; that many fervent prayers were presented to the Lord, and his name greatly honoured and the idols disparaged; that a general reformation took place, and that many were converted to the true God, and his spiritual worship and service. These things the Lord observed and approved, especially their turning from their evil ways: and therefore "he repented of the evil, that he had said he would do to them." He did not execute his threatened vengeance; his warning having had its intended effect: for it was his secret purpose, to manifest his readiness to forgive, to glorify his mercy, to shame the impotence of Israel, and to give an earnest of the conversion of the Gentiles. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Job 33:27-30. Jer. 18:7-10. 31:18-20. Matt. 12:41, 42. Luke 15:20-24.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The sincerity of our repentance must be evinced by obedience, in those particulars especially about which we have been most rebellious: and the Lord seals the forgiveness of his offending servants, by again employing them in his honourable work. But he will not soften or alter his messages, because of any man's reluctance to deliver them, or to hear them; or because of the numbers or the greatness of those whom they condemn.—The fear of the power and wrath of God, and the experience of his mercy, will raise us above

CHAPTER IV.

Jonah, displeased at the mercy of God to Nineveh, peevishly expostulates, and prays for death, 1-3. God gently reproves him, 4. He leaves the city; is shadowed by a gourd, which withers; he manifests great impatience and rebellion; but is shown, by his concern about the fests, the propriety of God's aid to Nineveh, 5-11.

BUT ^{it} displeased Jonah exceedingly, and he was very angry.

the fear of men: and he can render the most timorous bold as lions, to proclaim his truths in the midst of his most powerful enemies.—We are often needlessly afraid of men in obeying God: for he gives his word a more favourable reception than we expected; and sometimes the heathen will be more attentive than his professed worshippers.—It is by faith, that sinners, when warned, are moved by fear, to inquire after deliverance from the wrath to come: (Note, Heb. 11:7.) a small degree of light may convince men, that fasting, humiliation before God, confession of sin, prayer, and turning away from known iniquity and impiety, are probable means of escaping wrath, and obtaining, though not of meriting mercy: and kings and nobles cannot do a more essential service to the people, than in leading them, by their authority and example, to these religious exercises. But no external mortifications or devotions can be of any use, if men do not turn from the evil of their ways.—If idolaters, without any express revelation of mercy, or instruction in the truths and will of God, at the call of an Israelitish prophet, upon a mere peradventure we may escape destruction, were thus earnest, fervent, prompt, self-denying, and humble in seeking mercy: how inexcusable will professed Christians be, who, notwithstanding all the warnings, instructions, invitations, and promises of Scripture, persist in unbelief, impenitence, self-indulgence, and procrastination! But, if God so readily pardoned the inhabitants of Nineveh, where it may be apprehended the greater part were only transiently impressed and partially reformed; how readily will he pardon the broken-hearted penitent, and the believing supplicant at his mercy-seat!—We may also here see the blessed effects of the resurrection of Christ, and the consequent preaching of his gospel, in the conversion and salvation of the Gentiles: and let us pray that this preaching, and these effects, may pervade the whole earth; and join our zealous, diligent, self-denying, and liberal endeavours, in aiding every scriptural attempt to accomplish this most desirable object.

NOTES.—CHAP. IV. V. 1-4. It might have been expected, that Jonah would be very humble and submissive, in consequence of his former misconduct, and the merciful dealings of God with him; and that the success of his mission, in the repentance and preservation of the Ninevites, would inspire him with lively joy and gratitude: but on the contrary we find, that he was greatly displeased, and very angry even with God himself, for showing mercy to Nineveh; though mercy alone had preserved his life, and saved his soul from hell!—In this rebellious frame, he ventured to expostulate with God, and to excuse, nay vindicate, his former disobedience!—When first commanded to prophesy against Nineveh, he was aware of the event. He supposed that God would mercifully spare the city, and that he should be stigmatized as a false prophet; being well acquainted with the abundant mercy and goodness of God towards his offending creatures. (Marg. Ref. b-d. Notes, 1, 2, 3. Ex. 34:5-7. Mic. 7:18-20, v. 18.) And now, seeing this had turned out as he expected, he besought God, to slay him and end his pain, for death was more desirable in his case than life: as if the Lord had done him an injury, in delivering him from the belly of the whale!—We may allow something in this case to the unfounded prejudices of the Israelites, who were too apt to despise the Gentiles, and to deem the mercy of God to them a deduction from their own privileges. Jonah might also consider Nineveh as a formidable enemy to his nation, and in that view wish for its destruction. Some think, he had a mistaken zeal for the honour of God, and thought that he would appear to have broken his word, in not executing the judgment which he had denounced.—But it is evident, that he was greatly influenced by a proud and rebellious spirit; that he considered the Ninevites as unworthy of his regard; and that he did not desire their welfare, but merely came to denounce and witness their destruction. It is equally evident that he was not duly humbled for his own sins; and had an undue regard to his own reputation; fearing the disgrace of being thought a false prophet, and not daring to trust God to take care of his credit and safety. In this frame of mind, he overlooked the good done, and the glory of the divine goodness and mercy, as of little consequence. Yet the Lord reproved him with gentleness, and inquired whether he had cause to be thus discomposed, or did right in these peevish complaints and impatient wishes for death, when so great mercy had been shown him: to which he seems to have made no answer, but to have continued sullen and fretful. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. e-h. Note, 1 Kings 19:3, 4.)

V. 5-8. Doubtless Jonah might have been hospitably entertained at Nineveh, and allowed to live according to his own rules, had he been disposed to be friendly: and he might have been usefully employed, in confirming the inhabitants in their good purposes, and in instructing them in the truths and worship of God. But, though he had received an intimation, that the city would be spared, he seems not to have fully believed it: and he would neither venture himself in the city, nor have any fellowship with the inhabitants; as if he meant, notwithstanding their repentance, to "shake off the dust of his feet, for a testimony against them." He therefore left the city, and made a booth or tent to dwell in, till he should see the event. It pleased God, however, very graciously and miraculously, to prepare a large gourd, which, with rapid growth and luxuriant foliage, was speedily ready to afford him a refreshing shadow from the heat of the sun, from which it seems his tent could not defend him. This tended to appease his grief and calm his spirits; nay, he was "exceedingly glad" on account of this personal accommodation; whilst the repentance and preservation of a great city made him very angry and peevish! To check this disproportionate joy, and to make way for his further humiliation and instruction, the Lord prepared a worm and caused it to destroy the root of the gourd, so that the next day it withered: and, a sultry east wind increasing the burning heat of the morning-sun, Jonah was so oppressed, that he fainted, grew more impatient than ever, and wished again for death, as the most desirable deliverance from his misery.—The winds in the hot countries are oftentimes more suffocating than the heat of the sun, when they blow from the sandy deserts; and they make the sunbeams give a more intense heat. Louth.—Some think, that he left the city, before he had seen the tokens of repentance among the inhabitants; and others, that he waited till the forty days were almost expired, when, dreading some sudden destruction, he dared not stay any longer. It however, seems most probable, that he both witnessed the conduct of the Ninevites, and had some intimations of the Lord's gracious purposes, before he left the city; and that he retired from it immediately after. (Marg. and Marg. Ref.)

V. 9-11. The Lord was graciously pleased to renew his expostulations with Jonah, at this crisis, and to inquire whether the withering of the gourd was an adequate cause of his great anger and impatience: but he proudly and passionately justified himself, asserting that he "did well to be angry even unto death;" that is, to break his heart, and to die with grief and vexation. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, Gen. 4:6, 7, 13-15. Job 7:15, 16. 2 Cor. 7:9-11.) "I have just cause to be angry, even to that degree as to wish myself dead. The prophet here records his own impatience without concealing any circumstance of it, as Moses and other holy writers have done." Louth. Upon this the Lord graciously pity on the gourd, for the which thou hast not laboured, neither madest it grow; which came up in a night, and perished in a night :

condescended to argue the matter with him. Would he have spared the gourd, merely for his own convenience and refreshment? and was he very angry and rebellious when it withered; though it was not his work or property, and had cost him no labour; and though it was naturally of a swift growth and a withering nature? (Marg.) And was it not right, that the Lord should spare Nineveh, in which were so large a number of his creatures, formed by his power and for the purposes of his glory? If all the inhabitants of that city, who were capable of knowing good from evil, without one exception, were deserving of the most tremendous punishment, and ripe for vengeance; yet there were no less than a hundred and twenty thousand infants, incapable of "knowing their right hand from their left," who were no more criminal than the offspring of others of man's fallen race; and would Jonah contend with his Maker for sparing the city for their sakes? "If we compute them for a fifth part of the inhabitants of Nineveh, the whole sum will amount to six hundred thousand." Louth. (Notes, Gen. 18:23—33.) There was also very much cattle in the city, to which God had respect, as far more valuable than the withering gourd. (Marg. Ref. z.)—Among the many hundreds of thousands of grown persons in the city, there were also many true penitents; and the general humiliation and reformation, which had been effected, rendered it peculiarly suitable for God to glorify his mercy in their preservation.—Hence it might be inferred, that Jonah was deeply criminal, in being so much concerned about his own ease, comfort, and credit; and so unconcerned about the honour of God, and the benefit of his creatures.—We may suppose, that this silenced and humbled Jonah; that he at length learned submission; and, being made to know the evil of his own heart, that he would be prepared to serve God in the prophetic office, with more humility and propriety, than he had hitherto done.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V 1—4. Human depravity breaks out in such varied ways, as occasions are given, that it is not easy to say of what man is incapable. (Note, 2 Chr. 16:7—10.) Regard to his own honour, or that of his sect, or a proud contempt of others, may possibly seduce even a believer, in an unguarded hour, to quarrel with the goodness and mercy of the Lord: nay, malignity, in some occasional emotions, may delude a man to think it more desirable to witness or seal the ruin of sinners, than to be instrumental to their preservation. Indeed this is the root of all bigotry and persecution, as far as pious men have ever been betrayed into it. (Note, Luke 9:51—56.) Even a faithful minister may, in some possible circumstances, be tempted to impatience, by witnessing unexpected success to his own labours, in places where he had little desire of it, whilst his sanguine hopes and ardent wishes for others have been disappointed; or when his success was productive of bitter effects to his character or interests.—When great good is done by those, whose conduct is so inconsistent, and so much tends to prejudice men against their ministry; it must be most evident, that "the excellency of the power is of God and not of man."—Nothing but a deep knowledge of our own hearts can explain to us, how it is possible for a true believer to pray in the language of rebellion, and of self-justification respecting things most flagrantly evil! how a man, who has been convicted, corrected, humbled, marvellously delivered, and made thankful for such mercies, can be induced again to vindicate before God his former transgression! how a prophet could decline preaching for fear he should do good! or repent of preaching because he had been singularly successful! or justify his fleeing from his work because he knew that the Lord was gracious and merciful! or mention these endearing perfections of God, to complain of them! or how the severest discipline and the most marvellous deliverances should fail to cure this perverseness! Yet of these things our hearts are capable, and these are but a small part of their deceitfulness and desperate wickedness. (Note, Jer. 17:9,10.) This would appear, if God should now (as he one day will) publish an impartial history of the secret thoughts of our hearts, in our varied experiences.—It is, however, peculiarly criminal to indulge this proud and peevish spirit in our prayers; yet this too will be our case, unless we carefully watch over our passions, when under great difficulties and strong temptations. We are even capable of sincerely thanking God one day for sparing our lives, and of fretting the next because we are left to live in trouble! And we are apt to think it better for us to die than to live: not so much because heaven is more desirable than earth, or lest we should live to dishonour God; but because we are troubled by our own imaginations and corruptions; or because we are exposed to reproach and the cross, amidst successful endeavours to glorify God and do good to mankind. In general we are all most prone to desire death, when we are least fit to meet our Judge: so that the mercy of God is as much displayed in bearing with his peevish servants, as in pardoning repenting rebels; and his gentle reproofs most effectually show the evil of our discontent and impatience.

V. 5—11. We often create ourselves uneasiness by our folly: nay, some are prevailed on by temptations of divers kinds to retire from public stations, when they have the fairest opportunities of usefulness. Yet the Lord frequently sends gracious consolations, when we merit heavy trials, and soothes those sorrows which result from our sin and folly.—The same strong ungoverned passions, which expose us to be cast down at trifling difficulties, render us exceedingly glad of trivial advantages, and dispose us to idolize our dying comforts. These the Lord often recalls, to teach us that all our gourds must wither, and that he alone is the durable Portion of his people.—When we are discontented without cause, we may expect to be corrected by some real and distressing affliction: and the Lord sometimes seems intent with his own hand to increase our sorrows, when we are ready to faint under them, in order to humble us for our future good. But pride and anger render men incapable of perceiving the most glaring absurdities in their own conduct, and dispose them to vindicate the most daring rebellions.—Our discontent, murmurs, contentions, and despondings are often about such trifles, that the cause of them needs only be mentioned, in order to its being exposed! The Lord takes from us what was never properly our own, and was not likely to continue with us; he sends a little pain or reproach instead of everlasting misery and contempt; and we think "we do well to be angry," and even break our hearts with impatience, and speak and act as if our grief were insupportable and our wound incurable; and rashly to wish for death, when in so rebellious a frame of mind. (Note, Phil. 1:21—26.) Whilst we thus selfishly and in unbelief regard our own ease, interest, or credit; we proportionably disregard the glory of God, and the lives and souls of our neighbours; as if these were not worth our attention, compared with our own feelings: so contrary are we to the law of loving God supremely, and our neighbours as ourselves; and such need have we of the pardoning mercy, the atoning blood, and the new creating Spirit of our God!—But his mercies are over all his works: he has a property in his creatures, and will leave none to perish, but for the honour of his justice, holiness, truth, and wisdom. He delights in pardoning the penitent; our infant offspring are the objects of his tenderest regard; and even the irrational creatures share his compassion and bounty. Let us then rejoice, and be thankful for the mercies of our God, and imitate them in our whole conduct: and, while he condescends to expostulate with us on our selfishness, may our hearts be humbled and softened to compassion and good-will to all men, and prepared for every service to which we are called.

THE BOOK OF MICAH.

THE prophet was 'of the kingdom of Judah, as he only makes mention of kings who reigned over that country. . . . Mareshah (1:14,15,) is placed in Judah. (Josh. 15:44. 2 Chr. 11:8.) Bp. Newcombe—^a He is called the Morasthite, . . . from the place of his nativity, Morasthi, which St. Jerom distinguishes from Mareshah; (1:15,) though he places them both in the tribe of Judah.' Louth—Micah was contemporary with Isaiah and Hosea; but it is probable that he began to prophesy later than they. The date of the third chapter is fixed in Jeremiah to the reign of Hezekiah; (Note, Jer. 26:16—19.) but nothing further is known with certainty, concerning the time when Micah's predictions were delivered.

He addressed his messages both to Judah and Israel: and his book, like that of the other prophets, contains sharp reproofs of sin, awful denunciations of wrath, encouraging promises, and predictions of Christ, and of the establishment and prosperity of his kingdom.—It is evident that Micah was acknowledged to be a prophet, and that his prophecy was well known in the time of Jeremiah. His authority as a prophet, and that of his book as a part of Scripture, are twice appealed to in the New Testament, in respect of the place where the Messiah should be born. (Matt. 2:5,6. John 7:42.) Our Lord uses nearly his words, concerning the persecutions to which his disciples would be exposed: (Comp. 7:6 with Matt. 10:33,36,) and many of his predictions have received an undeniable accomplishment; (Notes, 3:8—12. 4:2—4 5:2—6.) though others are not yet fulfilled. His style has been much admired by the best judges; but it is occasionally obscure, through conciseness, and sudden transitions from one subject to another.

The two nations, (or peoples,) namely Judah and Israel, yea, the whole land of Canaan and all its fulness, were summoned to appear before God, who, from his holy temple in heaven, (of which the temple on Mount Zion was but a shadow,) would be both Witness to detect their guilt, and judge to denounce sentence against them. Then would he tread upon the high places of the earth, or reduce the power and pride of the mightiest princes: the very mountains would melt like wax under him: and the valleys would be rent with chasms, such as are made by impetuous torrents when poured down from a steep place: that is, all ranks of men would be reduced to the utmost confusion and misery. V. 5—7. Samaria was the great source of wickedness to Israel, and Jerusalem to Judah; from whence idolatry and iniquity, sanctioned by authority and example, were diffused through the land. (*Marg. Therefore Samaria would first be visited, as a warning to Jerusalem: and it would be reduced to a heap of rubbish and stones, such as were seen collected in vineyards, when the ground was prepared for planting the vines. For the stones of their sumptuous edifices would be poured down into the adjacent valley, and the city razed even to the foundations; their graven images would be seized or destroyed by the conquerors, with all their consecrated treasures; and that idolatrous worship would be finally abolished. (Marg. Ref. r—u. Notes, 3:8—12. 2 Kings 19:25. Is. 10:8—11. Hos. 8:5,6. 12:10,11.) These riches had been collected, as infamously as a harlot obtains her hire; and they should be wasted and spoiled in a manner equally disgraceful. (*Marg. V. 8, 9. The prophet expressed his deep concern for the calamities which he predicted, by representing himself ready to appear as one frantic with grief; and not only weeping and howling for anguish of spirit, but stripping himself and going naked, as an emblem of the captivity and slavery of his people. (Marg. Ref. y. Note, Is. 20:2—4) and making a most doleful noise, like that of dragons or owls. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. a.) nvade Judah, and march even to the gates of Jerusalem. This they afterwards did under the conduct of Sennacherib. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. b-d. 2 Kings 18:9-13, 17. Is. 15:6, 8-6. 10:28-34.) The word rendered dragons, frequently signifies seamen, but here a land animal seems to be intended. The word may signify a kind of wild beast like a dog, between a dog and a fox, or a wolf and a dog, ... (our English travellers call them Jackals), which, abiding in the fields and waste places, make in the night a lamentable howling noise. Bp. Newcombe.

Owls. (8) Or ostriches. During the lonesome part of the night, they often make a very doleful and hideous noise. I have often heard them, as if they were in the greatest agonies, an action beautifully alluded to by the prophet Micah. Quotation in Bp. Newcombe.

V. 10-16. The prophet seems here to have had in prospect, both the ruin of Samaria and the desolations of Israel by Shalmaneser, and the invasion of Judah by Sennacherib, kings of Assyria. These successes of idolaters against JEHOVAH's worshippers, ought not to be declared at Gath, lest the Philistines should rejoice. (2 Sam. 1:20.) In their presence the Israelites ought not to weep at all. The word "Aphrah" signifies dust: and the prophet, it is likely, puts it here for Ophrah, in the tribe of Benjamin, that the name may better suit their condition. Lowth. In the distressed cities or towns of Israel and Judah, the inhabitants would be called to roll themselves in the dust. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. f.) "Saphir" signifies fair or beautiful; (some think Samaria was intended:) but its inhabitants would be stripped of their comely ornaments, torn from their habitations, and led away as naked slaves. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. g, h. Notes. Is. 31:6, 17. 47:1-3. Ez. 16:35-43, vv. 37, 39.) "Zaanaim" signifies a place of flocks; (Josh. 15:37, Zenan;) Beth-ezel, a house that is near: the inhabitants of the former would not go forth to assist the latter under their distresses; but the enemy would soon fix his station among them; they would share the fate of their neighbours, and the invaders would obtain great advantage by encamping before the city. (Marg.) "Maroth" signifies bitterness, (Josh. 15:59, Marath,) but some think that Ramoth was meant, which signifies exaltations. The inhabitants expected, and earnestly looked out for better tidings, or better times; but "evil came down from the Lord" upon them, and even proceeded to the gates of Jerusalem. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. k. l. Note. Is. 45:7.) Lachish was a city of Judah, but it bordered on Israel; and having learned their idolatries, it communicated them to the inhabitants of other cities, and even to those of Jerusalem: therefore the city would certainly be taken and plundered by the Assyrians; and the inhabitants would be glad to flee away in chariots drawn by horses, dromedaries, or the fleetest animals: and they would give presents to Moresheth-gath, some town belonging to the Philistines, to shelter them from the invaders. (Marg. Ref. m-p. Notes. 2 Kings 18:13. 17:198.) "Achizib" signifies a lie; and thus that city would deceive the expectation of the kings of Israel. (Marg. and Ref.) The Lord would also bring the Assyrians, or their colonies, to be the heirs of "Mareshah," which signifies an heir, or an inheritance; and they would also seize upon Adullam, and mar all the glory of Israel. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. s-u. Note. 2 Chr. 28:6-8.) The honourable men shall be forced to hide themselves from their enemies in the cave of Adullam, as David did when he fled from Saul. (1 Sam. 22:1.) Lowth. The nation might therefore prepare (as a mother) to shew every token of distress and mourning over her children, brought up delicately and greatly delighted in; casting off her ornaments, and cutting off her hair, as the eagle moults its feathers: for they would all in a short time be carried into captivity. (Marg. Ref. x-z.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

They, who would escape the indignation of God, must hearken diligently to the reproofs and warnings, as well as the doctrines and encouragements, of the sacred oracles.—He will bear witness against all that work iniquity, as well as denounce judgment upon them; and his holy temple will not protect hypocrites, but enhance their condemnation.—When he "comes forth from his place" to execute judgment, the haughty and powerful of the earth tremble and fall before him: for how can sinners endure that presence, before which the elements shall melt, and the whole creation shall vanish away?—But our transgressions alone render his presence terrible to us: and if sin be pardoned and subdued, we have nothing to fear at death, or in the day of judgment.—Capital cities and great men too often give examples of idolatry, impiety, and iniquity, which flow from them throughout whole kingdoms, and infect all the lower orders in society: and the judgments of God will follow in the same channels, and in the same proportion: for ringleaders in wickedness must expect to have the first or largest measure of punishment; and that wealth, which is obtained by vice, will be spent or lost with disgrace and misery.—But we should lament the distresses which we foresee are coming upon the ungodly: and tears seem far more congenial to our condition in this world than laughter. No hands can cure the wounds that almighty God inflicts, except his own. (Note. Hos. 6:1-3.) We may hope, wait, and seek for good, but evil must come upon us, unless he be reconciled to us: all other refuges but Christ must be lies, to those who trust in them: other heirs will succeed to every inheritance, except that of heaven; and all glory will be turned into shame, if not connected with "the honour which cometh from God only." Sinners may now selfishly disregard the sufferings of their neighbours; yet their turn will soon come. But it is most grievous, when the sins and sorrows of the church are so notorious, as to rejoice the hearts, or embolden the blasphemies, of her avowed enemies.

having power to overcome all opposition to their iniquities, and to bear them out in them. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 2, 3. 3:8—12. 7:1—4, v. 3. Ps. 36:3, 4. Hos. 7:5—7.)

As they have unjustly deprived others of their inheritance: so shall a conquering enemy dispossess them and carry them into captivity. . . . The word family is equivalent to people. (Jer. 1:15. 8:3. 10:25.) Louth.

V. 4, 5. The Lord, by the Assyrians and Chaldeans, would make the whole house of Israel dolefully to lament, that their portion was changed from prosperity in the promised land, to captivity in that of their enemies. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. n-p. Notes, Is. 14:3—6, v. 4. Jer. 9:10, 11, 17—22. 14:17, 18. Am. 5:1—3, v. 1. 16:17.) He would wonderfully remove their inheritance from them, and, turning away in anger, he would divide their fields to others. Nor should there be any persons appointed, to assign them by lot a portion of land among the congregation of the Lord, as had been the case in the days of Joshua and in the years of jubilee: for they would be totally disinherited and excluded from their peculiar privileges. (Marg. Ref. q-s. Notes, 8—10, v. 10. Deut. 32:8. Josh. 18:3—10. 2 Kings 17:5, 6, 18—24.)

V. 6, 7. The rulers and people endeavoured to silence the true prophets, that they might no more hear their offensive and alarming predictions: and therefore the Lord would deprive them of that invaluable advantage, and let none prophesy to them, to put them to shame or bring them to repentance. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. t-x. Notes, Is. 30:8—11. Am. 7:12—17.) ^{The} latter part of the sentence may be rendered, "Their shame shall not depart," or be removed from them; that is, God hath determined to bring that shame upon them which their sins deserve. Louth.—But did it behoove those, who were called by the name of Jacob, to act as if the Spirit of God might be limited in his operations, and constrained to inspire such things as pleased them, and such alone? Were these the doings of Jacob their pious ancestor? Were these such actions as God would approve? Or were the severe messages of the prophets the Lord's doings, when the sins of the people alone had rendered them necessary? Would they not be acceptable and useful to them, if they uprightly desired to know and do the will of God? And did not all his words, whether they alarmed, humbled, instructed, reproved, or encouraged the people, conduce to the real benefit of all who were upright in heart? (Marg. and Marg. Ref. y-b. Notes, Ps. 19:7—11. Is. 59:1, 2. 2 Cor. 6:11, 13. 2 Pet. 1:20, 21, v. 2.)

V. 8—10. The people who were called the worshippers of ГЕНОВАН, had of late, more than ever before, risen against him and his servants as enemies: they had robbed and plundered the inoffensive and the helpless, even stripping them of their garments: they had forcibly dispossessed the women of the habitations in which they delighted; and had sold their children for slaves, depriving them finally of their liberty, country, religion, and all the privileges which God had bestowed upon Israel as their "glory." (Marg. and Marg. Ref. c-g. Notes, 1—3. Ps. 42. Luke. 2:25—32, v. 32.) The Lord in anger therefore commanded them to arise, and go forth out of the land into captivity. It should no longer be their rest and quiet habitation, seeing it was polluted by their idolatry and iniquity: but it should rather be to them a place of execution, where they would be destroyed in a most tremendous manner. (Marg. Ref. h-l. Notes, Lev. 18:24—30. Deut. 4:25—28. 30:15—20. Ps. 106:35—45. Heb. 4:3—11.)

Many suppose that the ravages committed by Pekah, when Israel made tremendous destruction in Judah, is referred to, as one cause of Israel's ruin. (Note, 2 Chr. 28:5—8.)

V. 11. A man habitually influenced by the spirit of lies, who or the sake of wine and sensual indulgence, would encourage the people to hope for impunity in sin, and abundance of every thing requisite for the gratification of their passions; would be more welcome to them, and more congenial to their sentiments and conduct, than the holy servants of God were: and therefore they would, as a just judgment be left to be deceived by such prophets. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, Jer. 6:13. 8:10—12. Rom. 16:17—20.)

V. 12, 13. Many expositors interpret these verses according to the context, as a prediction of the captivity of Israel and Judah. After great numbers had perished, the remnant of them would be assembled, as a flock of sheep in Bozrah into the midst of the fold, to be thence taken out for slaughter; and the multitude of them or that of their enemies, being large, would make a great noise and tumult. The Assyrian or Chaldean commander would march before the army, to break his way into the city: and after the walls had been destroyed, the gates would be opened, by which they would go forth with their spoil and prisoners, with the king of the victorious army before them; and "the Lord himself at the head of them," prospering their undertakings, and using them as his executioners: and indeed this seems the most obvious interpretation.—Yet very respectable expositors understand the passage as a prophecy of the conversion of the Jews and Israelites to Christ.—The Lord would not only bring back the remnant of the nation from Babylon, multiply them as a flock of sheep, and turn their mourning into joyful exclamations; but he would in due time bring them into the Christian church as the sheep of his pasture. The Lord Jesus, in the character of "The Breaker," would open their way through all obstacles, into a state of communion with God, and happiness in his favour: he would break through all hindrances, by his miraculous incarnation, his obedience and sufferings, resurrection, ascension and intercession; by "leading captivity captive," and opening the gates of heaven to all believers: and by the work of his Spirit in their hearts, breaking off the fetters of sin and Satan. Thus he has gone before, and his people follow, "breaking," in his strength, through the hosts of their enemies, that obstruct their way to heaven. Their King has passed before them, and the Lord is at their head, and he leads them forward to share his victories and triumphs, till they enter the same everlasting mansions, and death the last enemy be destroyed.—The conversion and restoration of the Jews, according to this interpretation, are especially foretold. PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The more deliberately wickedness is contrived and committed, the greater guilt is contracted: and men must give an account of all that passes in their hearts, on their beds, and in their most secret retirements. Yet many think every thing allowable that is practicable, and which for the present may be done with impunity; regardless of the wo God has denounced against successful plunderers and oppressors. Indeed princes and rulers often have it "in the power of their hand" to do whatever they will. What need, therefore, have they constantly to pray, that God would incline their hearts to do that, and that only, which is pleasing in his sight; and for the best interests of their subjects! And how earnestly should we all pray, that God would thus rule, direct, and incline the hearts of kings, and all that are in authority over their fellow-men in every part of the world, especially in our own land!—The unwearied diligence of wicked men, in their sinful pursuits, should shame us out of our indolence in the service of God. When covetousness occupies the heart, violence and fraud commonly employ the hands: and while men thus oppress whole families, and rob even the remote posterity of their heritage, to enrich themselves; they forget, that the almighty God "devises evil against them," from which they will find no possible way of escape; and that an evil time is coming, when they shall no more behave themselves with haughtiness and insolence. Then their joyful congratulations will be turned into doleful lamentations, that they are utterly spoiled, driven from their earthly portion, and excluded for ever from all share in the inheritance of "the congregation of the LORD." No wonder men of this character hate the faithful messengers of God, who would put them to shame for their sins: they have only the name of Christians, or they would not think to modify the language of the Holy Spirit by human authority, to silence those whom God commands to speak, or to teach his ministers to accommodate their doctrine to gratify their passions, or political measures. These are not the doings of true Israelites, who are "without guile," and who love and profit by all the words of God. Such nominal Christians are in fact the worst enemies of God.

have broken up, and have passed through the gate, and are gone out by it; and their king shall pass before them, and the Lord on the head of them.

CHAPTER III.

Micah reproves the princes for their cruelty, and the prophets for their falsehoods and selfishness, 1-7. He declares himself inspired, emboldened, and authorised by the Spirit of God, to protest against the sins and oppression of the princes, priests, and prophets; and to denounce the desolation of the city and temple, 8-12.

AND I said, "Hear, I pray you, O heads of Jacob, and ye princes of the house of Israel: Is it not for you to know judgment?"

2 Who hate the good, and love the evil; who pluck off their skin from off them, and their flesh from off their bones;

3 Who also eat the flesh of my people, and flay their skin from off them, and they break their bones, and chop them in pieces, as for the pot, and as flesh within the caldron.

4 Then shall they cry unto the Lord, but he will not hear them: he will even hide his face from them at that time, as they have behaved themselves ill in their doings.

5 Thus saith the Lord concerning the prophets that make my people err, that bite with their teeth, and cry, Peace; and he that putteth not into their mouths, they even prepare war against him:

6 Therefore, night shall be unto you, that ye shall not have a vision; and it shall be dark unto you, that ye shall not divine; and the sun shall go down over the prophets, and the day shall be dark over them.

7 Then shall the seers be ashamed, and the diviners confounded: yea, they shall all cover their lips; for there is no answer of God.

8 But truly I am full of power by the Spirit of the Lord, and of judgment, and of might, to declare unto Jacob his transgression, and to Israel his sin.

9 Hear this, I pray you, ye heads of the house of Jacob, and princes of the house of Israel, that abhor judgment, and pervert all equity.

10 They build up Zion with blood, and Jerusalem with iniquity.

11 The heads thereof judge for reward, and the priests thereof teach for hire, and the prophets thereof divine for money: yet will they lean upon the Lord, and say, Is not the Lord among us? none evil can come upon us.

and his church, and often join persecution of his people with oppression of the widow and the orphan: and their polluted privileges will soon be taken from them and turn to their destruction.—Teachers, who recommend self-indulgence by their doctrine and example, best suit them; and they will generally be given up to such deceivers. But Christ's sheep "hear his voice, and follow him;" he gathers them into his fold and feeds them in his pasture: and an innumerable multitude are already collected, who are before the throne, joyfully ascribing salvation to God and to the Lamb that was slain. As he has rent the veil, and opened our way to the throne of grace; as he has burst the grave, and opened the gates of heaven, and entered as our Forerunner; let us depend on him and follow him, and so break through the maxims and customs of the world, the opposition of sin and Satan, and all the difficulties in our way to glory. And when we are called to arise, and depart out of this polluted world to our rest in heaven, we need fear no evil in passing through death and the grave; for he will be with us, and bring us both in soul and body to his holy habitation. (Notes, Ps. 23:4-6. John 10:26-31. Rev. 7:13-17.)

NOTES.—CHAP. III. V. 1-4. The rulers of Israel might be intended by this address, as well as those of Judah; yet the latter seem to be chiefly meant. They had every opportunity of knowing the rules of justice and equity, and it was peculiarly incumbent on them to understand and practise them: yet they carelessly, nay, wilfully, continued ignorant of them, or decided causes and enacted laws in opposition to them. (Marg. Ref. a, b. Notes, 8-12, v. 8. Ps. 82:2-5. Jer. 5:3-6.) They evidently hated every thing good and all pious men; and loved wickedness, and the wicked by whom they could serve their own base purposes. Instead of feeding and protecting the Lord's flock, they fleeced, butchered, and devoured them; reducing the poor people to the deepest misery by their cruel exactions and oppressions. (Marg. Ref. c-f. Notes, 2:1-3, 7:1-4. Is. 10:1-4. Jer. 5:30, 31. Ez. 22:27, 28, 34:2-10, 17-22. Am. 5:10-15. Zeph. 3:1-4. Zech. 11:4-6. Matt. 23:14. Jam. 5:1-6.) They would therefore shortly cry out under the oppressions of their enemies, or other great distresses; but the Lord would utterly disregard them, according to their behaviour to him, and to their poor brethren. (Marg. Ref. g, h. Notes, Prov. 21:13. Is. 1:10-15. § 3-7. Zech. 7:13. Jam. 2:8-13, v. 13.)—These verses are also peculiarly descriptive of the character and conduct of the Jewish scribes, priests, and rulers, in the days of Christ and his apostles; and perhaps predict the sultry condition of that people.

V. 5-7. The false prophets likewise were most heinously criminal, and indeed one great cause of the general wickedness of the nation. They flattered the people into a delusive expectation of peace in their evil ways: yet they were ready to bite and devour such as opposed them; and even to declare war against those who would not satisfy their avarice and rapacity, being "greedy dogs that could never have enough;" so that their peaceable and soft language was restricted to their prophesying, before those who paid well for them. (Marg. Ref. i, m. Notes, 2:11. Is. 9:13-17, vv. 15, 16, 56:9—

12. Jer. 14:13-16. 23:13, 25-32. 28:10-17. Lam. 4:13-16. Ez. 13:1-16. 22:25-28. Matt. 7:15-20. Rom. 16:17-20.) Therefore the approaching distresses should convince their prognostications, and prevent them from pretending to any more visions. The sun of their prosperity, reputation, and hope would suddenly be darkened, and leave them in misery, contempt, and despair. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. n, o. Notes, Is. 8:20-22, 29:10-12. 59:9-15, v. 9, 10. Jer. 15:8, 9. Am. 8:4-10, vv. 8, 9.) God would shame and silence all such seers and diviners; and they should cover their lips, as mourners or unclean persons; confessing that they could obtain no answer from God, to their anxious inquiries concerning the end of their calamities. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. p, r. Notes, Ps. 74:9. Hos. 3:4, 5. Zech. 13:4-6.)—How exactly does this describe the state of that once favoured nation, for above the last seventeen hundred years!

V. 8-12. It is probable, that Micah was greatly opposed by the wicked princes and false prophets: but he knew and confidently declared, that he spake by the authority of God, and the inspiration of his Spirit; that he was abundantly endowed with honesty, courage, wisdom, and energy to deliver his faithful message, whether they would hear it, or not; and that he was especially commissioned to declare unto the house of Jacob the number and heinousness of their sins. He therefore as evidencing his courage and impartiality, called on the rulers of the people to attend, and not to persist in fighting against God. (Marg. Ref. s-u. Note, 1-4.) They indeed abhorred all justice and perverted equity: they had beautified the city with magnificent houses, and fortified it with walls, and perhaps repaired or added buildings to the temple; but it was done with money, which had been the wages of murder and oppression. The magistrates, priests, and prophets were alike mercenary and avaricious: yet they presumed upon their external privileges, "the temple of God," and their formal worship: so that when they were warned of approaching judgments, they inquired "whether the Lord were not among them;" and were confident no evil would befall them. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. y-d. Notes, 5-7, v. 5. Is. 1:21-24, 48:1-2. Jer. 5:30, 31. 7:3-11. 22:13-19. Ez. 22:25-28, Zeph. 3:1-4. Acts 6:9-14.) To punish therefore their hypocrisy and iniquity, the city would certainly be desolated and become heaps of rubbish; and the mountain, on which the temple stood, would be rendered as waste and unfrequented, as the forests and deserts.—This prophecy was delivered in the reign of Hezekiah, and probably in the beginning of it. (Marg. Ref. e, f. Note, Jer. 26:16-19.) The princes, priests, and prophets, in general, either discountenanced his zeal for reformation, or concurred in a hypocritical manner: but the king was decided; and these predictions seem to have encouraged and quickened his endeavours, and to have stirred up more persons to concur with him; by which means the judgments were retarded, but not averted.—The destruction of the city and temple by the Romans, as well as that by the Chaldeans, seems to have been predicted; in which the ground, where the temple stood, is said to have been broken up with a plough by the conquerors.—The avowed counsel of Caiaphas to put our Lord

12 Therefore, shall ^aZion for your sake be ploughed as a field, and Jerusalem shall become heaps, and the mountain of the house as the high places of the forest.

CHAPTER IV.

A prediction of the establishment, enlargement, peace, and prosperity of the church in the latter days, 1-8. Assurances that Zion's troubles should end happily, and her enemies be destroyed, 9-13.

BUT ^ain the last days it shall come to pass, ^bthat the mountain of the house of the LORD shall be established in the top of the mountains, and it shall be exalted above the hills; ^cand people shall flow unto it.

2 And many nations shall come, ^dand say, Come, and let us go up to the mountain of the LORD, and to the house of the God of Jacob; ^eand he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths: ^ffor the law shall go forth of Zion, and the word of the LORD from Jerusalem.

3 ^gAnd he shall judge among many people, ^hand rebuke strong nations afar off; ⁱand they shall beat their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into ^jpruninghooks: nation shall not lift up a sword against nation, ^kneither shall they learn war any more.

4 But they shall sit every man under his vine and under his fig-tree; ^mand none shall make them afraid: ⁿfor the mouth of the LORD of hosts hath spoken it.

5 For all people will walk every one in the name of his god, ^pand we will walk in the name of the LORD our God for ever and ever.

6 In that day, saith the LORD, ^qwill I assemble her that halteth, ^rand I will gather her that is driven out, and her that I have afflicted;

7 And ^sI will make her that halted a remnant, and her that was cast far off a strong nation: ^tand the LORD shall reign over them in mount Zion from henceforth, even for ever.

8 ^uI And thou, ^vO tower of the flock, ^wthe strong hold of the daughter of Zion, unto thee shall it come, even ^xthe first dominion; the kingdom shall come to the daughter of Jerusalem.

9 Now ^ywhy dost thou cry out aloud? ^zis there no king in thee? is thy counsellor perished? ^{aa}for pangs have taken thee as a woman in travail.

to death, without alleging any charge against him, that the nation might not perish, was a remarkable instance of that carnal policy, by which princes and priests have attempted to build Zion with blood, even the blood of the prophets, apostles, and ministers of God, nay, by that of his well-beloved Son. (Notes, John 11:49-53.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Princes and magistrates are more concerned to know judgment than other men, as their conduct has more important, extensive, and permanent effects: and princes in Israel have abundant opportunity of knowing it. Yet, through human depravity, and the disadvantages and temptations peculiar to their situation, they are often ignorant of the rules by which they ought to govern, judge, or act: and sometimes they most evidently prove, that they "hate the good and love the evil," by their iniquitous exactions and oppressions. Thus thousands are made miserable to humour the caprice, to maintain the luxury and ostentation, or to gratify the ambition or avarice of one cruel tyrant! But let not such men expect to be heard or favoured by God, when they shall cry unto him in extreme distress; for "they shall have judgment without mercy, who have showed no mercy." Alas! these wholesome truths seldom reach the ears of those to whom they are most needful; but who are too generally environed with flatterers, or teachers of lies, whom they reward with a share of their plunder and riot. Such are smooth in their doctrine, soft in their manners, and courtly in their address; but they can snarl and bite too, if their inferiors offend them; and contend furiously and maliciously with those who refuse to satisfy their mercenary demands. And, though they are "dumb dogs that cannot bark" in the cause of God, yet they open their mouths wide to revile and to devour. But "the light that is in them is darkness;" their prosperity and honour will soon end in misery and disgrace, and their sanguine hope in black despair: they will be ashamed of their lying divinations and erroneous doctrines, by which they have fatally misled the people; and they shall have no answer from God in the time of their distress. On the other hand, he who preaches by the authority and according to the oracles of God, from zeal for his glory and love to the souls of men; who is conscious of integrity, and assured of the truth of his doctrine, may speak with constancy and confidence in the midst of calumny and opposition: though he should be called upon to expose the transgressions of princes and priests, "who abhor judgment," and prostitute their important offices to the gratification of their vile avarice, ambition, malice, or sensuality. Even such men may be so blinded by self-flattery, and in the just judgment of God, as to have a presumptuous confidence in him, and expect security in sin, because of their abused privileges, unmeaning forms, and hypocritical profession: but they must be told that they are in the way of destruction; and it should be known by all, that rulers and teachers of this description are the causes of ruin to churches and nations, and are answerable for all the calamities which for their sakes come upon them.

the establishment of the Christian church, in consequence of the abrogation of the Mosaic dispensation, and the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, were predicted. But, though it has in a measure been fulfilling ever since those events, yet its grand accomplishment must be future: for "the Scripture cannot be broken;" and the nations have not yet so submitted to the Prince of peace, as to "beat their swords into ploughshares," nor has war ceased to be a science and a profession. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Rev. 20:1-6.)

V. 4. This beautiful addition to the prophecy, as it stands in Isaiah, denotes the sweet harmony which in those happy days shall prevail among Christians, in communing with God and with each other; their perfect security, and peaceful industry; their thankful and comfortable use of temporal plenty, and the abundance of their spiritual consolations. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 1 Kings 4:25, Zech. 3:10.)

V. 5. The Gentiles were tenacious of the religion of their ancestors, and took pleasure in worshipping their imaginary deities: whilst Israel had always been disposed to grow weary of the worship of God, and to relapse into idolatry. (Note, Jer. 2:10-12.) But, in the predicted period, the true Israel will "cleave to the Lord with purpose of heart," and delight greatly in worshipping his name and doing his will with constancy and perseverance.—This is, in some measure, the desire, purpose, and conduct of true believers in every age: God is their Portion, and his service will be their happiness for ever and ever.—This will be remarkably fulfilled at the general conversion of the Jews, when this prophecy shall receive its utmost completion. Louth. (*Marg. V. 6, 7. The collecting of the enfeebled and dispersed Jewish captives, from Babylon to Jerusalem, (as sheep that had been lamed, or driven away by robbers,) and their subsequent increase into a considerable remnant, and then into a strong nation, under the government of the Lord, formed but a faint shadow of the rapid increase of the Christian church, amidst all her persecutions and afflictions in the first age after Christ: and this was only an earnest of the healing, purifying, increasing, and prospering of the church which we wait for; When the kingdom of the Lord shall be conspicuously set up, the Jews shall be readmitted into the church, and restored to their own land; and the fullness of the Gentiles converted: and this reign of Christ shall continue till it is succeeded by the everlasting kingdom of heaven.—Though I have broken the power of my people, removed them into captivity far off, and afflicted them: yet will I restore them to their country, I will send them the Messiah, and will always be their King.—For ever. This will be fulfilled at the future restoration of the Jews. Bp. Newcombe. (*Marg. Ref. V. 8-10. Mount Zion was the Tower of the Lord's flock under the old dispensation, the centre of their union, and the special residence of their Protector; and the temple was its strong hold. (*Marg. 1) Be in pain and labour to bring forth, O daughter of Zion, like a woman in travail: for now shalt thou go forth out of the city, and thou shalt dwell in the field, and thou shalt go even to Babylon; there shalt thou be delivered; there the Lord shall redeem thee from the hand of thine enemies.

11 ¶ Now also many nations are gathered against thee, that say, Let her be defiled, and let our eye look upon Zion.

12 But they know not the thoughts of the Lord, neither understand they his counsel: for he shall gather them as the sheaves into the floor.

13 Arise and thrash, O daughter of Zion: for

I will make thy horn iron, and I will make thy hoofs brass: and thou shalt beat in pieces many people: and I will consecrate their gain unto the Lord, and their substance unto the Lord of the whole earth.

CHAPTER V.

A prophecy of the birth and kingdom of Christ; and of his powerful protection of his people, 1-6; of the increase, purity, and peace of the church, and the ruin of his enemies, 7-13.

NOW gather thyself in troops, O daughter of troops: he hath laid siege against us: they shall smite the judge of Israel with a rod upon the cheek.

2 But thou, Beth-lehem Ephratah, though thou be little among the thousands of Judah, yet out of thee shall he come forth unto me, that would be like the first dominion of Israel in the days of David and Solomon; and would surpass and supersede all other monarchies. The Son of David would come to Jerusalem and establish his kingdom, and thence its influence would extend to other nations. And, though that city would soon after be destroyed: yet the evangelical church, the spiritual Zion, would succeed to it; in which Christ reigns for the benefit of his people, and his cause must prevail even to the end of the world. (Marg. Ref. z. Notes, Num. 24:18,19. Is. 1:25-27. Dan. 2:34,35,44,45. 7:19-27. v. 22,27. Zech. 9:9,10.)—Indeed the calamities to be endured by Zion, from the Assyrian invasion, and during the Chaldean ravages, and the taking and destruction of the city, (which were typical of the subsequent calamities of the Jewish nation and of the church,) would cause her "to cry aloud," as a woman in her pangs; and as if there were no king to protect, or counsellor to direct her. But why did she yield to disconsolate sorrow? Let her remember that her pains were those of travail, not the agonies of death, that she might have hope under them, and know how to exert herself for deliverance. (Marg. Ref. a-d. Notes, Is. 66:7-9. Jer. 4:30,31. 30:5-9. v. 6,7. 12-18. John 16:16-22. v. 21.) She would certainly be driven out of the city, and dwell as in an open field, and even be dragged to Babylon as a captive: yet that crisis would make way for her happy restoration and for better times, when the Lord would redeem her from the hand of her enemies.—This event shadowed forth the recovery of the Jews from their present dispersions, and the deliverance of the Christian church from antichristian tyranny. (Marg. Ref. e, g. Notes, 7:8-10. Is. 6:11-13. Ez. 20:33-38. Hos. 2:14-17. Rev. 11:3-18.)

V. 11-13. Many nations would be collected against Zion, to pollute her by their idolatries, or forward and exult in her calamities. But they would not understand, that the Lord collected them, as sheaves of corn are gathered upon the floor to be thrashed; and Zion, weak and dispirited as she then was, should be strengthened, as with "horns of iron and hoofs of brass," to trample them down and beat them in pieces; and, being enriched by their plunder, she would consecrate her gain to the Lord of the whole earth, by whose assistance these victories would be obtained. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Ps. 149:7-9. Is. 41:15,16. 54:15-17. 60:4-7. Ez. 38:39. Joel 3:9-17. Zech. 9:12-16. 14:1-3. Rev. 2:24-28. 14:14-20. 21:22-27.)—There occurs nothing in the history of the Jewish church, which fully accords to this prediction. Sennacherib's army was not destroyed by the Jews; nor had they any hand in the subversion of the Babylonian monarchy. The victories of the Maccabees over Antiochus might be a partial accomplishment of it; and so might that of the Christian church over the power of her persecutors, after the conversion of Constantine; but certainly the grand accomplishment is yet in futurity.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

While we wait for those last days, in which the kingdom of Christ shall be exalted above all other dominions, and extended over all nations, let us be thankful for our own peculiar privileges, and excite ourselves and each other to frequent the ordinances of our God; that we may learn and walk in his holy ways, receiving the law from his hands; which, being written in our hearts by his Spirit, may evidence our interest in the righteousness of the great Redeemer. Let us also "endeavour to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace," and to live peaceably with all men: that while the nations of the earth still continue to learn and practise war, and numbers delight in discord and confusion; it may appear by our conduct, that harmony, equity, truth, and love, are genuine effects of faith in Christ, and of his gospel when truly obeyed. Even in this world of contention and violence, if we have peace with God, and with our consciences and our brethren, we may rest securely under the divine protection, and fear no enemy: we may rejoice in our privileges, and "walk in the name of our God," with grateful praises and unabated alacrity and vigour: and we ought to cleave to him with far more constancy, than the men of this world do to their idolized possessions and pleasures.—Even the weak in faith, and those who have been wounded and made to halt, in their conflicts with temptation, or who have been cast out by their brethren, or driven away by persecution, or weighed down by affliction, may yet hope in God. When they look to him, he will gather, strengthen, and heal them, and take care of them, as their King and Protector: even as he will render his enfeebled oppressed church "a strong nation," and superior to all enemies or competitors. In his glory his people shall be glorious, and the feeblest believer shall rejoice in the joy of his inheritance: and all the afflictions of the church, and of the believer, are sure to end happily. We should then cry aloud with the prayer of faith, not with the voice of despondency, under our distresses. We have an omnipotent King to rule over us, and an all-wise Counsellor to advise us; his promises engage that the crisis of extreme sorrow shall introduce the most joyful deliverance, to all who love and obey him; for he will redeem them from all their enemies.—But those who unite against Zion, to pollute her, or to triumph over her, are ignorant of these intentions and counsels of our God, and are not aware that they are compassing their own destruction, and that they are only collecting together to be destroyed.—As the strength and victory of believers are wholly from the Lord, they can do no less than ascribe all the glory to his name, and consecrate all their powers, advantages, and possessions to his service. Let us thus gird on our armour, and arise to "fight the good fight of faith;" and amidst our conflicts, let us rejoice in hope of being made more than conquerors, and anticipate the songs of heaven; and, dedicating all our talents to his service, let us, seek and pray, that as the Redeemer of sinners, and the Object of all love and worship to his ransomed people, he may become "the Lord of the whole earth."

NOTES.—CHAP. V. V. 1. The complete victory of Zion over all her enemies having been predicted, in the close of the preceding chapter; (Note, 4:11-13.) they are here challenged to collect their forces for the assault. Either Nineveh or Babylon seems to be meant by "the daughter of troops;" as their prosperity arose from success in war, and they were renowned for valiant soldiers.—The king of Assyria besieged Samaria, and he or his captains insulted Hosea, the judge or king of Israel, with all indignities; as the victorious king of Babylon also did Zedekiah, when he had besieged and taken Jerusalem. (Notes, 2 Kings 17:4. 25:6,7.) Some have thought, that the outrageous conduct of Sennacherib and Rabshakeh to Hezekiah was meant; but Sennacherib did not lay siege to Jerusalem, nor was Hezekiah ever in his power. Many however suppose, that Rome was intended by "the daughter of troops;" and that the Romans were called upon to collect their armies to besiege Jerusalem, because the Jews had thus insulted and despised Christ, the Judge of Israel. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Deut. 28:49-57. Lam. 3:26-30. v. 30. Matt. 26:63-68. v. 67,68. Luke 19:41-44.)

V. 2. The house of David would be reduced very low, yet the city of David would certainly be honoured by the nativity of the Messiah. "Ephratah" distinguishes Bethlehem in Judah, from another place of the same name, in a different part of the land; (Josh. 19:15,16.) and therefore Matthew here quotes the passage according to the meaning, not verbally: "And thou Bethlehem, in the land of Judah." This city had been reduced to be small among the flourishing cities of that numerous tribe, and its many thousands under their princes: yet the birth of Christ would so dignify it, that it would by no means be the least honourable of them: (Note Matt. 2:3-6.) for he would come forth thence, to be Ruler in Israel, upon the throne of David for evermore. (Marg. Ref. o-k. Notes, Luke 1:26-33,46-55.) Or the clause may be read interrogatively, "Art thou little among the thousands of Judah?"—The words, "unto me," may either refer to the

V. 7-9. The remnant of Israel, that was converted to Christ in the primitive times, namely the apostles, evangelists, and first teachers and professors of the gospel, were scattered among "many people" or nations, as the drops of dew, or the showers of rain on the earth, which cause grass to grow in those places where no human culture is employed, and without waiting for the help of man. Thus they went into the cities and villages of the Gentiles, not as sent for by them, or commissioned by human authority, or depending on the power or wisdom of man; but as immediately employed, qualified, and prospered by God; and by their doctrine, prayers, and examples, they were the instruments of rendering those barren deserts fruitful, in a large increase of spiritual worshippers, and holy servants of God, our Saviour.—No doubt the converted Jews will in future times exhibit a still more striking completion of this part of the prophecy. (*Marg. Ref. g-i. Notes, Deut. 32. Judges 6:36-40. Ps. 72:4-7. 110:3. Is. 32:15-20, 55:10-13. Ez. 47:1-12. Hos. 6:1-3. 14:3-8. Joel 2:28-32. Zech. 14:6-9. Mark 16:4-16, 19, 20. Acts 9:15-16. 11:8. For their doctrine would condemn them; and the Lord, concurring by his providence, would cut off all their enemies.—The destruction of the enemies of the Jews, after their future restoration to their own

The Lord has a controversy with his people for their great ingratitude, 1-5. The sin of apostasy of alarmed sinners to obtain his favour, contrasted with his reasonable requirements and service, 6-8. His voice against the city which should be attended to, 9. Reproofs of Israel's iniquity and idolatry; with awful threatenings, 10-16.

HEAR ye now what the LORD saith; Arise, contend thou before the mountains, and let the hills hear thy voice.

2 Hear ye, O mountains, the LORD's controversy, and ye strong foundations of the earth: for the LORD hath a controversy with his people, and he will plead with Israel.

3 O my people, what have I done unto thee?

V. 10-15. In those happy times, God promised to wean the people from all confidence in chariots, horses, cities, and strong-holds, even as though they had been entirely destroyed; and to purge out all sorcery, witchcraft, and idolatry, and the relics of those abominations from among them: and, having done this, he would destroy their enemies, (so the word translated cities, may be rendered, marg.) and "execute vengeance in anger and in fury, on the nations which have not hearkened unto me." Bp. Neucombe. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, 7-9. Is. 2:6-21. 27:7-11. Hos. 1:5,7. 14:1-8. vv. 3,8. Zech. 4:4-7. 9:9,10. 13:2,3.) The reformation of the Jews after their return from Babylon might be alluded to: but the purification of the Christian church from all antichristian corruptions of faith and worship, and all idolatry and superstition, seems more immediately to be predicted. The reliance on human merits for justification; the external pomp used in worship; and the oppressive exercise of human authority in mere matters of conscience, will be entirely destroyed, by the clear light of divine truth and the power of divine grace; and simplicity and purity in doctrine, worship, and practice will prevail, when the enemies of the church shall be destroyed.—The purity also of restored Israel, and the judgments on their formidable opposers, are predicted: indeed this seems the more direct meaning of the prophecy. PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Those who delight or excel in war, often gather themselves against the church of God; and sometimes they treat the most honourable and excellent of the saints, as the Judge of Israel and of all the world was treated in the days of his humiliation: but they cannot prevail against the cause which God upholds, or prevent the accomplishment of his decrees. We ought not then to be impatient, or to despond, under any contumely or cruelty with which we meet for his sake. On the contrary, we should look steadfastly to the divine glory of 'our Redeemer, "whose goings forth have been from of old, 'never everlasting;" and upon his condescending love to sinners, when he humbled himself to appear in our nature, and to become poor and a sufferer, that he might be our Prince and Saviour, and that by ruling over us he might confer the most invaluable blessings. A relation to him ennoble the meanest, and enriches the poorest; and surely we shall not refuse to obey him, who has a right to our services, purchased by his unspeakable sufferings for us and immense obligations conferred on us!—Great have been the effects of his redemption: yet his church is still left to struggle with various difficulties; and will continue to be so, till the arrival of that grand deliverance, for which it travels and is in pain to this hour, when Jews and Gentiles shall, all over the earth, meet as brethren in Christ Jesus.—In the mean time let us trust to our Shepherd's care and power: he stands as one intent upon his work, and feeds his purchased flock with divine condescension, majesty, and authority; his very looks appal the wolves that would devour his harmless sheep, and they abide unhurt amidst their powerful and enraged enemies. How great and glorious ought his name to be throughout the earth! He is our Peace; and, having reconciled us to God by his blood, he gives us inward peace in our outward tribulations. (Notes, Eph. 2:14-18. Phil. 4:5-7. Col. 1:18-20.) If he permit the assaults of our enemies, he will supply helpers and assistance sufficient for us; and all the power of every enemy shall fall before those "shepherds and principal persons," whom he employs to maintain and propagate his truth and cause. As he employed the converted Jews, like dew and rain, to fructify the Gentile nations, so should we endeavour to be in our several places in his church and in the world; aiming to glorify God, and expecting the blessing from him, and not waiting for men's solicitation to attempt their good, nor growing weary through their ingratitude. Yet the most beneficent, zealous, and useful Christians and ministers will prove the occasions of the deepest condemnation to obstinate unbelievers and enemies; and as their ruin will be attended with the purification of the church from every error and defilement; so we shall be assured of victory in our personal conflicts, in proportion as we simply depend upon the Lord our Salvation, worship him spiritually, and serve him with devoted diligence in all his ordinances and commandments.

NOTES.—CHAP. VI. V. 1, 2. After having delivered the foregoing evangelical predictions, (5:7-15.) the prophet was again employed to reprove the sins of the people. He called upon them to hear the word of God: for he had ordered him to arise, and with great boldness and earnestness to contend with them, in God's behalf, before the mountains and hills: that even these strong foundations of the earth might hear his controversy with Israel, and his pleading against them: and so witness and declare his righteousness, in the punishments inflicted on them.—He taketh the high mountains and hard rocks to witness against the obstinacy of his people.—The most mighty monarchs, the most renowned sages, or most powerful nations of the earth, might thus be figuratively appealed to. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, Deut. 4:25-28. v. 26. 32:1. Ps. 50:1,2,4-6. Is. 1:2. Jer. 22:28-30. v. 29. Ez. 36:1.)

V. 3-5. The people were here called upon to declare what had aggrieved them, that they were become weary of God's worship, and prone to idolatry. Had he ever oppressed them with burdensome or unreasonable services? Or had he refused to supply their wants and protect them? If they had any thing to urge against his commandments, institutions, or dispensations, let them testify against him. (Marg. Ref. f-h. Notes, Is. 43:22-25. Jer. 2:5,31,32.) Having redeemed them from slavery in Egypt, he had placed Moses, Aaron, and Miriam over them, to rule and teach them, and help them in the exercises of their religion. (Marg. Ref. k-m. Notes, Ez. 15:20,21. Num. 12:1,2.) Nor ought they to forget the consultations of Balak and Balaam, about cursing and prevailing against them; and how the Lord constrained Balaam to bless them altogether, in every place from whence he viewed them: and how he had prevented the more fatal effects of his last diabolical device against them, and turned it against Balaam, Balak, and the Moabites. (Marg. Ref. n-q. Notes, Num. 22-25:) Thence they might learn the equity, faithfulness, and kindness of the Lord towards them, and the righteousness of his present dealings with them: for this was a specimen of his continual protection, for which they were inexcusably ungrateful.—Shittim was in the plains of Moab, Gilgal lay west of Jordan. (Note, Josh. 5:9.)—All the favours shown to Israel, from Balaam's attempts to curse them, till they were encamped in the promised land, are here referred to.

Righteousness. (5) 'We may often observe that the original word includes the notion of mercy.' Bp. Neucombe.—When that to which sinners had no claim, is mercifully promised, as in this instance, then the righteousness or justice of God is concerned in fulfilling that promise: but justice and mercy are in most cases opposed to each other. (Notes, Is. 45:20-22. v. 21. Rom. 3:21-26. v. 26. 2 Thes. 1:5-10. vv. 5-7. 1 John 1:8-10. v. 9.)

V. 6-8. Some approved expositors understand these verses as the substance of Balak's consultation with Balaam, concerning the method of obtaining the favour of Israel's God, that he might give them leave to curse his people; and of Balaam's answer, recommending to him justice, mercy, and a humble walk with God. But this does not at all agree with the history of those transactions: for Balaam seems, from first to last, to have recommended to Balak not doing but numerous and costly sacrifices; and when these failed, he counselled him to draw the Israelites into fornication and and his family, were observed to the times of Micah; not only in Israel, but as it seems, in some parts of Judah, as if of higher authority than the law of God: and their hateful maxims, counsels, and examples were attended to. It was therefore proper that the offenders should be exposed to contempt and desolation; and that they should bear reproach from the heathen, as the worshippers of God, seeing they had acted so inconsistently with that character. PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-8. The ministers of God must be very earnest, faithful, and intrepid, in pleading his cause against his enemies; and when his controversy with his rebellious subjects, and especially with hypocrites, shall be openly decided, the whole creation will applaud his justice in their condemnation.—The excellency of our God, the goodness of his laws, the grace of his gospel, the pleasantness of his service, and the kindness of his providence, should all combine to make us ashamed of the negligence and inconstancy of our obedience: for we often act, as if his service was wearisome, and we were disposed to renounce it. But if we were called to speak, and plead our own cause, we could neither testify aught against him, or urge any reasonable excuse for ourselves: nor can rebels or apostates in any measure justify or excuse themselves in “departing from the living God.”—We should always remember the mercies, which our progenitors have long ago received, and which tended greatly to our advantage: and the oracles of God, and good teachers, rulers, and examples, are to be valued among our most valuable privileges. Could we know how often the Lord has defeated the machinations of Satan and his servants against us, we should have abundant proof of his kindness and of our own ingratitude; and this would show his righteousness in his sharpest corrections. Plain remonstrances, on this and similar subjects, are suitable means of alarming men’s consciences, and showing their need of “coming before the most high God” to deprecate his wrath. Under deep convictions and terrors, sinners would do much, nay almost any thing, to appease him and quiet their own consciences: but while they remain ignorant of the gospel, or prejudiced against it, they either rest in external ordinances and good behaviour, as a compound system of self-righteousness; or they run into expensive, burdensome, and painful services, which God has not commanded; nay, perhaps they are seduced into an endeavour to please him, by those things which are most atrocious and horrid. For, if it were possible, in great terrors of conscience, men would present to the Lord “ten thousand rivers of oil;” and numbers have actually sought to expiate their guilt by the murder and massacre of heretics, by human sacrifices, and even by “giving their first-born, the fruit of their body, for the sin of their souls.” These practices must arise from mistaken apprehensions of the divine character; and are more suited to the worshippers of Satan, than to those of JEHOVAH. Blessed be his name, he has in his word revealed to us a way of access, a propitiatory Sacrifice, and a method of applying for the benefits of it, which are honourable to him, and admirably suited to our case. And, would we show the sincerity of our repentance and faith and love, he requires nothing from us, but to “do justly, to love mercy, and to walk humbly with our God;” for notwithstanding our manifold failures, even in this return of grateful obedience; he is ever ready to renew his pardon, and to communicate his grace to the humble waiting penitent.

V. 9-16. In order that sinners may receive instruction, the Lord calls them by the voice of his word, and by that of his providence: in these warnings, the wise behold his glory and read his character; they hear the correcting rod, speak to them of the evil of sin, and their need of repentance; they learn the lessons which he teaches, and call others to attend and to consider who has appointed their afflictions; that they may not murmur or despond, but derive good from them. But if this voice be disregarded, the sword of vengeance will be drawn: for so bent is man on wickedness, that amidst all judgments and warnings he is inwardly propense to proceed in covetous, fraudulent, or oppressive endeavours to grow rich, to enjoy pleasure and pomp, or distinction, and in various ways to multiply lies and deceit. Thus heavier sufferings are ensured, the satisfaction of outward mercies is marred, and the wrath of God may be expected to corrode the inmost soul: nor can there be deliverance, except by repentance, faith, and renewed obedience. But alas! men are much more ready to observe and cleave to iniquitous and ungodly laws, counsels, and maxims, than to “walk in the good ways of the LORD;” and when this is the case with his professing people, they may expect a double portion of misery and shame, nay, unless they repent, “shame and everlasting contempt.”

NOTES.—CHAP. VII. V. 1-4. This description of the wickedness of the people, especially in Judah, has been thought inconsistent with the times of Hezekiah; and it has therefore been considered as prophetic of the wicked reign of Manasseh. But perhaps the prophet witnessed such scenes towards the close of Hezekiah’s reign, as caused him dolefully to prestage the ensuing apostasy. He lamented that after all his zealous labours he could find very few pious persons: but was like a man who went into an orchard or vineyard, after the fruit had been gathered; and, instead of satisfying himself with the first-ripe fruit, which was most valued and plentiful, could not find a single cluster of grapes, but only a few gleanings of inferior goodness. He longed to live among eminent believers, but he found very few who had any sense of piety, and these were far inferior to their pious ancestors. For good and merciful men were taken to heaven, and the land was deprived of them, till an upright person could scarcely be found. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. a-d. Notes, Ps. 121:4. Is. 17:4-8. 24:13-15. 57:1,2.) In general they sought to enrich themselves, by murdering or ruining their neighbours; even as hunters pursue their game into the net. They were exceedingly diligent and active in mischief, doing it “with both hands earnestly,” or effectually. They excelled in doing evil, with great diligence and ability: they did it to the best advantage. The prince, or magistrate, asked a bribe for perverting justice; and the rich oppressor had only to mention the mischief which he purposed to do; and so the bargain was concluded, and they covered up the infamous transaction. The best of them were entangling and mischievous as briars; and created more pain and trouble to such as had dealings with them, than a thorn-hedge to those who attempted to force through it: the worst of them therefore must be serpents, or wolves and tigers. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. e-1. Notes, 3:8-12. 2 Sam. 23:6,7. Prov. 1:10-14. 4:16,17. Is. 1:21-24. Jer. 5:26-29. 16:16. Ez. 2:6. Hab. 1:12-17. Matt. 26:14-16.) No doubt then could remain, that “the day of visitation,” predicted by all Israel’s watchmen, was at hand, when they would be reduced to the most perplexing straits. (Marg. Ref. m, o. Notes, Is. 10:1-4. Jer. 6:13-17. Ez. 12:21-25. Hos. 9:7,8. Am. 8:1-3.)

They wrup it up. (3) יָכַח, כָּחַח, torquendo condensavit.—יָכַח, funis perplexus.—The prince, the judge, and the great man, agreeing in the ill designs, make a threefold cord of iniquity: or they twist one sin upon another, the latter to maintain and cover the former. Louth.

V. 5-7. The people in general were so deceitful, that the few honest persons among them had need to be very cautious; no friend, or counsellor, or guide, could safely be trusted: nay, it would be dangerous freely to disclose their minds to their own wives, lest they should be hired to betray them. All regard to relative duty and subordination was vanished; children were become undutiful and rebellious, and a man’s own family often proved his worst enemies, especially if he disgusted them by his piety. (Marg. Ref. p-s. Notes, Gen. 9:20-23. Judg. 14:15-18. 16:5-16. 2 Sam. 15:1-12,31. Ps. 41:9. 55:12-15. 118:8,9. Jer. 12:5,6. Am. 5:10-13. v. 13. Matt. 10:16,18. v. 16. 21:22. 26:47-56. vv. 47-49. Luke 12:49-53.) The prophet therefore saw no safety or comfort, but in “looking to the LORD, and waiting on the God of his Salvation,” who would be sure to hear and help him, and those who followed his example. (Marg. Ref. t-x. Notes, Gen. 49:18. Ps. 62:1-7. 142:4,5. Is. 25:9. Lam. 3:24-30. vv. 25,26. Hab. 3:17-19.)—Our Lord quotes the sixth verse, (Note, Matt. 10:34-36.) and applies it to the persecutions

3 ¶ That they may do evil with both hands earnestly, the prince asketh, and the judge asketh for a reward; and the great man, he uttereth his mischievous desire: so they wrap it up.

4 The best of them is as a brier: the most upright is sharper than a thorn-b hedge: the day of thy watchmen and thy visitation cometh; now shall be their perplexity.

5 ¶ Trust ye not in a friend, put ye not confidence in a guide: keep the doors of thy mouth from her that lieth in thy bosom.

6 For the son dishonoureth the father, the daughter riseth up against her mother, the daughter-in-law against her mother-in-law; a man's enemies are the men of his own house.

7 Therefore I will look unto the Lord; I will wait for the God of my salvation: my God will hear me.

8 ¶ Rejoice not against me, O mine enemy: when I fall, I shall arise; when I sit in darkness, the Lord shall be a light unto me.

9 I will bear the indignation of the Lord, because I have sinned against him, until he plead my cause, and execute judgment for me: he will bring me forth to the light, and I shall behold his righteousness.

10 ¶ Then she that is mine enemy shall see it, and shame shall cover her which said unto me,

Where is the Lord thy God? mine eyes shall behold her: now shall she be trodden down as the mire of the streets. [Practical Observations.]

11 In the day that thy walls are to be built, in that day shall the decree be far removed.

12 In that day also he shall come even to thee from Assyria, and from the fortified cities, and from the fortress even to the river, and from sea to sea, and from mountain to mountain.

13 Notwithstanding, the land shall be desolate because of that which dwell therein, for the fruit of their doings.

14 ¶ Feed thy people with thy rod, the flock of thy heritage, which dwell solitarily in the wood, in the midst of Carmel: let them feed in Bashan and Gilead, as in the days of old.

15 According to the days of thy coming out of the land of Egypt will I show unto him marvellous things.

16 ¶ The nations shall see and be confounded at all their might: they shall lay their hand upon their mouth, their ears shall be deaf.

17 They shall lick the dust like a serpent, they shall move out of their holes like worms of the earth: they shall be afraid of the Lord our God, and shall fear because of thee.

about to be raised against his disciples: and the character of the Jews, in those days, exactly answering the description here given.

V. 8-10. Jerusalem (or the church) seems to be here introduced, as speaking by the prophet. Assyria, Babylon, Edom, or Rome, is addressed as an insulting triumphing adversary, whose rejoicing would be short. Though Jerusalem had fallen, or was about to fall, into deep distress, yet she would arise again out of it: though sorrow and affliction should oppress her, yet "the Lord would be a Light unto her" and again shine upon her. She would therefore compose herself to bear the fatherly corrections of God, which her sins had provoked, and submit to his displeasure with patience and hope. (Marg. Ref. y-c. Notes, Lev. 26:40-42. 2 Sam. 24:17. Ps. 131-4, v. 4. 27:1-3. 38:16-18. 97:11. 112:4. Prov. 24:15-18. Is. 50:10-11. Jer. 50:11. Lam. 3:39-41. 4:21, 22. Ez. 25:3-7. Ob. 10-16. John 16:16-22. Rev. 11:7-12.) As she had not injured her insulting enemy, she would wait for the Lord to plead her cause, and execute judgment for her. She was indeed covered with disgrace and calumny, as well as misery; but God would bring her forth from her dark retreat, and clear her aspersed character; and manifest his truth and righteousness in delivering her, and punishing her persecutors. (Marg. Ref. d, e. Ps. 37:5-8. Is. 54:15-17. Rom. 8:32-34.) Then her enemy would witness her returning prosperity and purity with confusion and terror; and would with shame recollect her insulting inquiries in the depth of her misery, whilst she demanded, "Where is the Lord thy God?" And then Jerusalem would behold her rival trodden down, with extreme contempt, to rise no more. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. f-k. Notes, Ps. 35:24-28. 42:1-3, 9, 10. 79:3-13. 137:9-13. Is. 25:10-12. Ps. 41:10-14. Nah. 2:3. Zech. 10:5-12. Mal. 1:2-5. Rev. 17:1-6. 18:20.)—The deliverance of the Jews from captivity, and the destruction of Babylon, were predicted, as typical of other and more important deliverances of the church, and destructions of her enemies.

V. 11-13. When the appointed time for rebuilding the walls of Jerusalem should arrive, the decrees of the kings of Persia, forbidding that work, would be removed far away: and the Jews would flock to Jerusalem from every region whither they had been dispersed; without being allured to stay away, by the distance or advantages of their situations.—But the conversion of sinners to Christ, in the days of the apostles, and especially in those glorious times (where were predicted, and shadowed forth by those events. Am. 9:13-15.)—Though such blessings were reserved for Israel in after ages; yet the wickedness of the nation would certainly bring on them the threatened desolations.—The general restoration of the Jews shall not be brought to pass, till after their land hath lain desolate for some ages, as a testimony of God's displeasure against the ancient inhabitants for their sins, especially that heinous one of rejecting the Messiah. Louth. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. o, p. Notes, 3:8-12. Lev. 26:31-35. Is. 6:11-13. 24:1-2. Dan. 9:25-27. Luke 21:20-24.)

V. 14-17. The prophet here entreated the Lord to "feed his people" (the flock which he valued as his heritage,) "with his rod," or by his word, Spirit, and providence, even during their dispersions in distant lands, where they would be exposed, and be solitary, as sheep; or dwell alone, as preserved separate from the nations among whom they were dispersed. (Note, Num. 23:9.) But let him feed them as on mount Carmel; and provide for them, as for the flocks in Bashan and Gilead, where was good pasturage; or as he had fed their fathers in ancient times: that is, he prayed that God would preserve them during the captivity, and restore them to their own land, and prosper them in it, as in their most flourishing times. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. q-s. Notes, 5:3. Ps. 23:1-4. 78:70-72. Is. 35:1, 2. 40:9-11. Jer. 23:3-6. Ez. 34:23-31. 36:11. Zeph. 3:11-13. John 10:10-16, 26-31. 21:15-17. 1 Pet. 5:1-4.) To this prayer the Lord answered, that he would renew his ancient wonders when he brought their fathers out of Egypt, "with a strong hand and a stretched arm," in their deliverance from their dispersions; which the nations beholding, should be astonished and silenced, not daring to oppose their power, though they stopped their ears to the truth. They would thus be degraded to the dust, groveling on the earth as serpents; and afraid to show themselves, as worms that seldom creep from their holes; for they would fear the wrath of God, who thus pleaded the cause of his people. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. t-a. Notes, Gen. 3:14, 15. Ez. 15:3-19. Deut. 32:24. Josh. 2:8-11. 2 Sam. 22:43-51. v. 45. Ps. 68:22, 23. 72:9-11. Is. 21:9-21. 49:22, 23. 60:10-14. 64:1-3. 65:24, 25. V. 18-20. The prophet concluded his predictions, by celebrating, with admiring love and gratitude, and adoring praises, the mercy and truth of God in his dealings with his people. Who, that ever was worshipped as god, could pretend to equal JEHOVAH in his perfections and operations? What could be found worthy to be compared with his readiness to pardon the sins, and to remit the punishment, of his heritage; notwithstanding that their transgressions had provoked him to reduce them to a remnant? Though he might justly have "retained his anger for ever," yet he did not, because he ever "delighteth in mercy." This had often been evinced by facts: and though heavy judgments were about to come upon the whole nation of Israel; yet he would return to them with tender compassion, and subdue the power, as well as pardon the guilt, of their sins, and so entirely take them away, that they should be, as it were, for ever buried "in the depths of the sea." Thus he would fulfil the engagements of his covenant and oath, which he made to Abraham and Jacob, for the glory of his mercy and faithfulness.—These engagements evidently related to Christ, and the success of his gospel to the end of time; and the future restoration of Israel, and the final prevalence of true religion in all lands, will be the complete preformance of them. PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-10. It is a heavy trial to pious persons to be deprived of 'the communion of the saints,' especially when it is owing to the decay of godliness, and a decrease in the numbers and zeal of believers. Alas! we may long in vain for the company of many such Christians, as were the first ripe fruits of the gospel, in those happy times when "great grace was upon them all," and "the Lord added to the church daily such as should be saved." Believers of this description are generally scarce: when they are removed to heaven, the earth suffers a very grievous loss: and we should long earnestly to see their posterity copy their examples, or others raised up in their places to be the instruments of extensive good. We may, however, be thankful, that we meet with a few gleanings of this vintage; though alas! the greater part of professed Christians seen given up to selfishness, fraud, iniquity, and ungodliness. Even those who ought to support equity and patronise religion, too commonly "do evil with both hands earnestly;" and by their venality and concurrence in iniquity, help each other to grow rich and great: and thus they conceal many an infamous transaction, which the Lord will at length unfold before the whole world. We cannot but lament the malice and mischievousness of large multitudes on every side, and grieve to think of and thou wilt 'cast all their sins into the depths of the sea.

20 Thou wilt 'perform the truth to Jacob, and the mercy to Abraham, which thou hast sworn unto our fathers from the days of old.

the misery that is coming upon them: we must grieve that so little confidence can be placed in those, who make the greatest professions of friendship: (Note, Ps. 62:8-10.) and that even the nearest relatives should so often forget their obligations, and prove unfaithful, and the sources of the most painful afflictions, and those connected with them. But, if the believer finds that his worst foes are those of his own family; he should be rendered more simple in his dependence, and fervent in his prayers to the God of his salvation, who will never refuse to hear and help him. We should also, under all our trials, look continually unto our divine Redeemer, that we may learn to copy his patience, meekness, constancy, and love, amidst all his unequalled injuries and agonies; and thus become examples to those around us. If we truly belong to him, we shall at length share his victories, as well as be conformed to him in sufferings. Though our enemies may seem to prevail and rejoice over us, we should not despond, or decline the conflict: though cast down, we are not destroyed; though foiled, we are not slain; and ought therefore to resume our arms, and renew the combat. Our darkness, through temptation, tribulation, or persecution, will not long prevent our comfort in the Lord, "our Light and Salvation." Though we have often and grievously sinned, and are suffering under the rod of his fatherly displeasure, yet we may unite hope in his mercy with submission to his correction; for he will at length plead our cause, and bring us forth to the light, clear our characters from slanderous imputations, and fulfil to us his faithful promises: so that all, who have derided our confidence in God, because of difficulties and distresses, shall be covered with shame; and those who hate us for his sake, shall be "trodden down as the mire in the streets."

V. 11-20. No hinderances can obstruct the intended favours of God to his church or servants: and their returning peace and comfort allure others to come and join themselves to them. Let us then continue in prayer to the Lord, that he would graciously feed his dispersed "flock, his heritage," that dwell "in the world, but are not of it;" and that he would support us and our brethren under all disconsolations and trials, and make us joyful in him and in his salvation, as his people were in days of old. Then will he hear our prayers, and renew his ancient wonders, and make us victorious over every opposer; and at length all his enemies and those of his church shall be filled with terror, and have their portion with the old serpent, the tempter and murderer of mankind. Let us then rejoice, and praise the pardoning mercy of our God: let us hope and pray that he will turn to us, and turn us to himself; that he will have compassion on us, and subdue, as well as forgive, our sins, and fully and finally deliver us from these our inward and most dangerous foes. Let us rely on the mercy and truth engaged by covenant and oath to Abraham and all his believing children; and remember, that the Lord has given this infallible security, for "the strong consolation of all those, who have fled for refuge to lay hold on the hope set before them" in Christ Jesus. And let none of us omit to pray without ceasing, for the fulfilment of these prophecies, in their literal and most enlarged sense, to Israel, and to the whole earth; and to show our sincerity and earnestness in such prayers, by every exertion in our power to promote that most desirable object, and our countenance and zealous assistance to all, whether societies or individuals, who by scriptural means are employed in this blessed work and labour of love.

THE BOOK OF NAHUM.

It is probably conjectured that Nahum delivered this prophecy about the time when Sennacherib invaded Judah. It relates almost entirely to the destruction of Nineveh, and of the Assyrian empire, of which the cutting off of Sennacherib's army was an earnest and presage: and its primary intent seems to have been the encouragement of the pious Jews, amidst the troubles and alarms occasioned by that invasion.—It does not appear, that this short prophecy is referred to in the New Testament: yet it certainly formed a part of that volume, which Christ and his apostles called "the Scriptures," "the oracles of God." No other prediction is clearly contained in it, but that of the desolations of Nineveh; 'that vast and populous city, whose walls were a hundred feet high, and capable of admitting three chariots abreast upon them, and fortified with fifteen hundred towers, on the walls, of two hundred feet high!—So totally, indeed, was this city destroyed, that in the second century after Christ not a vestige remained of it, to ascertain the spot on which it stood. Its situation has long been a matter of doubt and uncertainty. This remarkable prophecy, thus remarkably accomplished, . . . affords a signal evidence of the inspiration of Nahum, and a striking lesson of humility to human pride.' Gray's Key. (Note, 3.19.)—The best judgements are agreed, that in respect of arrangement, style, and sublimity, it is one of the most finished poems extant in human language.

NOTES.—CHAP. I. V. 1. Jonah had long before preached to the Ninevites, and their repentance had for the time averted the threatened vengeance: (Preface to Jonah. Notes, Jon. 3.) but they relapsed into idolatry and wickedness, and were become most cruel enemies to the people of God. Nahum had therefore a vision of terrible destruction as speedily coming upon them, which he wrote in a book, and as some think sent to them. His name signifies comfort, or a Comforter, and this prediction would comfort the afflicted and alarmed Jews.—He was called "the Elkoshite" from Elkosh in Galilee, the place of his birth or habitation, as it is supposed.—Burden.] Notes, Is. 13:1. Jer. 23:33-40.

V. 2-6. The Assyrians had desolated the kingdom of Israel; they often harassed 'that of Judah, and perhaps at this time menaced its ruin; and they triumphed as if their idols had overcome the God of Israel. (Notes, 2 Kings 17-19.) The prophet therefore began this "burden of Nineveh" by declaring that God was jealous of his own glory, and revenged himself with fury, or great severity, on those who despised or blasphemed him, or injured his worshippers; and that "he reserved for his enemies" the word wrath is not in the original; nor could words express the punishment that he "reserved" in due time to inflict upon them. (*Marg. and Marg. Ref. b-e. Notes, Ex. 20:5, 34:11-17, v. 14. Num. 31:2. Deut. 32:21,22,34,35,40-42. Ps. 94:1-7, v. 1. Is. 42:13-17, v. 13. 59:16-19. 63:1-6. Jer. 3:4,5. Ez. 38:19,20. he came to execute vengeance, his way was through whirlwinds, storms, and black clouds, as if they were the dust of his feet. He would show tokens of his power and indignation, similar to what he had done of old, when the sea was divided and Jordan dried up before him; when the mountains trembled, and their productions were withered at his presence: even the earth, yea, the whole world would at last be burned up before him, and all its inhabitants destroyed. What man or kingdom, therefore, could withstand him, when "his fury" should "be poured out like fire, and the rocks thrown down before him." (*Marg. and Marg. Ref. i-r. Notes, Ex. 19:16-20. V. 7, 8. The preceding most sublime display of the power of the Lord's anger, is next beautifully contrasted with a declaration of his exuberant goodness to his people. The Assyrian invasion, and the insulting menaces of Sennacherib and his captains, formed "a day of trouble" to Hezekiah and his subjects: but the Lord was "a strong hold" to them; he knew and approved those who trusted in him, and would distinguish them from all others. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. s-y. Deut. 32:4. 2 Sam. 22:2,3. 2 Kings 18:5,6, 19:3,4,32-37. Ps. 1:4-6, v. 6. 84:11,12. 2 Tim. 2:19.) But he would destroy Nineveh, and desolate the place where it stood, as with an inundation; and pursue his enemies the Assyrians with dark and tremendous calamities. (Marg. Ref. z-b. Notes, 28-10. Is. 8:6-8,21,22. Zeph. 2:13-15.) The place where Nineveh stood is not at present exactly known. V. 9, 10. Sennacherib (as well as Shalmaneser and his predecessors) devised to destroy the worshippers of God; which was considered as designing evil against יְהוָה himself, being the result of proud enmity to him and defiance of him. (Marg. Ref. c. Notes, 2 Kings 19: 22, 23. 2 Chr. 32: 17—22, v. 19. Is. 10: 7—11.) He would, therefore, utterly destroy Nineveh and the Assyrian empire; and the calamity should be so complete, that it would not be necessary to repeat it. (Marg. Ref. d.) While they formed powerful confederacies, and raised numerous armies, to execute their mischievous counsels, "being folded together as thorns;" and while they were perplexed in their counsels, and indecisive in their measures, like a drunken man; or while indulging in excess and intoxication; they would be suddenly and totally consumed, as the dry stubble is by the fire.—It is recorded that Nineveh was taken by the Babylonians and Medes, when the city was full of riot and intemperance, by reason of a feast which the king and his nobles celebrated. (Marg. Ref. f, g. Notes, 3: 8—11, v. 11. 2 Sam. 23: 6, 7. Jer. 25: 15—17.)

V. 11—13. This wicked counsellor, or 'counsellor of Belial,' (Marg. and Ref.) who "devised evil against the LORD," seems to mark out Sennacherib, who came from Nineveh to utter blasphemies by the mouth of Rabshakeh, and who devised to destroy Jerusalem: for this completed the provocation which brought the vengeance of God on Nineveh, and on the Assyrian empire. (Note, 9, 10.) The Lord therefore declared, that though the army of Sennacherib was "quiet," fearing nothing from the dismayed Jews; and though it was very numerous; yet the destroying angel, when he passed through them, would cut them down as the scythe of the mower does the tender grass. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. i—k. Notes, 2 Kings 19: 35. Is. 10: 28—34. 14: 24—27. 17: 12—14. 30: 29—33. 31: 8, 9.) And though the Lord had afflicted the Jews by the Assyrians; yet he would no more distress them by their invasions, but would wholly deliver them from the yoke, which had before been very galling to them. (Marg. Ref. l—n. Notes, Is. 9: 4, 5. 10: 24—27.)

V. 14. The Lord had given orders that Sennacherib's army should be cut off: but he himself was reserved for execution by the hands of his own sons. Esarhaddon, his son, indeed succeeded him, and reigned prosperously many years; but the Assyrian empire was subverted soon after, and probably that family was extinct, at least their power was annihilated; and no more of that seed was permitted to be sown or to grow upon the earth.—The idols also of Nineveh were about to be extirpated: the graves of the city, the empire, and the royal family were preparing: and because they were vile in their conduct, they would be debased, and neglected as those who are buried in disgrace and forgotten. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 3: 4—6. 2 Kings 19: 36, 37. Ps. 109: 6—20, vv. 13, 14. Is. 14: 16—23. 19: 1. 46: 1, 2.)—The house of thy idol shall become thy grave, when thou shalt be dishonourably slain by thine own sons; ... as a just punishment of thy blasphemy against the God of Israel. Louth.

V. 15. Messengers would be sent from Jerusalem into the most distant parts of the land, to carry the welcome tidings of the destruction of Sennacherib's army, and of the peace of Jerusalem and Judah; and to invite the Jews to come and celebrate their solemn feasts, and to pay their vows at the temple for their deliverance. They might then do it safely; for the Assyrian tyrant would no more pass through to ravage the land, his power being utterly cut off. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, Ps. 66: 11—14. 116: 17—19. Is. 30: 29—32. 40: 9—11. 52: 7, 8. Rom. 10: 12—17.)—This may be considered as typical of the future destruction of the enemies of the church, which will make way for the universal preaching of the gospel, and for the peace and felicity of believers.

God, do not accord to the imaginations and sentiments of proud reasoners on that subject: for, admiring their own supposed excellencies, they form notions of God conformable to them, and thus admire and worship an ideal deity.—But "the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of mercies," is also "jealous and revenger;" and executeth most terrible punishments on those who rebel against his authority, oppose his truth, or persecute his people. He is indeed "slow to wrath, and ready to forgive;" the penitent and believing; but he will "by no means acquit the wicked;" and he reserves "tribulation and anguish for every soul of man that doeth evil;" and does not "repent and do works meet for repentance." But "who regardeth the power of his wrath?" (Note, Ps. 90: 11.)—When he shall arise to execute vengeance on his enemies, the whole creation will tremble, and melt or be consumed with fervent heat: and all things will concur in augmenting the dismay and destruction of the ungodly. "Who then will be able to stand before his indignation, or to abide the fierceness of his anger, when his fury shall be poured out like fire, and the rocks and mountains shall be thrown down by him?" What will it then avail the condemned criminal to reflect, that he has amused himself, and others, by specious reasonings against the awful justice, holiness, and vengeance of his offended Sovereign; and soothed conscience into a delusive peace by vain speculations? But a believing apprehension of the goodness and mercy of God, as consisting with his perfect justice through the redemption that is in Christ Jesus; and a reliance on him for pardon and peace, induce a well-grounded confidence and assurance. Those who come in this way to "trust in the LORD," will find him their "Strong hold" and impregnable Fortress in every time of trouble and danger; and he will make it appear that he approved and favoured them; while his enemies shall be carried away as with a flood, into the blackness of darkness and despair. For all who imagine evil against God, and his truth and cause, will be utterly destroyed; and their mischievous combinations, and intoxicating revels, will prepare them as thorns folded together, or as dry stubble, for the fire of his wrath: nor will their multitudes, their confidence, their sagacity, or abilities, in the least secure them. For a time indeed the Lord employs such men to scourge his offending children, and to winnow the corn o his floor: but he will soon break off their yoke, terminate their power, and forbid them any more to afflict his church. All idols and idolaters, and all the vile and abominable of the earth, will soon be buried in the grave which the Lord is preparing for them: and then Zion shall rejoice and celebrate her solemn feasts, and pay her vows, and never more be troubled with the wicked passing through her. Let us then rejoice in the glad tidings and peace of the gospel; let us with grateful joy attend on sacred ordinances, as the sacred feasts of our souls; let us remember to "pay the vows, which we made in the day of our distress and trouble;" and so look forward with cheerful hope to our admission into that world whither the wicked never can enter, and where sin and temptation will no more be known.

NOTES.—CHAP. II. V. 1, 2. Nabopolassar king of Babylon, or Nebuchadnezzar his son, seems to be here particularly intended, by "The dasher in pieces," to denote his fierceness and success in war. In conjunction with Cyaxares king of Media he marched his army to besiege Nineveh, with the avowed purpose of subverting the Assyrian empire: and the king and people of Nineveh are here challenged to employ every art of defence, and to exert all their courage and prowess to defend the city against him: yet it would all be in vain. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. a. Notes, 3: 14. Is. 8: 9, 10. Jer. 51: 20—24. Joel 3: 9—17. Zeph. 3: 8, 11—13.) For the Lord would avenge on Nineveh the pride and insolence, which the Assyrian kings had shown to Jacob, when they magnified themselves against them, and grievously oppressed them. They had utterly destroyed the kingdom

V. 3—6. The soldiers of the confederate kings carried red shields, and wore scarlet garments, to render their appearance more terrible, and to denote their purpose of shedding blood without fear or mercy. Their chariots of war glittered like torches, when they were preparing for the assault; and the brandishing of their spears was like the shaking of fir-trees by a terrible tempest. And when they had broken into the city, their chariots would rage and jostle, and be driven with speed and fury, like flaming torches or flashes of lightning. The king of Babylon would recount his valiant captains, and order them to the assault; and their numbers, impetuosity, and contempt of danger and difficulty, would cause them to stumble in marching hastily to mount the walls. Some understand the fifth verse of the Assyrian king and his army. The besieged would prepare with haste and eagerness to defend their walls: but the river Tigris, or other rivers that ran into it, being disregarded, would open the assailants a passage into the city; and the palace being seized on and destroyed, the city would soon be reduced.—It is recorded that an inundation of the Tigris broke down a part of the walls of Nineveh, and thus opened the besiegers a way into the heart of the city. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, 3:2, 3. Is. 2:26—30. 21:3—5. 45:1—6, v. 12. Jer. 51:27, 28. Zech. 1:8—11, v. 8.)

V. 7. "Huzzab" signifies "that which was established." (Marg.) Some take it for the name of the queen-consort, who would thus be led captive. Perhaps the empire of Assyria, or Nineveh, was poetically represented as a queen, who had been established in great security, but was about to be brought forth, and carried captive to Babylon: and the captivity of the nobles and people of Nineveh might be represented, by this queen being attended by her maidens, mourning like doves, and beating their breasts; as a tabret is struck repeatedly by those who play on it. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. k. Notes, Is. 47:1—10.)

V. 8—10. Nineveh had neither been taken, nor put in fear for many ages: so that it was like an undisturbed pool, or fishpond, replenished with great quantities of fish. But at the predicted time, the inhabitants, and even the soldiers, would flee before their enemies, and all the efforts of their captains to stop them would be ineffectual. The besiegers might then seize upon their immense treasures, and all their magnificent furniture for Nineveh would be emptied and desolated, with the extreme terror and anguish of the inhabitants. The original is peculiarly animated, and in the highest

11 Where is the dwelling of the lions, and the feeding-place of the young lions where the lion, even the old lion, walked, and the lion's whelp, and none made them afraid?

12 The lion did tear in pieces enough for his whelps, and strangled for his lionesses, and filled his holes with prey, and his dens with ravin.

13 Behold, I am against thee, saith the Lord of hosts, and I will burn her chariots in the smoke, and the sword shall devour thy young lions: and I will cut off thy prey from the earth, and the voice of thy messengers shall no more be heard.

V. 4-6. The idolatries and sorceries of Nineveh, and that luxury, intemperance, and licentiousness with which they were attended; and the captivating methods, by which the Assyrians brought other nations to submit to their authority, or to unite in their idolatries and iniquities; are here assigned as the reasons of the Lord's determination to expose them to the greatest ignominy and misery imaginable: in the same manner, as they had utterly disregarded the welfare of whole nations, and given them to be spoiled and ruined without remorse. Israel and Judah especially had been thus treated by them. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 1:14. Is. 23:15-18. 47:1-3, 7-15. Ez. 16:35-43. 23:25. Zeph. 2:13-15. Rev. 17:1-5, 18:1-18. v. 3, v. 3, 9, 10. P. V. 8-11. Populous No, or "No-ammon," seems to have been desolated in the manner here described, a short time before this prophecy was delivered: some think that Sennacherib had just taken and destroyed it. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. p. Notes, Jer. 46:24-26. Ez. 30:14-19. 31:2-18.) It had been very populous, situated in a very fertile soil, and fortified by nature and art, in an almost impregnable manner. As an Ethiopian then reigned over Egypt, the immense forces of these two kingdoms were combined for its defence, together with the assistance of the Lybians and Mauritanians, and other nations of Africa: yet was the city taken, and its inhabitants carried captive, after the most shocking cruelties had been exercised upon numbers of them, and even upon their infants; whilst their most honourable men were divided by lot among the conquerors as slaves, and so led away in chains. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. q-x. Notes, Ps. 149:7-9. Jer. 46:9. Ez. 27:10, 11. 30:4, 5. Hos. 13:15, 16. Joel 3:3-8, v. 3, 6.)—And were the inhabitants of Nineveh better than those of No, or more likely to be preserved from such a ruin? By no means: on the contrary, they would be infatuated with prosperity, or stupified by excess or calamity; they would hide themselves within their walls, and look out in vain for assistance against their besiegers. or making new ones, the enemy shall set thy works on fire. . . The sword of thine enemies, who shall be as numerous and destructive as locusts or canker-worms, shall destroy thee. (Joel 1:4.) Though thou multiply thine armies, like locusts or caterpillars; yet the enemy shall destroy them. As the locusts destroy the fruits of the earth, and fly away to another place; so shall thy soldiers pillage all the wealth thou hast gained by traffic, and then leave thee.' Louth.—Nineveh, by commerce, became extremely populous; but the number of her traders, when the city was besieged, would consume her provisions, as caterpillars waste the land. Perhaps mercenary soldiers are meant, who, having devoured the produce of the country, fled or deserted to the enemy, when their help was wanted. Even their tributary kings, or most honourable captains, would resemble locusts that remove when the sun grows hot; for they would abide with the Ninevites whilst danger was distant, but would be gone when the enemy approached. (Marg. and Marg. Ref.)—The tributary princes deserted Nineveh, in the day of her distress.' Herodotus. 'Diodorus Siculus, speaking of the siege in which Nineveh fell, says, 'When the enemy shut up the king in the city, many nations revolted, each going over to the besiegers for the sake of their liberty; that the king despatched messengers to all his subjects, requiring forces from them to assist him; and that he thought himself able to endure a siege, and remained in expectation of the armies, which were to be raised throughout the empire; relying on an oracle, that the city could not be taken, till the river became its enemy.' Bp. Newcombe.

V. 18. The rulers of Assyria were become drowsy and self-indulgent, and they would be disheartened and debased, slain, and left upon the ground; while the people were scattered as lost sheep, without any to seek after them. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, 1 Kings 22:17. Ps. 76:5, 6. Is. 56:9-12, v. 9, 10. Ez. 34:2-6.)

V. 19. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. r. Notes, Jer 30:12-18, v. 12-15. 46:1.) The obsolete word "bruit," signifies report. Jer. 10:22.—Upon, &c.] Nineveh had corrupted, or oppressed, by her wickedness all the surrounding nations, continually during many ages: therefore all the nations would rejoice at her fall. 'All the neighbouring countries have felt the effect of thy cruelties and oppressions.' Louth. (Marg. Ref. s, t. Notes, Is. 10:8-14. 14:3-11. Lam. 2:15, 16. Ez. 25:3-7, v. 6. Zeph. 2:13-15. Rev. 18:1-3, 20. 19:1-6, v. 2, 3.)—The entire desolation of Nineveh is, in this prophecy, most expressly and particularly foretold; yet no event can be imagined more improbable, at the time when Nahum wrote, than this. The entire desolation of London, so that none could decide where this great metropolis was situated, would not be considered by us as more improbable, than the desolations of Nineveh must have appeared at that day; when it was the greatest and most populous and powerful city in the known world. Yet, when conquered by the kings of Babylon, who transferred the seat of empire to the city which they had built for their own glory, Nineveh was deserted by its inhabitants and left to moulder into ruins; and within two hundred years after the coming of Christ, no trace remained of this proud capital of the Assyrian empire! And now it is not agreed, either among learned men or travellers, or the inhabitants of those regions, where Nineveh stood! Some even place it on the Euphrates. But of those who agree that it stood on the Tigris, some place it on one side, some on the other, of that river; and others higher up, and some nearer the sea, by many miles. I do not say, that these discordant opinions are alike probable; for most well-informed and competent judges would perhaps nearly agree, except as to the exact spot where the city stood; yet the very circumstance, of so many different opinions existing, is the completest proof imaginable, that the prediction has been most wonderfully accomplished; and that it was delivered by the inspiration of that God, "known unto whom are all his works, from the beginning of the world."

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Very flourishing cities are often full of lies and robbery, of fraud and injustice; and in general they are contaminated with blood, shed in massacres, persecutions, oppression of dependent provinces, or iniquitous war: and by these means the prey is accumulated, and "departeth not" till the Lord constrains them to make restitution: but he will recompense the crimes of such cities and kingdoms, and pour out the blood of those who are lavish of the blood of others.—Too often they resemble well favoured harlots; and disseminate far and wide their impiety, infidelity, licentiousness, and vice; and the nations are corrupted by their example, or enslaved to support their grandeur and luxury, or to gratify their avarice and ambition. The Lord will surely express his abhorrence of such politics and practices; and will turn the glory of cities thus aggrandized into shame and "make them vile, and as a gazing-stock" to others. Thus Nineveh, Babylon, Tyre, and many others have been reduced and ruined, that they might be a warning to us, even as No was to Nineveh. And what better are we than these ancient cities or kingdoms? except as there is a remnant of true Christians among us, who are a greater security and a stronger rampart to us, than all our advantages of situation; than our fleets, armies, or allies, even though our strength should appear to be "infinite." In these respects we are not superior to the cities and empires which have been mentioned: and the multitude of the nation are equally wicked, amid immensely superior advantages for being holy.—When the Lord shows himself against a people, their enemies have an easy victory, and power to destroy their children, or enslave their nobles and honourable men. Then their strong holds are taken upon the first assault; their valiant soldiers become as women; their efforts are unsuccessful, their confederates treacherous, their helpers the immediate causes of their ruin: and every confidence must fail, till their wounds become grievous and incurable; and all, on whom "their wickedness hath passed continually," will rejoice and exult at their fall. Thus will it at length happen to all the enemies of God: but he continues good to Israel, a Strong hold in every time of trouble, which cannot be stormed and taken; and "he knoweth them that trust in him."

BOOK OF HABAKKUK.

The absurd and contradictory legends of the Jewish writers, concerning this prophet, are not worthy of notice, except as they show how little dependence can be placed on such witnesses. Some pretend that he was the son of the Shunamitish woman whom Elisha restored to life! While others (especially the apocryphal book of Bel and the Dragon,) introduce him as feeding Daniel in the den of lions, just before the return of the Jews from Babylon! It is, however, plain that he prophesied before the captivity; and probably, about the close of Josiah's reign, and the beginning of Jehoiakim's, being contemporary with Jeremiah.—Habakkuk stands high in the class of the Hebrew poets. The beautiful conjunction between the parts of this prophecy, its diction, imagery, spirit, and sublimity, cannot be too much admired. Bp. Newcombe. He is repeatedly quoted, as an inspired writer, in the New Testament. (Comp. 1st. with Acts 13:40, 41. and 2:3, 4. with Rom. 1:17. Gal. 3:11. Heb. 10:37, 38.) and his predictions of the devastations made by the Chaldeans, and the judgments to be inflicted on them, are generally considered as including the temporary success and final ruin of the oppressors and corrupters of the Christian Church, and the final and universal prevalence of true religion throughout the earth.—As Nahum... foretold the destruction of the Assyrians, who carried the ten tribes captive; so Habakkuk foretells the judgments that should come on the Chaldeans, who completed the captivity of the two remaining tribes; Louth.—The prophet begins with complaints of the wickedness of his people, and then proceeds to predict the Chaldean invasion and its terrible effects. He bewails the successful wickedness of the invaders; gives encouragement to God's people, and denounces judgments on his enemies: and he concludes with celebrating, in the highest strains of sublime poetry, the ancient wonders that the Lord had wrought for Israel in order to excite confidence and joy in him, in the prospect of approaching calamities.

CHAPTER I.

The prophet complains that violence and contention prevailed among his people. 1.—4. The Lord shows him the vengeance to be inflicted by the Chaldeans, 5.—11. He rebukes God, and laments the treachery and cruelty of prosperous sinners, 12.—17.

THE burden which Habakkuk the prophet did see.

2 O LORD, how long shall I cry, and thou wilt not hear! even cry out unto thee of violence, and thou wilt not save!

3 Why dost thou show me iniquity, and cause me to behold grievance? for spoiling and violence are before me: and there are that raise up strife and contention.

4 Therefore, the law is slackened, and judgment doth never go forth: for the wicked doth compass about the righteous; therefore wrong judgment proceedeth.

5 Behold ye among the heathen, and regard, and wonder marvellously: for I will work a work in your days, which ye will not believe though it be told you.

6 For lo, I raise up the Chaldeans, that bitter

Bp. Hall.—It appears that the prophet had long lamented the abounding and increasing wickedness of his people, and prayed that God would put some effectual stop to it: but it continued to prevail more and more, and he was tempted to conclude that his prayers were disregarded. He also complained, that the Lord constrained him to behold violence and iniquity; whilst the poor were crushed and cruelly plundered by the powerful. He inquired why his lot was cast in such evil times, that he was forced to dwell among robbers and oppressors, and to witness discords and virulent contentions. These things were become so common, and the rulers were so addicted to bribery, that the law lay dormant, and the execution of it was entirely relaxed; so that wicked men circumvented and defrauded the righteous with impunity: for either no sentence could be obtained, or it proved a perverted and iniquitous decision. Such was the wretched condition of Judah; and it was the consequence of idolatry, impiety, or hypocrisy in religion. (*Marg. and Marg. V. 5. In answer to the prophet's complaint, the Lord showed him, that the Chaldeans would speedily execute vengeance on the Jews. They were, therefore, warned to give peculiar attention to the events, which were taking place among the heathen, by the victories of the Chaldeans and hasty nation, which shall march through the breadth of the land, to possess the dwelling-places that are not theirs.

7 They are terrible and dreadful: their judgment and their dignity shall proceed of themselves.

8 Their horses also are swifter than the leopards, and are more fierce than the evening wolves: and their horsemen shall spread themselves, and their horsemen shall come from far, they shall fly as the eagle that hasteth to eat.

9 They shall come all for violence: their faces shall sup up as the east wind, and they shall gather the captivity as the sand.

10 And they shall scoff at the kings, and the princes shall be a scorn unto them: they shall deride every strong hold; for they shall heap dust, and take it.

11 Then shall his mind change, and he shall pass over, and offend, imputing this his power unto his god.

or to consider themselves as one of the nations which were to be scourged by them: or they were reminded, that they would wonder with great astonishment, when scattered among the heathen, at the accomplishment of those predictions which at present they disregarded. For they would not believe that God would work such a work, at least in their days, and by the Chaldeans; though he himself informed them by his prophets, that he certainly would. (Marg. Ref. Note, Is. 29:13-16.)—The application of this by St. Paul to Jerusalem in his days, evinces, that the destruction of Jerusalem by the Chaldeans was an emblem, or anticipation, of the calamities that came on the nation for rejecting the gospel. (Note, Acts 13:38-41, v. 41.)—The apostle quoted the passage from the Septuagint, rather than from the original text: yet the quotation does not exactly accord to either. The Greek translators seems to have read despisers, instead of among the heathen. This, with another trivial variation, gives nearly the rendering of the passage, as it stands in the Acts. The meaning is not materially different on either reading.

In your days.] Hence it follows, that the Chaldeans invaded Judea, while those were living whom the prophet addressed. Bp. Newcombe.—As Jerusalem was destroyed within less than thirty years from the death of Josiah; and as the Chaldeans were not, till about that time, very formidable among the nations: it may be probably conjectured, that Habakkuk delivered this prophecy about the end of Josiah's reign, or soon after his death; and that the circumstance of the obscure Chaldeans, rather than the renowned Assyrians, being appointed to accomplish it, conducted to harden the people in unbelief.

V. 6. Bitter, &c.] That is, fierce, cruel, and impetuous, bearing all down before them, and regardless of the miseries which they occasioned. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, Deut. 38:49-57, vv. 49-52. 2 Chr. 36:17.)

V. 7. The decisions and regulations of the Chaldeans, would be framed entirely according to their own caprice, and to confirm their own authority, without any regard to the good of the conquered nations: they would regard their prosperity and dignity as proceeding from their own courage and conduct, and glory in them on that ground; and they would not consider themselves as accountable to any superior for the use which they made of them.—The marginal reading . . . does not seem to agree with the original. Louth. (Marg. Ref. Note, Dan. 5:18-24.)

V. 8. Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, Is. 5:26-30. Jer. 4:1-13. v. 13. 5:3-6. v. 6. Hos. 8:1. Zeph. 3:1-4, v. 3.

V. 9. Shall sup, &c.] That is, they would devour all before them, as the unwholesome east wind blasts and withers the productions of the earth. (Marg. and Marg. Ref.)—Some render the words, "Whatsoever they gather they shall carry it toward the east," meaning to Babylon. Louth.

V. 10. (Marg. Ref.) The Hebrew uses the singular number as well here, as in the following verse; and is to be understood of the king of Babylon, who conquers kings and princes, and treats them with scorn and contempt. So 'they used Zedekiah and his princes, &c.' Louth. (Ez. 35:32.)

V. 11. The rapid and uninterrupted success of the king of Babylon against the Jews and the adjacent nations, would intoxicate him with arrogance, and cause him to pass all bounds of reason, moderation, or decency, in his oppressions and impieties: and he would greatly offend the Lord who had prospered his undertakings, by imputing his success to his idol Belus, or Nebo. This may refer to the golden image, that Nebuchadnezzar set up; and to his extraordinary insanity, which was the punishment and cure of his pride, and perhaps Belshazzar's arrogance and blasphemy also might be alluded to, which preceded the ruin of the Chaldean monarchy, and the deliverance of the Jews from captivity. (Notes, Dan. 3:428-33. 5:1-4, 18-24.)

V. 12-17. The prophet again poured out his complaints before God, in the prospect of the dreadful calamities which were coming on his people from the Chaldeans. He had hoped, that the Lord would reform the nation by gentler corrections, or by raising up eminent instruments for that work: but when he understood the heavy judgments to be inflicted upon them, he was grieved, even as he had been by witnessing their crimes. (Note, 2-4.) He was astonished, that God would punish his offending worshippers by so idolatrous and iniquitous a people as the Chaldeans; and he still hoped that he would not finally leave them in their hands. As an Israelite, and as representing that nation, he addressed God, the everlasting JEHOVAH, as his God, his eternal and unchangeable Portion, and the glorious Object of his adoration; "his Holy One," who was perfect in justice, truth, goodness, and purity: he was therefore assured that he and his people should not die, or be utterly cut off by their enemies. (Marg. Ref. y-a. Notes, 3:3-5, v. 3. Deut. 33:27-29, 90:2. 102:23-28. Is. 40:27-31. 43:14-21, v. 14, 15. Jer. 30:10, 11.) The Lord had indeed ordained and established the Chaldean in power, to judge his people, to distinguish between hypocrites and believers, to punish the one, to correct the other for their good, and thus to reform the nation. But he was of purer eyes, than to behold iniquity without abhorrence; and therefore he would by no means countenance injustice, treachery, or tyranny. Why then would he look on, and keep silence as an unconcerned spectator, while these wicked idolaters devoured those who were more righteous than themselves? (Marg. and Marg. Ref. b-h. Notes, Ps. 34:15-17. Is. 10:5, 6. 27:7-11, v. 9, 10. 33:1. Jer. 12:1-4.) Why did he so prosper the cruel and rapacious, as to enable them to prey on their inferiors, as the seamensters and large fishes do on the multitude of the smaller fishes; or as reptiles are destroyed by more powerful creatures, having none to rule over or protect them?—Indeed men became the prey of their own species, as fishes are taken by the fishermen, without being able to make any effectual resistance; whilst some were drawn out by the angle, others by the cast-net, or the draw-net. Thus the victorious Chaldeans would prey upon the helpless Jews, and rejoice in their miseries and their own successful wickedness; and ascribe their victories to means and instruments, to their sword, courage, and conduct, by which they lived in plenty and luxury; and not to the living God, who alone giveth men power to grow rich and great. And this would increase their prosperity to vainglory, or vain idolatry; in which they would act as absurdly, as if the fisherman should offer sacrifice, or burn incense, to his net, when he had taken a large draught of fishes, or grew rich by his occupation. But would the Lord permit them thus to gather and hoard up wealth by fraud and rapine, and to destroy whole nations, (especially his own people) to aggrandize themselves? (Marg. and

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-11. The servants of God cannot but be greatly afflicted, by witnessing the prevalence of ungodliness, iniquity, violence, and contention; especially among those who profess to worship the true God, according to his word. This will excite their earnest cries: and it will often cause them to complain, that the Lord delays to hear their prayers and to prosper their labours, and constrains them to stand by, while his law is despised and trampled on, the laws of men are slackened or perverted, and the wicked are allowed to "compass about the righteous," and to ruin him by iniquitous judgments. But sometimes their prayers and complaints are answered in a way, of which they were not aware: and the Lord lifts up a standard against the incursions of impiety, by meeting them with desolating judgments. Even when he gives warning that this is his purpose, few to whom it is told will believe it. Most men presume upon continued prosperity, or that calamities will not come in their days: so that, when predicted judgments overwhelm guilty nations or individuals, "they marvelously wonder," as if no intimation had been given them that it would be so. But when the Lord has work of this kind to do, he can soon raise up "bitter and hasty" instruments, to desolate countries; and seize upon dwelling-places that are not theirs: men whose pride and arrogance are as terrible as their cruelty and fierceness. Their valour, speed, and success are from God: but their barbarity, rapacity and treachery, and the abuse of their power and dignity, are of themselves. These influence them to ravage nations, to destroy or enslave millions, to deride and scorn princes, and to take pleasure in mischief and devastation. And, whilst the Lord employs and prospers them in executing his judgments, they grow more intoxicated by success, and more hardened in impiety, infidelity, and idolatry; and thus ripen themselves for destruction. (Note, 2 Kings 19:25.)

V. 12-17. The everlasting and holy Lord God of Israel, while he ordains the basest of men for correction and judgment, continues the invariable Friend of his people; and though he "chasten them sore, he will not give them over unto death." He is "of purer eyes than to behold iniquity;" and as he will not connive at or countenance the crimes of his worshippers, or even the inconsistent walking of true believers; so he cannot possibly approve of the enormous injustice, treachery, cruelty, rapacity, or blasphemy of his avowed enemies. Yet the transient success of bad men, in devouring those that are more righteous than themselves, often proves a dangerous temptation to believers; and causes them to question, for the time, the truth of their own principles, and to be dissatisfied with their choice and Portion. (Notes, Ps. 73:2-28.) But this is their infirmity; and prayer for stronger faith, and for clearer and more realizing views of eternal things, is the proper remedy.—It is lamentably true, that "men are like the fishes of the sea," and the ungoverned animal tribes, which devour each other, and are "made to be taken and destroyed." The havoc of the human species by mighty conquerors and cruel tyrants, and nations that delight in war, to enrich and aggrandize themselves; and the constant re-acting of the same bloody tragedy, on one stage after another, all over the earth, through successive generations, with the loud plaudits of the numerous and admiring spectators; form one of the most mortifying and distressing reflections imaginable to the pious and humane observer. Yet the Lord has wise reasons for permitting these things: though he abhors, not only the injustice and cruelty of the actors, but also their impiety and self-admiration, whilst they ascribe their greatness and prosperity to their own policy, courage, good fortune, or idols, and rejoice in their fleeting riches and fading glories; and he will soon end their successful and splendid robberies. Death and judgment shall make them cease to prey on others, and they themselves shall be preyed upon.—But let us remember, whatever temporal or spiritual advantages we possess, by whatever means, instruments, or endeavours; to give all the glory of them to God with humble thanksgivings and praises. Thus all things will be sanctified to us, lead our thoughts to the great Source of felicity, and help to prepare us for the enjoyment of his favour for ever. (Note, 1 Chr. 29:10-20.)

made his complaints and inquiries before God, humbly waited for an answer. He was a watchman, who was appointed to stand in his watchtower, to give warning of the approach either of enemies or helpers. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. a, b. Notes, 1:12-17. Ps. 85:8. Is. 21:6-12. Ez. 3:17-19. 33:2-9. Heb. 13:17.) He would therefore wait upon God, with recollection and prayer, expecting further instructions: and he would watch to see what the Lord would say to him, or "in him," by the Spirit of prophecy; that he might know what answer to give the people, who reproved and contended with him for uttering the alarming predictions of the foregoing chapter, and who started objections which he knew not how to obviate. Accordingly the Lord ordered him to write the following vision in large legible characters, "upon tables" made of wood and covered with wax; (as it was customary in those days;) that, being hung up in some public place, every one might read it with the utmost facility; and that the Jews might generally get acquainted with it. (Marg. Ref. c, d. Notes, Is. 8:1-4, v. 1. 30:8-11. Jer. 36:1, 27-32.) For it related to most interesting events; which would not immediately be fulfilled, but for which a time was appointed in the purposes of God. When that appointed period should arrive, the prophecy would speak for itself, proclaiming its divine original by its exact accomplishment: this therefore was to be patiently waited for, though apparently long delayed; for it would infallibly come to pass, and not tarry beyond the prescribed and best time. (Marg. Ref. e, h. Notes, 2 Kings 6:32, 33. Ps. 27:13, 14. 102:13-22, vv. 13-17. Lam. 3:26-30. Dan. 9:2, 3, 24-27, 11:36. Luke 18:1-8, vv. 7, 8. Acts 1:4-8, v. 7. What I shall, &c. (1) 'Or rather, "What I shall answer as to what I have argued," viz. to the expostulations I made with God just before. . . . God commands the prophet to write the contents of this vision, in such legible characters, as were "in public tables, that were hung up in temples and mark places, that every one might have cognizance of them." Lowth.

Though it tarry, &c. (3) 'There are two different words in the Hebrew, which our English expresses by that one word tarry. "Though he tarry, expect him; because he that cometh, will come; he will not go beyond" the appointed time, but will make good the promises of deliverance given to your fathers." Ibid.

V. 4. The former part of this verse may be applied to Nebuchadnezzar, or Belshazzar: whose hearts were exalted in pride, and alienated from God, even when they used submissive words respecting him. (Marg. Ref. i. Notes, 2:46-49. 3:26-29. 5:18-24.) The Septuagint render the verse, "If any man draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in him: but the just shall live by his faith." This the apostle quotes, only reversing the order of the two clauses in the verse. (Heb. 10:38.) This leads us to consider the proud, unbelieving, and apostate Jews, as well as the Chaldeans. The general principle perhaps may be thus stated, with reference to the state of things in the prophet's time. The proud and hypocritical Jews objected and scoffed at these predictions; as those of whom St. Peter spake, did at that of the coming of Christ to destroy his enemies and judge the world. (Note, 2 Pet. 3:1-4, v. 3, 4.) They were elated with self-sufficiency, and proud of their privileges: they confided in their own wisdom, strength, or courage, they "trusted in themselves that they were righteous," vindicated their conduct against the reproofs of the prophets, and disdained their humiliating warnings and exhortations: their "souls," or hearts, were not upright in them; they were unsound and hypocritical, and "they drew back" from God and his worship, when called to self-denial and trials for conscience' sake. Whereas every righteous person, who was accepted by God, and who walked by the rule of his word, lived by faith in his mercy, grace, promise, and providence, and in the redemption of the predicted Saviour: by this faith he was justified and sanctified, and had both his title to eternal life and his meanness for it: by this faith he lived unto God, in dependence and submission, expecting all good from him, and devoting himself to his service: not being of "such as drew back unto perdition, but of those that believed to the saving of their souls." This discrimination of character, be-home, who "enlargeth his desire as hell, and is as death, and cannot be satisfied, but gathereth unto him all nations, and heapeeth unto him all people :

6 Shall not all these "take up a parable against him, and a taunting proverb against him, and say, "Wo to him "that increaseth that which is not his ! "how long ? and to him that "ladeth himself with thick clay !

7 Shall "they not rise up suddenly that shall "bite thee, and awake that shall vex thee, and thou shalt be for booties unto them ?

8 Because "thou hast spoiled many nations, all the remnant of the people shall spoil thee ; because of men's "blood, and for "the violence of the land, of the city, and of all that dwell therein.

(Marg. Ref. k. Notes. Rom. 1:17. Gal. 3:10-14, v. 11. Heb. 10:35-39, v. 38.) "He, who is righteous by his faith, shall live." The distinction between "the righteousness of faith," and the righteousness of works, is evidently intended, as it appears by the way in which the apostle cites the text. The proud is not upright, and is condemned for his pride and hypocrisy ; but the humble is not justified by his humility, but by his faith. (Note, Rom. 4:14-17.)

V. 5-8. "The prophet, having assured the Jews of a deliverance in God's appointed time, proceeds now to denounce his judgment against the Babylonian monarchy, speaking of it as comprised under one person at the head of it. . . (1:1) He describes him as intoxicated with his successes, and not knowing how to set any bounds to his ambition ; but still as his conquests enlarge, his desire of having more increases." Louth.—It is probable, that the kings of Babylon, (as well as their subjects,) indulged to a great excess of riot also, and inflamed their passions by intoxication, for the execution of their destructive projects. Nebuchadnezzar was a very proud ambitious man, intoxicated by greatness and prosperity ; he was not satisfied with his paternal dominions ; but his lust of dominion and his ambitious views were expanded, till he became insatiable as "hell and death," or the grave : and he wanted to gather to him all nations, to aggrandize himself by extending his authority, to increase his revenues, and to acquire a greater measure of fame among men. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. i-q. Notes. 9-11. Prov. 27:20. 30:15, 16. Is. 5:8-17, v. 8, 14. Dan. 5:1-4, 16-24.) But his overgrown empire would speedily be subverted : all the nations, which he or his successors had conquered and oppressed, would at length insult over his fallen family and empire, with taunting proverbs ; they would denounce woes upon him, for seizing upon those countries which did not belong to him ; and inquire scoffingly how long he had held them ; and they would ridicule and reprobate him, for "loading himself with thick clay," or with those ill-gotten dominions and treasures, which would only pollute, burden, and incurber him, without being of any real use to him or his family. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. r-u. Notes. Is. 14:3-20. 44:19, 20. 55:1-3. Jer. 51:33-37. Lam. 4:21, 22. Ez. 32:21. Luke 12:15-21, v. 20. Jam. 5:1-6.) For the Medes and Persians would soon rise up, to perplex and harass the kings of Babylon, whose great wealth and extensive empire would render them the richer booty for them. As the Chaldeans had "spoiled many nations," a remnant of these very people would join their enemies in spoiling them ; to avenge the innocent blood which they had shed, and especially the violence done to the land of Judah, the city of Jerusalem, and the Jews. (Marg. Ref. x-a. Notes. Is. 13:1-5, 17-22. 21:1-9. 33:1. 45:1-6. Jer. 50:22-28, 35-46. 51:61-64.)—It is obvious, that all this may be applied both to the temporal conquests, dominion, and tyranny of Pagan Rome, and her persecution of the primitive Christians, and to the ruin of that overgrown empire : and also to the spiritual pride and ambition, the insatiable thirst of dominion, the tyranny, cruelty, and persecution of Papal Rome ; and to the expected event of that usurpation, and the ruin of that city which has been the seat of it, whether these events were intended in the prediction or not. (Notes, Rev. 12:14-17:18.)

V. 9-11. The king of Babylon aimed to exalt his family to so high a situation of power and greatness, that they might be out of the reach of their enemies, and have nothing to fear from any rival : as the eagle's lofty nest is the security of her young. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. c. Notes. Prov. 18:10, 11 Is. 47:7-10. Jer. 49:16. Ob. 3-6, v. 4.) But this covetousness or rapacity prompted him to use most iniquitous, oppressive, and cruel methods of aggrandizing himself, which proved ruinous to his posterity : both by rendering him the object of the hatred and envy of his neighbours, and by exposing him to the righteous judgment of God. Thus, by "cutting off many people" he ensured disgrace to his family, even as if he had consulted how to shame them ; and he brought guilt upon himself, as if he had intended to destroy his own life or soul. (Marg. Ref. d, e. Notes. 2 Kings 9:25, 26. Prov. 1:17-19. Is. 14:16-23. Matt. 27:24, 25.) For if other witnesses of his guilt should be wanting, or men should not venture to give their evidence against him ; the very stone and timber of the city and palaces, which he had erected with the spoils of the oppressed nations, would concur in crying to God for vengeance upon him, and in testifying his guilt. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. f. Notes. 12-17. Jer. 22:13-19. Mic. 3:8-12. Luke 19:28-40, v. 40. Jam. 5:1-6, v. 3, 4.)—The temporal effects of Nebuchadnezzar's oppressions on his kingdom and family, as speedily to be ruined by the Medes and Persians, were here predicted ; but we cannot draw any conclusion from it, as to the state of his soul ; for it is probable, that he repented and obtained forgiveness. (Notes, Dan. 4:1-3, 34-37.) "The stones of the house shall cry, and say that they are built of blood ; and the wood shall answer and say the same of itself."

V. 12-14. Nebuchadnezzar was very proud of great Babylon, which he had builded for himself ; (Note, Dan. 4:28-33, v. 30.) but this work was performed at the expense of immense bloodshed, and the iniquity thus contracted brought down the wrath of God on his posterity. He had exposed himself, and his soldiers, to vast fatigue, hardship, and peril in his wars ; and he had wearied his subjects and vassals, as if they had laboured in the fire, while they builded the walls, castles, temples, and palaces of Babylon ; yet all this was in fact for "very vanity." For that city would soon be taken by the Medes and Persians ; the monarchy and royal family would be ruined, the seat of empire removed, and Babylon itself at length entirely destroyed. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. g, h. Notes, Gen. 11:1-9. Ps. 127:1, 2. Ec. 2:4-11. Jer. 51:25, 58:61-64, v. 62, 64. Rev. 17:6, 18.) Indeed, it was the righteous purpose of God, to permit the Chaldeans and their associates to be thus harassed and wearied, in order to punish their idolatry, and their oppression of his worshippers ; and he intended to destroy that city, in order to show his glory to the whole earth, by redeeming Israel and replenishing Jerusalem : that there the Redeemer might appear, and that his gospel might spread from thence, to fill the earth with the knowledge of the glorious perfections, truth, and salvation of the Lord ; with the worship of his name, and obedience to his will, even as the waters deeply and entirely overspread the whole channel of the seas. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. i. Notes. Is. 61:4-4, v. 3. 11:6-9, v. 9. Zech. 14:6-9. Rev. 11:15-18. 20:1-6.)—This universal success of the gospel will follow the ruin of the New Testament Babylon ; even that city, which has been builded with blood and iniquity, and where the people have been left to labour in the fire, and to weary themselves for the veriest vanities, in idolatries, superstitions, will-worship, and fruitless efforts to preserve an usurped authority. It is therefore evident that these events also were intended. — God's providence in governing the world shall consistently appear in the downfall of the Babylonian empire ; especially as it is described by the prophets, as an earnest and type of the fall of mystical Babylon, which will be a decisive stroke that will thoroughly vindicate oppressed truth and innocence.' Louth.

V. 15—17. Probably, the Chaldeans were very much addicted to drunkenness, and delighted in tempting each other, or strangers, to that vice; giving them liquor and pressing them to drink to excess of it, in order that they might overreach them when intoxicated, or discover and expose their infirmities and faults. For this, a wo was denounced against them, that they should be exposed to shame, instead of retaining their present honour and reputation; that they would be left to drink to excess, and to expose themselves as uncircumcised idolaters; (which Belshazzar did at his feast;) and that then the Lord would put his cup of wrath into their hands, intoxicate them with his judgments, and leave them to defile their magnificence, according to the loathsome behaviour and condition of drunken men. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. k—p. Notes, Gen. 9:20—23. 19:31—33. 2 Sam. 11:12, 13. 13:22—29, vv. 28, 29. Is. 52:23, 28; 7:8. 47:1—3. Dan. 5:1—4. Hos. 7:5—7. Nah. 3:4—6.)—But the same image is elsewhere used for tempting others to idolatry, or other iniquity, or rendering them miserable. (Notes, Pa. 75:8. Is. 51:21—23. Jer. 25:15—17, 27, 28. 51:7. Rev. 14:8—11. 17:1—5. 18:4—8, 20—24.) It may therefore predict the pains, which the king and people of Babylon would take to tempt the nations, especially the Jews, to idolatry, or to debase them by oppression; and the judgments of God upon them for it. In this respect they typified the church of Rome, the great seducer of Christians to idolatry and superstition, and the persecutor of the church, which shall soon receive its righteous retribution.—The Chaldeans would thus be punished "for the violence of Lebanon," that is, say some, "for the violence done to the temple built of cedars of Lebanon;" (Zech. 11:1.) or for the ravages committed near that mountain: or rather for the cruelties, by which they resembled the wild beasts which frequented it. "Therefore the spoil of beasts shall make them afraid." "As thou hast spoiled others, without any sense of common humanity: so the army of the conqueror shall deal by thee, . . . and shall tear thee in pieces as wild beasts do their prey." Louth. "The spoil of beasts," &c. or as men pursue and destroy beasts of prey upon the mountains, who have made them afraid by their depredations. They would suffer for men's blood which they had shed, and for the violence done to Judah, Jerusalem, and the Jews. (Marg. Ref. q—s. Notes, 5—8, v. 8.)

The cup. (16) *Grotius justly observes that the fifteenth and sixteenth verses contain an allegory. The Chaldeans gave to the neighbouring nations the cup of idolatry, and deceitful alliance; and in return they received from JEHOVAH the cup of his fury.' Bp. Newcombe.

V. 18, 19. The idols of Babylon could not profit their makers: they were "teachers of lies," leading men to false conceptions of God and his worship; their oracles, as interpreted by the priests, were unprofitable and pernicious lies; and the whole deluded men into an absurd confidence in a dumb idol, the work of their own hands. A wo was therefore denounced against those, who continued so stupid and perverse, as to say to a log of wood, or a block of marble, formed into any shape, by the saw, plane, or chisel, "Awake, arise, come, help, teach, counsel us;" when, though it was overlaid with gold and silver, and appeared very splendid; yet, being lifeless, it was actually inferior to the meanest reptile. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. 1 Kings 18:26—29. 2 Kings 19:14—19. Ps. 115:3—8. Is. 44:9—18. 46:1, 2, 5—9. Jer. 10:3—13. Dan. 3:1—7. Acts 18:23—31. Rom. 1:21—23. 1 Cor. 12:1—3, v. 2. Rev. 9:20, 21. 17:1—5.) This is certainly applicable to the idolatry of the New Testament Babylon. For her example, influence, and authority diffused the worship of angels, saints, and images throughout the Christian church, which has continued in many places to this day; and probably will continue, till that city shall be destroyed and "swept with the besom of destruction," as ancient Babylon has been.

V. 20. Opposed to these false and imaginary objects of worship, JEHOVAH was here set before the nations, as dwelling in his sanctuary among his people; that is, in Christ, in his church, and amidst his worshippers, in heaven and earth. 'The true God has his throne in heaven, as the

'It alludes to such a silence, as is kept in courts of justice, when a judge pronounces the sentence.' Louth. (*Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, Job 29:7—11. Ps. 46:10. 76:8, 9. Is. 6:1—4. PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—8. When we have presented our prayers before God, we should expect and wait for an answer; using every means of information, and watching the course of Providence: that we may learn his will, and how to answer those who cavil and object; or who revile our confidence in him, and our belief of his word. Ministers also must wait upon God, earnestly and continually, to know how to answer their opposers; as well as watch for opportunities of usefulness. It behooves them to render their important message as plain and energetic as possible; that it may be level to the capacity of the most unlearned, and may excite the attention of the most heedless. For all men are deeply concerned in the truths of God's word: all his predictions, promises, and threatenings shall in the appointed season be accomplished; every part shall then declare its own truth and divinity; and they, who "wait for the LORD," will not complain of having waited in vain. We should rest on and plead his promises; and though the performance of them tarry, we should "hope unto the end;" and we shall thus experience the truth and preciousness of them. But pride objects to this method of seeking happiness, and to the whole system of revealed religion: the ambitious, the self-wise, and the self-sufficient are not, and cannot be, upright in heart in their religious inquiries and professions; and by rejecting and despising the "righteousness of God by faith," they evince their insincerity. The humble broken-hearted sinner alone believes this report; he submits to God; he fears, hopes, waits, prays, and uses every means of obtaining an interest in this free salvation. He rests his soul on the promise, and on Christ through whom it is given: thus he obtains righteousness and strength, wisdom and grace; he walks and works, as well as lives, by faith; perseveres unto the end, and is exalted to glory, whilst proud Pharisees and hypocrites are debased unto hell.—But in what varied ways does human depravity break forth! A vain exorbitant ambition disposes men to despise the most eligible situations, and to rove from home in quest of happiness: success only enlarges their desires, and renders them insatiable and boundless; and the wretched slaves of these vain cravings and expectations would be as far from felicity as ever, could they obtain the whole earth for their possession. Thus they multiply crimes, enemies, and dangers: they fall under the wo denounced against those, who "increase that which is not theirs;" and their short-lived incumbency defiles their souls, and excites others to rise up, vex, and make a booty of them, in their turn; and to avenge on them the blood which they have shed.

V. 9—20. In vain do men expect, by "an evil covetousness," to advance their families, and secure them from the power of evil: they only treasure up guilt and shame for them; (Notes, Prov. 20:21. 28:15—17.) and every part of their treasures, amassed by fraud or violence, will cry out for vengeance on them. For were a man thus to build a city, or erect a kingdom, for his posterity, he would leave them a curse instead of a blessing; and he in acquiring, and they in attempting to preserve it, would "labour in the fire and weary themselves for very vanity." For the Lord will assuredly glorify himself, before all the inhabitants of the earth, in executing judgment upon the murderers and plunderers of mankind; under whatever specious guise they make their appearance.—Nor can sensual pleasures do more for men's happiness, than avarice or ambition: whilst they

CHAPTER III.

The prophet prays that God would revive his work, and has mercy on his people, 1, 2. He commemorates the displays made of JEHOVAH'S glory in His ancient works for Israel, as encouraging hope of future deliverance, 3—15. He shows how deeply he was affected by the prospect of the approaching judgments; but resolves to rejoice in God when all other comforts failed, 16—19.

transgress by wine, and tempt others to that degrading vice, and glory in making their neighbours drunken also, that they may cheat or deride them; they forget, that God has denounced a wo upon them, and that the cup of his wrath is about to be put into their hands, which will turn all their mirth into howling, and all their glory into contempt. Indeed, all who seduce others into any kind of carnal or spiritual wickedness, to gratify their own vile passions or interests, will meet with the severest condemnation from the Lord. Nor can idols, superstitions, or teachers of lies, of whatever description, profit any man, or render him profitable to others. Wo be to all who inculcate or countenance such human inventions, or diabolical delusions! nay, to those, who are deluded to give that glory to a dumb idol, or to any creature, which our jealous God claims wholly to himself! He dwells in his holy temple: may we, may all the inhabitants of the earth, fall down before him; welcome his salvation, and worship him through Christ Jesus, and by the influences of his Spirit! Thus we shall shun these vices and delusions; seek durable honours, riches, and pleasures; and employ all our powers to glorify our God and Saviour.

NOTES.—CHAP. III. V. 1. 'A prayer of Habakkuk the prophet, with an ode.' Sept.—Shigionoth may denote a musical instrument of great compass, with which the Jews accompanied this piece of poetry. Bp. Newcombe. (Marg.) The word prayer seems to be taken generally for an act of devotion to God. (Note, 1 Sam. 2:1.)

V. 2. The prophet had hearkened attentively to the revelation, which the Lord had made to him of his future dealings with Israel; and, though heavy judgments had been denounced on their oppressors, and intimations of future deliverances had been given; yet there was no reason to hope, that the threatened judgments on Israel might be averted or retarded. He was therefore alarmed, at the prospect of the approaching captivity; and prayed that God would revive his work among them, in the midst of those years of adversity, and make known his glorious perfections and his favour for his people, by preserving them, and purifying them, in this furnace of affliction, that they might be prepared for deliverance from it: and that even in the midst of his wrath against them, he would remember mercy also, give them some mitigation of their calamities, and revive true religion among them.—This seems primarily to refer to the years of the Babylonish captivity, though it may be applied to the years which were to intervene before the coming of the Messiah; to those of the antichristian oppressors of the church; or to any other season, when the church is under divine rebukes or grievous afflictions. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, 16. 15—10. Ezra 9:8. Ps. 90:13—17. 119:120. Is. 63:15—19. 64: Dan. 7:28. Hos. 6:1—3.)

V. 3—5. The prophet to encourage his hope of effectual help from God in behalf of the people) set himself to celebrate the praises of his former interpositions in their behalf. (Notes, Ps. 77:5—12. 143:5. Is. 51:1—3.) As Israel's "Holy One," the Object of their worship, and their righteous Ruler and Protector, he had come from Teman, or mount Seir; and from Paran, to deliver Israel from Egypt, and to meet them on mount Sinai. He had sent Moses from that quarter, and his visible glory came from thence. Then the firmament was illuminated by the displays of his Majesty; he was adored by all the angels of heaven, and the praise of his wonders rang through all the earth. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. f—l. Notes, Ex. 19:16—20. 20:19—20. 24:15—18. Deut. 33:2. Judg. 5:4, 5. Ps. 104:2.) The brightness of his glory was conspicuous and resplendent as the light: "he had horns coming out of his hand," an emblem of the power, which he exerted to defend Israel and scatter their enemies: or, as it may be rendered, "bright beams came forth from his side." (Marg.)—The verb, whence the word here used is derived, signifies to shine, Ex. 34:28, 29, 35, and a pencil, or cone, of rays, issuing from a point, diverges in the shape of a horn.... In the place whence the light proceeded, he gloriously concealed his presence. Capellus understands the verse, of the lightning on mount Sinai; but I rather refer it to the brightness, which occasionally issued from the Shechinah.... The Israelites were consumed by a fire which went out from JEHOVAH.... The burnt-offering was consumed by a fire which came out from before him. Bp. Newcombe. (Notes, Ex. 34:29—35. Lev. 9:24. 10:1, 2.)—All this, however, was rather the hiding, than the discovery, of his almighty power; or, the hiding place of his power, under which Israel was safely sheltered. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. m, n. Notes, Job 26:14. Prov. 18:10, 11.) Pestilences and fire marched before him, and attended his steps, when he passed through Egypt, to destroy the first-born and desolate the land; when he appeared to the people from the top of Sinai; when he destroyed the rebels from among them; and when he marched before them to subdue the Amalekites, Amorites, Midianites, and other enemies. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. o, p. Notes, Ex. 12:29, 30. Num. 16:35, 45—50. 25:4, 5. 2 Sam. 22:7—16.)—This is a sudden burst of poetry, in the true spirit of the ode; the concealed connexion being, that God, who had formerly displayed such power in delivering the Israelites from Egyptian slavery, might succour their posterity in a like wonderful manner; and the enthusiasm of the poet leading him to neglect all obvious ways of entering on his subject. Bp. Lowth. 'The grandest circumstances are selected: the diction is as splendid as the subject.' Bp. Newcombe.

V. 6. The God of Israel stood and measured out Canaan, and allotted it for the inheritance of their tribes; as he had divided the whole earth among the nations. He dispersed the power of Egypt, which would have hindered Israel's departure to the promised inheritance; he destroyed the confederated nations of Canaan, that would have prevented them from taking possession of it. (Marg. Ref. q, r. Notes, Ex. 23:31. Num. 34: Deut. 32:8. Neh. 9:21, 22. v. 22. Acts 17:26—29. v. 26.) The whole creation seemed to be thrown into convulsions, at the presence of Israel's God: Sinai and Horeb shook and quaked; and the most formidable and powerful opposers, which were as the mountains and hills, that have kept their places from the creation, were driven away as chaff, or made to bow down in subjection to his people. (Marg. Ref. s. Notes, Judg. 5:4, 5. Ps. 68:7, 8, 15, 16. 104:32. 114:3—8. Is. 64:1—3. Nah. 1:2—6.) 'The mountains and hills are spoken of as emblems of eternity, because time seems to make no change or alteration in them. (Gen. 49:26. Deut. 33:15.)—His ways, &c.] His purposes are decreed from all eternity, and will infallibly be executed in their appointed time.' Lowth. (Marg. Ref. t. Notes, Ps. 103:15—18. Is. 64:5. Heb. 13:7, 8.)

V. 7. The prophet, in his vision, saw the Ethiopians, Arabians, Midianites, Moabites, Ammonites, and others who inhabited the adjacent regions, in consternation and distress, whilst they heard of the wonders wrought by JEHOVAH in delivering Israel, witnessed the convulsions of nature around them, and learned how the Amalekites, and Sihon, and Og, had been destroyed by Israel; and when they found themselves attacked by the same terrible enemies. Several of these tribes dwelt in tents, or within curtains. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, Ex. 15:1. 16. Num. 3:1—10. Josh. 2:8—11. 9:24.)

10 The "mountains saw thee, and they trembled: 'the overflowing of the water passed by: 'the deep uttered his voice, and lifted up his hands on high.

11 The "sun and moon stood still in their habitation: 'at the light of 'thine arrows they went, and at the shining of thy glittering spear.

V. 8. The Lord was not displeased with the rivers or the sea, when he turned the waters of the Nile into blood, or when he divided those of the Red Sea, and of Jordan: but he came, as in haste to deliver Israel, attended by his holy angels, with his "horses and chariots of salvation;" and when love to his people caused him thus to alter the course of nature, for their deliverance and prosperity. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, Ex. 7:15-21, 14:21-31, 15:1-21, Deut. 33:26, Josh. 3: 4; Ps. 68:4, 104:3, Is. 19:1.)

V. 9, 10. "The question asked in a very bold and poetical manner, in the eighth verse, is answered in the ninth; that God displayed his power to deliver his people, according to his faithful word." Bp. Newcombe. (Marg. Ref.) The Lord appeared as a mighty warrior to fight for Israel, and made his bow (here put for all the weapons of war) quite naked, as openly prepared for the assault. This accorded to his oath and word of promise, to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, in behalf of their descendants "the tribes" of Israel, to give them the land of Canaan. Therefore, the Lord "did cleave," or divide, "the rivers of the earth," (marg.) to open them a passage to their promised inheritance: and the mountains, as if conscious of JEHOVAH's presence with his people, trembled and quaked. (Marg. Ref. a-e. See on Note, 8. Notes, Ex. 19:16-20, Ps. 68:7, 8, 77:14-20, 114:3-8, Heb. 6:13-20.) The overflowing waters of the Red Sea, of Jordan, removed to make way for them; and being piled up as walls or mountains, they seemed to celebrate the praises of their Creator's power, and to lift up their hands in admiration and adoration of him. A most emphatic, sublime, and bold poetical figure! (Marg. Ref. f, g. Notes, Ps. 65:12, 13, 93:3, 96:11-13, Is. 55:12, 13.)—Some understand the last clause in the ninth verse, of the rivers of waters miraculously flowing from the rock, when smitten by the rod of Moses, and following the camp of Israel, during their wanderings in the wilderness. (Notes, Ex. 17:5, 6. Num. 20: 10-13. Ps. 78:13-16, 1 Cor. 10:1-5, v. 4.)

V. 11. The sacred poet and prophet, in the midst of his rapturous praises, cannot be supposed to have attended to exactness of method. (Note, 12, 13.) He therefore suddenly passed from the power of God displayed in dividing the sea and Jordan, to that shown when the sun and moon were stayed in their course, whilst Joshua was fighting with the Canaanites. They stood still in their tabernacle, the firmament of heaven. They stopped, and again moved; they shone, and then set; as best coincided with the Lord's plan when he fought for Israel: for his arrows and "the lightning of his spear," his manifested power, truth, and love to his people, shone so bright as to eclipse their feeble beams. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, Josh. 10:1-14, 2 Sam. 22:7-16, vv. 14, 15. Ps. 144:5-8, vv. 5, 6.)

V. 12, 13. The Lord, at that time, and frequently in after ages, marched through the land of Canaan in indignation, to crush and scatter its heathen inhabitants, and to deliver his people from their oppressions. Thus he rescued them by the judges; and at length by "David his anointed," all whose victories were typical of Christ and his salvation. (Marg. Ref. l-n. Notes, Neh. 9:21-30, Ps. 44:1-3, Is. 63:7-14, Act. 13:16-20.) At those times he "wounded the "head," or the chief persons, in the families of these wicked enemies of Israel; he subverted their power and prosperity, as a building, which is razed to the foundation; or he wounded them mortally as when the head is cloven down to the neck. —Some, however, interpret these verses of preceding events. —The ardour of the prophet having led him to begin in the midst of his subject, (3) he here returns to what passed in 16 When "I heard, "my belly trembled; my lips quivered at the voice: rottenness entered into my bones, and I trembled in myself, "that I might rest in the day of trouble: when he cometh up unto the people, "he will "invade them with his troops.

Egypt before the dividing of the Red Sea: the mention of which astonishing miracle he repeats. (15) . . . "Out of the house," or, so that there should be no house: the prophet . . . refers to the destruction of the first-born; . . . this is figuratively called the utter overthrow of the Egyptian houses. Bp. Newcombe. Moses, Aaron, Joshua, and others, who were especially appointed by God to their distinct services, may be included among his "anointed." (Marg. Ref. o.)—As the Egyptians had craftily attempted to crush the enslaved Israelites, by destroying their male children; so G. J. crushed Egypt by destroying the first-born.

V. 14, 15. When Pharaoh had consented to Israel's departure, hearing afterwards that they were entangled in the country, he craftily attempted to come on them unawares, when unarmed or unable to resist or flee, that he might glut his revenge in their destruction: but he fell a victim, with all his forces, to his own malicious and insidious policy. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. p. Notes, Ex. 11:5, 6, 12:29, 30, 14:17, 18, 26-30, 15:9-11. Ps. 78:50, 51, 136:10-22.) The Lord, by those instruments which he employed for the deliverance of his people, effectually smote through the heads of the cities and villages of Egypt. They came out furiously as a whirlwind to scatter Israel, rejoicing to afflict and oppress them, either by open violence, or by secret machinations: but JEHOVAH marched before his poor and oppressed people through the Red Sea, as with his horses and chariots of war; and having guarded them through the heap of mighty waters, he overwhelmed and destroyed their pursuers, by the reflux of the sea into its former channel. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. See on Notes, 8:12, 13. Notes, Ex. 1:9-17, 14:5-9.) "The Egyptians rapidly followed the Israelites; and in imagination devoured a defenceless people." Bp. Newcombe. Nothing similar to this occurred after Israel had entered Canaan: though some expositors understand the passage of their triumphs over the Canaanites. (Notes, Josh. 10:1-5, 24, 25, 11:1-3, 12:2.)

V. 16. This refers to what the prophet had heard of the Chaldean invasion, which had thrown him into the greatest agitation. (Note, 2.) His body trembled and was convulsed; his voice faltered; his bones were in pain and weakness, as if decayed through disease; and he trembled in the inmost recesses of his heart; anxiously inquiring, what refuge he could flee to, or what means he could use, to be safe and at rest in the approaching day of trouble, when the king of Babylon would come up, and invade, or cut in pieces, the people with his troops. "I shall rest secure under the divine protection, when the Chaldeans shall come to invade Judea." Louth.—Some expositors suppose, that the calamities and deliverances which the prophet foresaw, were those of the Christian church, as well as those of the Jews; indeed these were indisputably a type or shadow of the other. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, 17-19. Jer. 23:9-12, v. 9. Dan. 7:28, 8:27, 10:4-9, v. 8.)

V. 17-19. The prophet foresaw that the Chaldeans would utterly desolate the land, and render the vineyards, oliveyards, orchards, fields, and pastures entirely unproductive; that every outward comfort would fail, and that the extremity of distress and hardship must be endured. And perhaps he also understood, that the ordinances of God's house, and all other means of grace and of divine consolation, would be suspended. Yet by meditation, prayer and praise, composing his mind, he was enabled to exercise faith and hope in God; and he had those views of his power, truth, love to his people, and all-sufficiency for their happiness, in life and death and for ever; that he was determined to rejoice in him and his salvation, in all possible circumstances. "The Lord God," his Strength, his Support, Protector, and Comforter, was able to make up all losses, to supply all wants, and to rejoice his heart under all afflictions. (*Marg. and Marg. Ref. a-d. Notes, 16. Gen. 49:18. Ec. 15:2. 1 Sam. 2:1. 2 Sam. 22:2-4. 23:5. Ps. 27:1-3. 46:1-7. 84:11,12. Is. 12:3,3. 61:10,11. Mic. 7:5-7. Zech. 9:9,10. Luke 1:46-55, vv. 46,47. 10:17-20, v. 20. (Marg. Ref. a, f. Notes, Deut. 32:13. 33:29. 2 Sam. 22:34,35, v. 34. Is. 58:13,14, v. 14.)—This song of praise, and believing prayer, he dedicated to the chief singer at the temple, to be set to music on some stringed instruments, which he had chosen or provided for that purpose. (Marg. and Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-16. Whatever causes us to fear or grieve should remind us to be instant in prayer; whether it be a message from God's word, or a dispensation of his providence; whether it respect ourselves, or the church, or those with whom we stand connected. (Note, Phil. 4:5-7.) If we fear or grieve, that the work of God in our hearts, families, or congregations, declines; we should pray the more earnestly, that the Lord would revive it "in the midst of the years" of our pilgrimage; that he would subdue our iniquities, increase our faith and love, convert sinners, and cause believers to be zealous, diligent, and fruitful. Even when we suffer the fatherly correction of our God, we should hope and pray that "in wrath he would remember mercy," and that we may be supported under our trials, and derive benefit from them.—We shall see no cause for despondency, either in our own case, or in that of the church, if we duly remember the ancient wonders of his love to his people. The displays of his power, truth, and mercy to Israel, and of righteous severity upon his enemies, were very resplendent, and his glory covered the heavens and the earth. How then have they been filled with the brightness of his light, displayed in the great redemption of his Son! The Majesty that shone from Mount Sinai, at the Red Sea, in the wilderness, at the river Jordan, and in Canaan, (whilst the mountains saw, and trembled, the deep adored, and the sun and moon stood still, as in amazement at their Creator's power, when he "rode on his horses and chariots of salvation,") was great and worthy to be praised: yet was it eclipsed by the harmonious discovery of the divine perfections which was made, when the Son of God suffered on the cross for the sins of his rebellious creatures. Then the sun was darkened, the rocks were cleft, the graves were opened, the veil of the temple was rent; and all creatures seemed to share in the astonishment and consternation, except the hardened priests, scribes, and Pharisees! How glorious also was that display, when the earth quaked, and angels descended to attend upon the resurrection of their crucified Lord! when he "ascended up on high, and led captivity captive, and received gifts for men, even for the rebellious;" when the Holy Spirit came down from heaven on the assembled apostles, to testify his glorious ascension and exaltation at the right hand of the Father! and when he came in holy majesty and power to avenge himself on his crucifiers, to destroy Jerusalem, and to erect his kingdom on the ruins of their abrogated dispensation; and again, to terminate the persecutions of his pagan enemies, by subverting the Roman empire! Great and glorious have been the works of our God for his church: yet not only history, but prophecy, causes us to meditate terror, when we consider the intimations, that are given of various severe conflicts, which his people yet must sustain with many antichrists.

V. 17-19. In respect of the troubles which may befall us personally, however we may be impoverished, tempted, despised, persecuted, or afflicted, in life or death; we should seriously and frequently consider, how we "may rest in the day of trouble;" and our gracious God has fully provided a refuge for us, in Christ Jesus, and shown it to us in his holy word. And if our fears lead us to abound in prayer and meditation, and in praising God for his former mercies to us or to his church; if we are led to live wholly by faith in him, as the God of our salvation, and to "exercise ourselves to have a conscience void of offence, towards him and all men;" we shall find hope prevail. And, as we must have cause for rejoicing in every tribulation or peril, we shall be generally enabled to rejoice: we shall find our hearts assured of support and comfort by the way, and of finishing our course happily; and then other things will less move us: and whatever may fail us, or be taken from us, or laid upon us, we ought to rejoice in our all-sufficient and eternal Portion. As he is the Strength, as well as Salvation of his people, he will fit us for our warfare and our trials; he will carry us above, out of the reach of our enemies, and he will bring us to "tread on our high places," in his holy habitation in heaven, and to join the songs of those chief singers, who are now celebrating the praises of God and the Lamb. In hopes of this immortal crown, let us sit loose to earthly possessions and comforts, and let us cheerfully bear up under our crosses: for yet "a little while, and he that shall come, will come, and will not tarry;" and he will "take us to himself, that where he is there we may be also."

BOOK OF ZEPHANIAH.

It is probable, that Zephaniah delivered these prophecies towards the close of Josiah's reign, when religion was greatly declined in Judah, through the hypocrisy of those who had concurred in the reformation of that pious king. He was contemporary with Jeremiah, in the first years of that prophet; and sometimes uses the same language. He severely reproveth the wickedness of the Jews, and predicted the Chaldean invasion and its fatal effects: he exhorted the people to repent and seek the Lord, as the only method of escaping ruin, personal and public: he foretold various judgments, that were coming on those nations, which inflicted or rejoiced over the miseries of the Jews; and he concluded with most animating predictions of evangelical times, and of great prosperity to the church.—These predictions entirely accord with many which have been considered: and it is certain that this prophecy formed a part of the sacred Scriptures, in the days of Christ and his apostles, though no express quotation is made from it in the New Testament.

CHAPTER I.

The time when Zephaniah prophesied, 1. Denunciations of wrath against Judah and Jerusalem, for idolatry and apostacy, 2-6. Predictions of terrible judgments, coming on men of different orders and descriptions, which could by no means be avoided, 7-18.

THE "word of the Lord which came unto Zephaniah the son of Cushi, the son of Gedaliah, the son of Amariah, the son of Hizkiah, in the days of Josiah the son of Amon, king of Judah.

"I will utterly consume all things from off the land, saith the Lord.

Their idols were "stumblingblocks," the occasion to the people of falling into sin and misery; but in mercy they could be destroyed with their obstinate worshippers; and accordingly that nation no more relapsed into gross idolatry after the captivity. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. c. Notes, Is. 27:7-11, v. 9. Ez. 7:16-19, v. 19. 14:1-8, 13-21. Hos. 14:1-3, v. 3. 4-8, v. 8. Mic. 5:10-15.)

V. 4. A remnant of Baal's worshippers remained in Judah and Jerusalem, notwithstanding all Josiah's efforts to destroy that idolatry; but the Lord by the Chaldeans finally extirpated it. "The Chemarim" or the black ones, were an order of idolatrous priests, or devotees to Baal, who perhaps wore black garments, or painted their faces black. (Marg. Ref.) "The Chemarim were an order of superstitious priests, appointed to minister in the service of Baal, and were as his peculiar chaplains."—"I will destroy these, together with the priests of the tribe of Levi, who have joined in the worship of idols." Louth. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 2 Kings 23:5. Hos. 10:5, 6.)

(2 Kings. 23:10.)—Swearing is an act of religious worship, or a solemn invocation of God, as a Witness and a Judge, (Deut. 10:20.) and therefore expressly forbid to be used to idols. (Josh. 23:7.) Louth. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, 1 Kings 18:21. 2 Kings 17:41.)

V. 6. Many had concurred in Josiah's reformation, who afterwards relapsed into idolatry; and they would be punished with those, who had never professed to seek and serve him. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Ps. 14:1-3. 36:34. 125:4, 5. Is. 14. Jer. 3:6-11. Ez. 3:20, 21. Heb. 10:35-39. 2 Pet. 2:20-22.)

V. 7, 8. The people were ordered to keep silence, and not murmur or object to the execution, which was about to take place in the approaching day of the Lord. (Marg. Ref. r. s. Notes, Ps. 39:9, 10. Am. 6:9-11. Hab. 2:20. Zech. 2:10-13, v. 13.) For the slaughter of the wicked would be a sacrifice to his justice, on which he had invited the Chaldeans and their confederates to feast.—This "alludes to the custom of those that offered sacrifice, which was to invite their friends to partake of the feast which accompanied it." Louth. (Marg. and *Marg. For though Josiah set his sons an excellent example, and doubtless gave them good instructions; yet they "roved very wicked, and shared abundantly in the public calamities. Jehoahaz died a captive in Egypt; Jehoikim by a violent death; and Zedekiah, having seen his sons slaughtered, had his eyes put out, was carried to Babylon, and died there. (Marg. and *Marg. V. 12. The Lord determined to detect, expose, and punish those secret idolatries, iniquities and impieties, which had escaped all human observation. He would search every retired corner; as men search with candles for stolen goods: and no concealed abomination would then escape conviction or punishment. Or, "No corner would escape the Chaldeans, who should diligently search the houses, and plunder the wealth of them." They especially would be punished, who were become daring, through long-continued impunity and prosperity; as wine grows stronger and more heady, when it has long settled on the lees; who had run into infidelity or atheism, and despised alike the promises and threatenings of God, saying in their hearts, that he would neither do good to his worshippers, nor punish his enemies. CHAPTER II.

An exhortation to seek God, without delay, in hope of preservation in the day of his anger, 1-3. Prophecies against the Philistines, Moabites, Ammonites, Ethiopians, and Assyrians, 4-15.

2 Before the decree bring forth, before the day pass as the chaff, before the fierce anger of the Lord come upon you, before the day of the Lord's anger come upon you.

3 Seek ye the Lord, ye meek of the earth, which have wrought his judgment; seek righteousness, seek meekness: it may be ye shall be hid in the day of the Lord's anger.

4 For Gaza shall be forsaken, and Ashkelon a desolation: they shall drive out Ashdod at the noonday, and Ekron shall be rooted up.

5 Wo unto the inhabitants of the sea coasts, the nation of the Cherethites! the word of the Lord is against you; O Canaan, the land of the Philistines, I will even destroy thee, that there shall be no inhabitant.

6 And the seacoast shall be dwellings, and cottages for shepherds, and folds for flocks.

7 And the coast shall be for the remnant of the house of Judah; they shall feed thereupon: in the houses of Ashkelon shall they lie down in the evening: for the Lord their God shall visit them, and turn away their captivity.

8 I have heard the reproach of Moab, and the revilings of the children of Ammon, whereby they have reproached my people, and magnified themselves against their border.

world, and lose his own soul? And what shall a man give in exchange for his soul? Let us then "flee from the wrath to come," and "choose that good part, which shall never be taken from us;" then we shall be prepared for every event; and nothing "shall separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."

NOTES.—CHAP. II. V. 1-3. This exhortation to repentance plainly intimated, that the preceding denunciations of desolating judgments were absolute, only because the Lord foreknew that the nation would generally continue impenitent.—Judah was addressed, as "a nation not desired;" God had delighted in his people, but he now no longer desired them; nay, he abhorred their odious crimes. Or it may be rendered "not desirous;" (marg.) that is, wholly careless respecting the favour or the wrath of God. They were, however, ordered to gather together in a solemn assembly, to fast and pray, and humble themselves before God; or, as some render it, to examine themselves, that they might discover and repent of their sins. This must be done without delay: for "the decree," or sentence against them, was about "to bring forth" those desolations, which would put it out of their power to assemble. The day allotted them for this purpose, would soon pass, "as the chaff" driven by the wind: and the fierce anger of God, in the day of his wrath, would speedily overtake them. But if the nation in general still neglected this duty; yet let the remnant of the meek and lowly, the humble, teachable, and peaceable, seek the Lord in fervent prayer. They were despised and afflicted, and chiefly found among the poor "of this world;" yet they had obeyed his commandments and adhered to his worship; or, being truly penitent, they were now disposed to do so. Let them therefore seek his favour, and his justifying and sanctifying righteousness, and endeavour more fully to understand and keep his commandments. Though they were meek; yet let them seek more meekness, and "poverty of spirit," that they might be more deeply humbled, and become more submissive, dependent, and obedient. This might possibly preserve them from sharing in the approaching calamities; or at least they would in this way be prepared for behaving properly and finding comfort under them, and for deriving benefit from them. (*Marg. Ref. Notes, 3:8. 2 Kings 22:15-20. Ps. 107:1,18. 25:8,9. 32:6,7. Is. 55:6,7. 57:15,16. 61:1-3. Jer. 41:2. Hos. 10:12,13. Am. 5:4-6,14,15. Matt. 5:3-5. 7:7-11. The Philistines, who live on the coast of the Mediterranean Sea, . . . (Ez. 25:16.) called there as well as here, "Cherethites," or "Cherethims." The word is translated . . . Cretians by the LXX. . . . They are supposed to have been a colony removed from Crete to Palestine. . . . The seacoast (5) shall in aftertimes belong to the Jews, who shall possess all the Philistines' country; as it appears that they did in the first times of Christianity. PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The servants of God are all of one mind, and with one voice proclaim, that "there is no peace for the wicked."—How soon does human depravity subvert all that man can do to revive true religion! Even where a decent exterior excites our favourable judgment, the Lord often sees such abominations as call for his severest vengeance.—If the materials and occasions of sin shall perish with the wicked; how much more will the tempters, who seduce men to iniquity!—When professors of true religion copy the crimes of the heathen, they must expect severer punishment than they.—Vain are all endeavours to worship God and idols, to serve God and Mammon: and apostasy evinces hypocrisy, as neglect of God shows impiety and contempt: "for if any man draw back, the Lord will have no pleasure in him." May we "none of us be of those, that draw back unto perdition, but of them that believe to the saving of the soul!"—It will be unavailing in the day of the Lord, for sinners to object, cavil, or complain; nay, his presence will certainly stop their mouths: for it will appear that they who perish fall a sacrifice to his justice, for breaking his law, and because they have no interest by faith in the Redeemer's atoning blood.—That day of God (of which all temporal judgments are earnest,) will soon arrive; and then neither pious nor royal parents will prove any security to their ungodly children: the, the children of kings and of saints, who have abused their peculiar privileges, will experience the deepest condemnation. Then various instances of vanity, and conformity to the world, will be adduced as proofs of men's pride and carnality, which now are deemed trivial or justifiable: and oppressors and their agents will be called to an awful account for their ill-gotten treasures. Then there will be cries and howlings from every quarter, and among men of all descriptions. The covetous and fraudulent merchants and traders will forget their gainful projects; and plausible hypocrites will be exposed in their secret iniquities. Then daring infidels, who have settled on their lees, and equally despised the favour and defied the wrath of God, will cry to the rocks to fall on them and hide them from his intolerable frown. In short, in that time of wrath, of trouble and distress, neither silver nor gold will be able to deliver their possessors; but the whole world will be consumed with the fire of the Lord's indignation. "What is a man profited, if he gain the whole

Maccabees. The Lord purposed thus to destroy the enemies of the Jews, and restore his people from captivity: and this information would serve to encourage the repentance and prayers of those who regarded it. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, Jer. 47: Ez. 25:15-17. Am. 1:6-8. Zech. 9:5-7.)

V. 8-10. Moab and Ammon would be rendered as desolate as Sodom and Gomorrah, though in another way. (Marg. Ref. c. Note, Gen. 19:24, 25.) These countries would become a barren desert covered with nettles, or dug up for salt-pits, till at length they would be possessed by the Jews.—Some think, that the conversion of the inhabitants of those regions to Christianity was intended by the expression, “The remnant of my people shall possess them.” Judas Maccabæus and his brethren subdued the Ammonites: (1 Mac. 5:6.) but this and the seventh verse will receive their utmost completion, at the general restoration of the Jewish nation. Louth.—“These nations presumed to take from the Jews that country, which the Lord had given them.” (Marg. Ref. Notes, Is. 15: 16: 25:10-12. Jer. 48: 49:1-6. Ez. 25:2-11. Am. 1:13-15. 2:1-3.)

V. 11. JEHOVAH would, by his judgments, render himself an object of terror to the nations, because he intended to destroy the idolatrous inhabitants, and to “famish their gods.” These were supposed to feast upon the sacrifices, and they would therefore be made lean when none were offered. (Deut. 32:38.) The extirpation of pagan idolatry through many nations, by the promulgation of the gospel in the primitive ages, in part fulfilled this prophecy: and the entire and final abolition of sacrifices, to the gods of Greece and Rome, through so large a portion of the most renowned countries on earth, which indisputably took place, and was occasioned by the preaching of despised Jews, compared with this prophecy, is well worthy of special notice. Yet it will have a more signal accomplishment, when the universal success of Christianity shall destroy all kinds of idolatry; and men shall worship the Lord, every one in his own place, all over the earth, even to the most remote isles of the Gentiles; without any occasion to go up to Jerusalem to worship. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Ps. 22:27, 28. Jer. 16:19-21. Zech. 13:2, 3. Mal. 1:9-11. v. 11. John 4:21-24. Rev. 11:15-18.) Louth. The Jews called all places islands, to which they went by sea. Louth.

V. 12. “Also ye, Ethiopians, shall be with “those that are the slain of my sword” namely, with the Moabites and Ammonites. Nebuchadnezzar, by whom these predictions were fulfilled, may be here called the Lord’s sword. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Ez. 30:4-9.)

V. 13-15. After Nineveh was taken by the kings of Babylon and Media, it went to decay, through the endeavours of the Chaldeans to aggrandize Babylon, until it was at length utterly desolated. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Is. 13:19-22. 34:9-17. Ez. 31:3-17. Mic. 5:5, 6. Nah. 1:7-13. 2: 3:)

Cedar-work. (14) “This reference to the former elegance of the city is finely introduced; and, in the next verse, the grand and affecting description of her desolate state is beautifully contrasted by her past festivity and pride. Preferable to rejoicing Nineveh was a proverb.” Bp. Newcombe. The word translated “bittern” is by some rendered porcupine.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The most alarming passages in the word of God are blended with others, which encourage sinners to repent and seek his favour: and though none are more hopeless than degenerate professors of true religion; yet they should be exhorted to judge themselves, that they may not be judged of the Lord.” (Note, 2 Tim. 2:24-26.)—Nations, under tokens of God’s displeasure, ought to gather together to deprecate his vengeance, before it is executed upon them: and while it is

14 And ^{the} flocks shall lie down in the midst of her, all the beasts of the nations: both the ^{cor}morant and the bittern shall lodge in the ^{upper} lintels of it; their voice shall sing in the windows; desolation shall be in the thresholds: ^{for} he shall uncover ^{the} cedar-work.

15 This ^{is} the rejoicing city that dwelt carelessly, that said in her heart, ^I am, and there is none besides me: how is she become a desolation, a place for beasts to lie down in! ^{every} one that passeth by her shall hiss, and wag his hand.

continued, sinners should be called upon to seek forgiveness, that the decree and sentence recorded in Scripture may not be awarded against them; (Matt. 25:41.) otherwise the fierce wrath of the Lord will then drive them as chaff into everlasting punishment. Yet none but the “meek of the earth,” the contrite “who tremble at God’s word,” will sincerely seek this salvation. These are “poor in spirit,” and will hearken to the Lord’s teaching, submit to his authority, plead guilty at his mercy-seat, do his will, and trust wholly to his mercy: these will “seek first his kingdom and his righteousness;” they will long and pray for more humility and meekness; they will be harmless and blameless; and the chief hope of deliverance from national judgments ought to be placed on their prayers and endeavours. If, however, they fail in this, they will be preserved or comforted under public calamities, and be safe “in the day of wrath and revelation of the righteous judgment of God.” But whilst the worshippers of God are punished for their hypocrisy, or corrected for their benefit, his open enemies have no cause to triumph. The whole word of the Lord is against them, and the sword of his justice shall certainly slay them. He hears their reproaches and revilings, when they calumniate his people, or rejoice over their faults, or speak evil of them for righteousness’ sake; or when they magnify themselves against them in their afflictions: and he will assuredly abase the pride of his enemies, and avenge the injuries done to his servants.—Carnal security, ambition, luxury, and sensual dissipated mirth, tend to dismay and desperation, whether in cities or individuals. Yet all the desolations of flourishing nations will make way for the subversion of Satan’s kingdom of idolatry, impiety, and iniquity: that all men may worship the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. As we, in these remote isles of the heathen, experience the truth of these predictions, and thus know their accomplishment in many respects, let us study to improve our advantages, expecting the performance of every promise, and praying that our Father’s name may be hallowed all over the earth.

NOTES.—CHAP. III. V. 1-4. The prophet having shown the judgments of God on the enemies of the Jews, returned to his subject, and proceeded to reprove and condemn that people for their transgressions. Jerusalem was become filthy and polluted; she was glutinous, luxurious, and infamous for all kinds of abominable wickedness, especially for oppression and violence. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. a.) The inhabitants refused to obey the voice of God, who spake to them by his word and his prophets: they hardened themselves in iniquity, or gave themselves up to rebellious murmurs and despondency when corrected: they trusted in their strength and allies, and not in the Lord, for protection and safety: and they drew not near to him, in his courts and ordinances, to seek his favour and assistance in their difficulties; but rather turned from him to their idols. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. b, c. Notes, Neh. 9:26-30. Jer. 7:21-28. Ez. 24:12, 13. Zech. 7:12, 13.) Their princes, nobles, and judges were ravenous as lions; or as wolves that prowl abroad in the evening, after having been pinched with hunger all the day: and they seized all they could to lay it by for the future, as the greedy wolf makes havoc of the flock, reserving the bones to be gnawed when he had no longer an opportunity of devouring the prey.—“They devour all presently, and leave not so much as the bones to the next day; as the most voracious creatures commonly do.” Louth.—Their prophets were superficial declaimers, men of light minds, without knowledge or seriousness: they deceived the people with false doctrines and predictions, and imposed upon them in their secular concerns: and the priests, like Hophni and Phinehas,

4 Her prophets are ^blight and treacherous persons: their priests have polluted the sanctuary, they have done violence to the law.

5 The just Lord is in the midst thereof; he will not do iniquity: every morning doth he bring his judgment to light, he faileth not; but the unjust knoweth no shame.

6 I have cut off the nations: their towers are desolate; I made their streets waste, that none passeth by: their cities are destroyed, so that there is no man, that there is none inhabitant.

7 I said, Surely thou wilt fear me, thou wilt receive instruction; so thy dwelling should not be cut off, howsoever I punished them: but they rose early, and corrupted all their doings.

polluted the temple by their crimes, and wrested the law by their corrupt glosses, that it might not seem to condemn them. (Marg. Ref. f-1. Notes, 1 Sam. 2:12-17, 22, Is. 1:21-24, p. 23, 9:13-17, 56:9-12, Jer. 5:26-31, 6:13-15, 14:13-16, 22:13-19, v. 17, 23:9-12, Ez. 13:5-16, 22:3-5, 24-28, Mic. 3:8-12, Matt. 7:13-15, 2 Cor. 11:13-15, 2 Pet. 2:1-4.)—This may be understood of the state of Jerusalem, from the death of Josiah to the Babylonian captivity; yet the context rather leads our attention to a subsequent period. The predictions of the former chapter relate to the return of the Jews from captivity, and to events connected with their prosperity after that deliverance; the latter part of this chapter evidently predicts the times of the Gospel; and the character here given of Jerusalem, aptly suits the state of things among the Jews, from the birth of Christ to the calamities brought upon them by the Romans.—Being filthy and polluted, they hearkened not to the voice of God, by John the Baptist, by Christ, and by his apostles; instructions and corrections were unavailing for their reformation; they trusted in themselves, and not in their incarnate Lord, to whom they would not draw near. And the chief priests, elders, scribes, and Pharisees, were precisely such blind guides, deceivers, oppressors, and perverters of the law, as are here described. (Notes, Matt. 23:13-33.)

V. 5-7. The special presence of "the just Lord" in Jerusalem, by his temple and ordinances, greatly aggravated the guilt of the inhabitants, while they presumptuously relied on it as their security. (Marg. Ref. k, l. Notes, 14:7, Dent. 32:4, Is. 48:12, Jer. 7:3-7, Mic. 3:8-12, v. 11, Acts. 6:9-14, v. 13, 14.) For he would "do no iniquity," and their crimes would neither receive countenance from his example, nor toleration from his justice. By the continual instructions of his word and prophets, he failed not to make known his judgments to them: yet they continued shameless in their iniquities. This is very applicable to the personal presence of Christ with the Jews, and his daily teaching in the temple, the synagogues, and the streets: neither his holy example, nor his doctrine, could make them ashamed of their crimes. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. m-o. Notes, Is. 28:17-19, 50:4, Jer. 32:3, 6:13-15, Mic. 7:8-10, Rom. 2:4-6, 1 Cor. 4:3-5.)

—The Lord had also given the Jews warning, as well as wrought deliverance for them by the desolations which he had made of other nations and their strong holds; not only those of distant countries, but also those of Ephraim and Samaria: expecting (to speak after the manner of men) that they would take the alarm and fear him and receive instruction; that it might not be necessary utterly to destroy Jerusalem, however they were punished with other and less severe visitations. But instead of repenting, they grew more and more bent on wickedness, and corrupted all their doings. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. p-t. Notes, Is. 63:7, 8, Jer. 7:3-7, 25:3-7, 36:1-3.)—Thus the Jews, in after ages, grew more and more corrupt, amidst all warnings and deliverances; they rose early to crucify Christ and to persecute his followers; and in this manner they filled up the measure of their iniquities. (Notes, Matt. 23:24-39, 1 Thes. 2:13-16.)

V. 8. "Therefore, since both the nations, and ye, are so unreligiously sinful, make account of a heavy day, wherein I will arise to execute my vengeance on you." Bp. Hall.—Notwithstanding these provocations, saith God, I for my determination is to gather the nations, that I may assemble the kingdoms, to pour upon them mine indignation, even all my fierce anger: for all the earth shall be devoured with the fire of my jealousy.

exhort the godly among you to expect the fulfilling of the promises I have made, of restoring the Jewish nation to my wonted favour, in the latter ages of the world; in order to which great crisis, I will execute remarkable judgments upon the unbelievers and disobedient. . . . This may perhaps be meant of the same general summons which Joel speaks of, when the nations shall be gathered into the valley of Josaphat. (Joel 3:2, 12.) Louth.—"My determination is to gather the nations that I may assemble the kingdoms, to pour upon them mine indignation, even all my fierce anger; when all the land shall have been devoured with the fire of my jealousy."—When a jealous God had inflicted vengeance on his apostate worshippers, and desolated the promised land, he would proceed to pour out his indignation on all the nations and kingdoms, which rejected him and his salvation. This accords with the general scope of prophecy.—The remnant, who waited for redemption in Israel, were exhorted, amidst the wickedness they witnessed, and the oppressions which they endured, to "wait for the Lord." He was about to rise up as a lion to devour his prey: he had determined to gather the nations, that by them he might pour his fierce anger on the wicked Jews; until the whole land should be consumed by the fire of his jealousy against that adulterous generation: and then he would punish those who, influenced by corrupt motives, had been the executioners of his vengeance on his professed worshippers.—This may be interpreted, either of the Chaldeans and their allies, the Romans and their tributaries, or the antichristian nations which have so long supported the cause of idolatry, superstition, and persecution. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Ez. 38:14-23, Joel 3:9-17, Mic. 4:11-13, Zech. 14:1-3, Rev. 16:12-16, 19:11-21, 20:1-6.)

V. 9, 10. These verses predict the purifying and enlarging of the church, by the preaching of the gospel about the time when vengeance would be executed on the Jewish nation. Then "the Lord would turn to the people," or "peoples," (the original is plural,) "a pure language," which may signify either the pure and purifying doctrine of the gospel; or the language, which the grace of the Lord would then teach them to use. He would bring men acquainted with the language of humility, repentance, faith, spiritual knowledge and wisdom, sincerity, purity, and love. He would teach them to speak of him and to him, as they ought to speak; in order that they might all call upon him, and serve him with harmony, and cordial unity of mind and mouth. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. a, b. Notes, 2:11, Gen. 11:6-9, Is. 19:18, Hab. 2:12-14, v. 14, Zech. 2:0-13, v. 11, 8:20-23, 14:6-9, Rom. 15:4-13, Eph. 4:1-6, 2:9.) For he would bring from the remote regions, beyond the rivers of Ethiopia, humble suppliants to his grace, who would be acknowledged as the children of his dispersed church, and who would offer to him spiritual sacrifices with acceptance. Doubtless this predicted the conversion of the Gentiles to Christ, as well as the happy effect of the gospel on the believing Jews; and the conversion of the Ethiopian eunuch, with the effects of his preaching in his own country, may be considered as one instance of its literal accomplishment. (Marg. Ref. c. Notes, Ps. 68:31-33, v. 31, 72:8-11, Is. 11:1-16, 18:1, 27:12, 13, Mal. 1:9-11, v. 11, Acts 8:26-40.) "Lest any should think that God's glory should have perished, when Judah was destroyed, he sheweth that he will publish his grace through

V. 8—20. The remnant of godly persons who live in evil times, may confidently "wait upon the LORD," both to save them, and to terminate the success of his enemies. He will certainly arise to pour upon the wicked the fierceness of his anger, and "the whole earth will be devoured by the fire of his jealousy;" yet he will then peculiarly bless those who wait for him. When he casts off professed Christians for their hypocrisy, he sends his gospel to those who have hitherto sat in darkness: and his grace will render his true people sincere in their profession, punctual to their engagements, upright in all their dealings, and holy in their conversation; teaching them a pure language, honourable to God and edifying to men. Persons of this character should all call upon and serve the Lord with one consent; as "he seeketh those to worship him, who worship him in spirit and truth." For this purpose his gospel is sent into regions divided from each other by mountains, rivers, and seas; and all who become humble suppliants to him for salvation, through faith in Jesus Christ, are numbered among the genuine children of his church, and form a holy priesthood to offer spiritual sacrifices unto him, wherever they are dispersed. They are also made partakers of true repentance and complete forgiveness, and none of them shall be put to shame, because of their former transgressions.—But the Lord will certainly cast out of his church all that "rejoice in their pride," and are haughty because of those privileges which they abuse and idolize. He will "exclude boasting," and leave no man any thing to glory in, save the Lord Jesus, "as made of God to him, Wisdom, Righteousness, Sanctification, and Redemption." (Note, 1 Cor. 1:26—31.) All whom he saves, are made poor in spirit, and most of them are poor and afflicted in the world: but whilst they trust in him, they cannot but be rich, noble, wise, and happy. Their deep humiliation for sin, and their obligations to the Redeemer, concur in forming them upright and sincere; a people that do no iniquity, speak no lies, neither is a deceitful tongue found in their mouths: though nothing is more common among many who profess, disgrace, and are proud of the doctrines of the gospel; as their shops, customers, and those who depend on their word can too often testify. But the sheep of Christ are harmless and inoffensive: they may securely rest upon his word and repose their soul under his care; and he will feed them in his plenteous pastures, and preserve them from the power and terror of every enemy. "Many," indeed "are the troubles of the righteous," from within and without: yet may they still rejoice in God, and triumph in his love. "The King of Israel in the midst of them" is the Lord of hosts: and he will soon take away their judgments, and save them so effectually that they shall see evil no more for ever. Let us then encourage each other, and ourselves, against dejection, that our hands may not be slack when we should work, or resist our enemies. The love of our mighty Redeemer is as large as his power: he rejoices to save the returning prodigal, to comfort the weeping penitent, to relieve the trembling suppliant, or to restore the wandering sheep: he delights in the objects of his choice, the purchase of his blood, the trophies of his victories, the work of his new creating grace. He rests well pleased in his love of his redeemed church: and exults with joy over every poor sinner whom he has taught to trust in his mercy, to love his name, to obey his commands, and to copy his example. Surely then our hearts should rejoice in him when we hear such words of in finite condescension and grace! We should express our joy by singing and speaking his praises; and we should "rest in his love," and seek no other Refuge, Portion, or Felicity. We may now indeed be sorrowful, because detained from his solemn ordinances, whether by sickness, persecution, or providential hindrances: but we should be glad that this is our trial and grief; and we may rejoice and exult at being reproached for loving the house and the word of our God. In due time we shall be gathered into the temple above, from all our dispersions, notwithstanding our weakness and haltings in the Lord's ways: and then he will turn our mourning into joy, and our reproach into honour, before the whole world. At length the last enemy shall be destroyed, and our captivity to Satan, sin, and death, shall be finally abolished; and our glory and felicity will be perfect, unchangeable, and eternal.

BOOK OF HAGGAI.

THE prophets whose writings have hitherto engaged our attention, lived before or during the Babylonish captivity, and referred to it in most of their predictions; but the three that follow prophesied after the return of the Jews to their own land. Haggai delivered all the messages here recorded, within four months. They relate to the building of the second temple, and contain 10 proofs, exhortations, and encouragements, respecting that undertaking; and also predictions of Christ and his kingdom connected with them, nay, of the final and universal prevalence of the gospel.—The apostle Paul quotes Haggai, to prove, that the prophets foretold one great revolution in the external state of the church, which would shortly take place, and only one. (Comp. 2:6, 7 with Heb. 12:26, 27.)

CHAPTER I.

The time when Haggai prophesied, 1. He reproves the delay of the Jews in building the temple; and exhorts them to proceed, 2—11. They obey, and receive encouragement from God, 12—15.

IN the second year of Darius the king, in the sixth month, in the first day of the month, came the word of the LORD by Haggai the prophet unto Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, governor of Judah, and to Joshua, the son of Josedech, the high-priest, saying,

2 Thus speaketh the LORD of hosts, saying, 'This people say, The time is not come, the time that the LORD's house should be built.

3 Then came the word of the LORD by Haggai the prophet, saying,

NOTES.—CHAP. I. V. 1. (Notes, Ezra 4:17—24, v. 24. 5:1, 2. 6:6—15.) The second year of Darius Hystaspis was about sixteen years after Cyrus issued his decree.—The repeated testimony of Zechariah shows, that these events occurred, not more than seventy years after the destruction of the temple by Nebuchadnezzar: (Zech. 1:12, 13. 7:3—5.) and as no Darius reigned in Persia, till long after that time, except Darius Hystaspis, it is beyond all doubt, that he was intended.—Shealtiel is exactly the same in the original, with Salathiel, (1 Chr. 3:17.) and Josedech, with Jehozadak. (1 Chr. 6:14, 15.) It would have been more convenient to the mere English reader, if the same persons had uniformly been called by the same names; where the original is the same, or so nearly the same, as to preclude all doubt of the meaning.—Jeshua (Ezra 2:2.) is spelt differently than Joshua in this verse: but the same person is evidently intended. (Marg. and Marg. Ref.)—If these two notable men had need to be stirred up and admonished of their duties; what shall we think of other governors, whose doings are either against God, or very cold in his cause?

V. 2. The Jews, discouraged by opposition, had left off to build the temple; and they concluded that it was not a proper time to resume that work, though they did not intend to give it up. They were then few in number, and poor, compared with the affluence of Israel in the days of Solomon; their enemies were many, and the kings of Persia frowned on them; they had many temporal concerns, personal and public, to attend on; and they concluded that they should not be able to build the temple at all, or not with suitable magnificence. They therefore thought it best to rest contented with an altar, on which to sacrifice, till a more favourable opportunity arrived. But "The LORD of hosts" (whose power was sufficient to support them against all opposition) disapproved these vain excuses, and therefore sent the prophet with the subsequent message.—'I hey preferred policy and private profit to religion.' (Marg. Ref. Notes, Num. 13:31. Neh. 4:10. Ec. 9:10.)

V. 4. While the Jews thought themselves unable to rebuild the temple, they were very active about their own houses; and many of them decorated them with wainscot and ceilings of cedar, or other valuable materials; and then lived in them, at ease and in indulgence. But if the times had been so bad, as to render it impracticable for them to build the temple, it would not have been in their power to acquire such

4 Is it time for you, O ye, to dwell in your ceiled houses, and this house lie waste?

5 Now, therefore, thus saith the LORD of hosts; Consider your ways.

6 Ye have sown much, and bring in little; ye eat, but ye have not enough; ye drink, but ye are not filled with drink; ye clothe you, but there is none warm; and he that earneth wages, earneth wages, to put it into a bag with holes.

7 Thus saith the LORD of hosts; Consider your ways.

8 Go up to the mountain, and bring wood, and build the house; and I will take pleasure in it, and I will be glorified, saith the LORD.

9 Ye looked for much, and lo, it came to little; and when ye brought it home, I did blow upon it. Why? saith the LORD of hosts. Because of my house that is waste, and ye run every man unto his own house.

10 Therefore, the heaven over you is stayed from dew, and the earth is stayed from her fruit.

11 And I called for a drought upon the land, and upon the mountains, and upon the corn, and upon the new wine, and upon the oil, and upon that which the ground bringeth forth, and upon men, and upon cattle, and upon all the labour of the hands.

12 Then Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, and Joshua the son of Josedech, the high-priest, with all the remnant of the people, obeyed the voice of the LORD their God, and the words of Haggai the prophet, as the LORD their God had sent him, and the people did fear before the LORD.

13 Then spake Haggai the LORD's messenger in the LORD's message unto the people, saying, I am with you, saith the LORD.

14 And the LORD stirred up the spirit of Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, governor of Judah, and the spirit of Joshua the son of Josedech, the high-priest, and the spirit of all the remnant of the people; and they came and did work in the house of the LORD of hosts, their God, houses for themselves. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 2 Sam. 7:1-3. Ps. 132-5. Matt. 6:33, 34.) Their excuses were therefore fallacious; and even Zerubbabel and Joshua were faulty in conniving at their negligence. (Note, Ezra 4:17-21.) The decree of Artaxerxes, or Smerdis the usurper, against the building of the temple, lost all its authority when he was slain; but that of Cyrus remained in full force. Had the Jews therefore been duly zealous and courageous, they would immediately have resumed the work, which had been violently interrupted.—It argues a great contempt of God and religion, when men think no cost or finery too much to bestow upon themselves, and the meanest accommodation good enough for the service of God: Louth.

V. 5-11. Consider the plagues of God upon you, for preferring your policies to his religion; and because ye seek not him first of all.—The Lord here called the people to consider their ways; that is, not only their conduct and motives by way of self-examination, but also the state of their affairs; by which they would perceive that their conduct was as impolitic as it was irreligious. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. i m. Notes, Ps. 119:57-63. vs. 59, 60. Ec. 7:13, 14. Ez. 18: 28. 1 Cor. 11:29-34. vs. 30-32.) They well knew, that their crops of corn had been very scanty, in proportion to the land tilled, or the seed sown. They had not a sufficiency of meat or drink, either through scarcity, or for want of a blessing; their clothes soon wore out, and did not defend them from the cold; and the hard-earned wages of the labourer, or mechanic, seemed to be put into a bag with holes; they were so soon gone, through dearness of provisions, and a variety of expenses. It was therefore expedient for them to review their conduct; and this would show them, that they should immediately (though to the neglect of their own concerns) go to Mount Lebanon, or other forests on the mountains, and prepare timber, and set about the building of the temple; and God would graciously take pleasure in it, as the centre of his worship, and the type of Christ, though far inferior in magnificence to Solomon's temple; yea, he would deem himself "glorified" by it. They must know, that when they had used all proper means, had every probability, and had entertained the most sanguine expectations, of a large increase, they were strangely disappointed; and even what they had brought home was unaccountably wasted, as if the Lord had "blown upon it," and driven it away! And wherefore was this? Truly, because they neglected the temple and left it in ruins, whilst they eagerly employed themselves in building and decorating their own houses; and therefore they were visited by drought and famine, and various diseases both of man and beast. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. k, l, n-x. Notes, 2:15-19. Deut. 28:23, 24. Is. 17:10, 11. Mal. 3:7-12.) The returned captives seem to have greatly prospered in their husbandry and other employments for some time; but when they began to neglect the temple, and to spend the gains on their own houses, and in their own indulgence; they were visited with drought and unfruitful seasons, and remarkable ill success in every thing. Let them consider what was the reason of this change.

Brought it home, &c. (9) 'The line may very well be translated: And ye have brought an offering to my house, and I have snuffed at it.' Bp. Newcombe.

V. 12. This message of God by his prophet had the proper effect. The rulers and people were faulty, but they were not hardened as their fathers had been; and, though they had not lately been accustomed to the ministry of prophets, and Haggai seems not to have wrought any miracle; they considered him as sent by the LORD their God, and reverence his authority. Zerubbabel and Joshua were most ready to receive this reproof, and attend to his exhortation, and the people were influenced by their example. They therefore "feared the LORD" and obeyed his voice, and immediately began to make preparation for the work. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Ezra 5:1-2. Prov. 25:11, 12. Mic. 2:6, 7.)

V. 13-15. Within little more than three weeks after Haggai's first message was delivered, the people having already testified their readiness to obey, he was sent again to them with a gracious assurance of the Lord's presence and favour. He was called the Lord's messenger, (the word being the same as is generally rendered an angel,) because of his employment, which was to bring messages from God to the people. His word was attended with a powerful blessing, in stirring up their minds and animating their courage for this arduous undertaking. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Ezra 1:1-5. 7:27, 28. 2 Cor. 8:16-24. vs. 16, 17. Phil. 2:12, 13.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Even pious persons often need to be excited, by repeated admonitions, to the duties of their station; especially when attended with danger and difficulty.—Many good works have been purposed, and not performed, because men imagined that the proper time was not come: thus believers lose opportunities of usefulness, and sinners procrastinate in the concerns of their souls till it be too late.—The Lord notices all the objections and excuses with which men satisfy themselves and each other, in the neglect of duty; and when he shall expose and answer them, "every mouth will be stopped." Providential dispensations are seldom interpreted properly, without a careful attention to the word of God: thus many conclude that poverty or trouble excuses them from duty, when indeed it is intended to rebuke their negligence.—Those who plead, that they cannot at present afford to contribute to pious or charitable designs, often lavish in needless expenses on their tables, houses, furniture, apparel, or decorations, ten times as much as was expected from them for far better purposes: and few are at all aware how large a fund frugality and self-denial might raise, even from persons of moderate incomes, for good works, without the least injury to them or their families. But if men will dwell in ceiled houses, and indulge every wayward inclination, when the house of God lies waste and his poor are starved, they may expect rebukes and corrections. How can they, who evidently do not "seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness," think themselves true Christians? And are not lukewarm professors of true religion marked in God's word with peculiar disapprobation? (Note, Rev. 3:14-16.) Indeed, those who do not prosper in the world ought to "consider their ways;" for "there is that withholdeth more than is meet, and it tendeth to poverty." If the Lord be offended by a man's selfishness, he can easily blast all his projects, and insensibly reduce him, whatever his occupation or industry may be. He can deprive him of all comfort in his possessions: and even if his income be not scanty, he can cause him to spend badly, and then all his gains shall seem to be vain

CHAPTER II.

The prophet encourages the Jews, by assuring them that this temple, though far inferior to the former in magnificence, would be rendered more glorious by the presence of the Messiah, 1-9. By the law concerning things holy and unclean, he shows that their sins had deprived them of God's blessings, which from that time he would vouchsafe them, 10-19. He predicts the prosperity of Christ's kingdom, under that of Zerubbabel, his ancestor and type, 20-25.

IN the seventh month, in the one and twentieth day of the month, came the word of the LORD by the prophet Haggai, saying,

2 Speak now to Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, governor of Judah, and to Joshua the son of Josedech, the high-priest, and to the residue of the people, saying,

3 Who is left among you that saw this house

"into a bag with holes;" all his labours be fruitless, all his possessions blown upon, and all his expectations frustrated. Our dependence is in every thing so entirely on God, that when "we look for much, and have little," and are remarkably crossed in our undertakings; it behooves us to inquire, wherefore he contends with us. And, if we attend to his word, consult his ministers, inquire of him in prayer, and examine ourselves, we shall not fail to find out the cause. Perhaps some duty is neglected, the payment of some vow is postponed, or some worldly object is idolized. When this discovery is made, we should without delay amend what has been amiss: and if we attend to those things which please the Lord, and wherein "he is glorified," whatever else be neglected or procrastinated, we shall best consult our own true interest and comfort: but without that faith and fear, which produce unreserved and prompt obedience, we cannot expect that the Lord will be with us.—The most exalted or sacred characters ought not to be offended, when reminded of their duty by the meanest servant of God; they should reverence his authority, and submit to his reproof, in the words of his ministers: and the more wisdom and piety they have, the more readily will they attend to such exhortations. When leading men set the example, it will influence the remnant of the people, and they may expect encouragement; and "if the Lord be with us," who can be against us, to prevent our success, or in any measure to hurt us? These considerations should stir up our spirits, to be diligent and courageous in laying ourselves out in the work assigned us: yet if any means prove successful to render us zealous in good works, we must give all the praise to him, from whom alone "cometh every good and perfect gift," and "who worketh in us to will and do of his good pleasure."

NOTES.—CHAP. II. V. 1, 2. Marg. and Marg. Ref. V. 3-5. These transactions took place about sixty-eight years from the time when the temple had been destroyed, and about seventeen years from the issuing of the decree of Cyrus, and above fifteen years after the foundations had first been laid. (Note, Ezra 3:12,13.) Yet some Jews still remained alive who had seen the former temple in their youth, before they were carried to Babylon. These could not but observe, from the preparations, the plan, and the progress of the work, that this new temple was likely to be much inferior to it in grandeur. Whilst they lamented this, they seem to have undervalued the labours of the people, and to have discouraged the work: and therefore the Lord sent his servant to prevent the effects. He allowed, that this house must appear as nothing, in the eyes of those who had seen the other in its glory: yet that should not prevent the rulers and people from proceeding with the vigour and courage of faith and hope; as God was with them to prosper their labours, according to the promises of the covenant made with their fathers; and "his Spirit," the Author of all true glory and excellency, "remained among them," to direct, sanctify, and bless them, as in the days of old: and therefore they needed not fear acceptance or assistance. (*Marg. Ref. Notes, Ez. 29:42-46. Num. 11:17,25,28,29. Josh. 1:7. 1 Chr. 22:11-13. 28:10. Neh. 9:20. Is. 48:16. 59:20,21. 63:11-14. Zech. 4:4-7. 8:3,9-15. v. 9. 1 Cor. 16:13,14. V. 6-9. For their further encouragement, the rulers, priests, and people were informed, that during the continuance of this temple, a most important change or revolution would take place, introducing a new and more glorious state of the church. "Yet once more," the Lord intended entirely to change the external form of his church, and to bring in that dispensation which should endure to the end.—"The word 'once,' has a clear sense, if understood of the evangelical age; for many political revolutions succeeded; . . . but only one great and final religious revolution." Bp. Newcombe. (Note, Heb. 12:26-29.)—This would be "in a little while," compared with the years that had passed since the first promise of the Messiah, or even from the giving of the law. Then the Lord would "shake the heavens and the earth" various convulsions and changes would take place in the Jewish church and state, which would end in the abrogation of the ritual law and the whole Mosaic dispensation, the disannulling of the national covenant, the destruction of Jerusalem, and the ruin of their civil government; attended with earthquakes, tempests, and violent commotions of the elements, above and beneath, by sea and by land. (Marg. Ref. k-n. Notes, 20-23. Jer. 4:19-27. Ez. 17:22-24. Joel 2:28-32. Matt. 24:29-31. Luke 21:25-28. Acts 2:14-21, vv. 16-20.) These events would be preceded by great revolutions and commotions among the nations; the Persian monarchy would be subverted by the Macedonians, and that by the Romans; and all these changes would make way for the coming of Christ and the introduction of his spiritual kingdom. At the appointed time, He, "the Desire of all nations," whom all nations ought to desire, and in due time would desire; He, in whom "all the nations of the earth were to be blessed," and of whose coming a general expectation would prevail, as of some most desirable event; He would come, and his presence, who is "the Glory of the LORD" and the true Temple, "in whom all the fulness of the Godhead dwells bodily," would fill that house with glory, and render it far more glorious, than the Shechinah (or visible glory) rendered Solomon's temple. (Marg. Ref. o, p. Notes, Gen. 3:14,15. 12:3-3, v. 3. Ez. 40:34,35. 1 Kings 8:10-14. Mal. 3:1-4, v. 1. Matt. 12:5,6. Luke 2:25-32, vv. 30-32. John 2:13-22. Rev. 21:22-27, v. 22.)

The Lord could, if he so pleased, enrich that house with silver and gold beyond the former temple; for all the treasures of the earth are his; but, as a more spiritual dispensation was about to be introduced, he had a greater and a more spiritual glory to confer upon it, in the presence of Immanuel his incarnate Son. (Note, Ez. 41:22.) Thither he would come, as "the Prince of peace;" there he would preach and confer peace: and in the mean time God would give peace to those who worshipped there, in anticipation of the blessings of Messiah's reign. (Marg. Ref. s.)—The second temple could not excel the first in glory, in any other respect than this: it was indeed considerably beautified, decorated, and enriched in after ages; but nothing equal to the splendour of the temple in the days of Solomon: and the Jews themselves allow, that the ark of the covenant, the visible glory, and some other things which distinguished the former temple, were wanting in this. But they cannot find any thing that is worthy to be mentioned, in which it was more glorious; though they have been excited to rack their invention to the utmost for that purpose. For as the second temple has been destroyed above seventeen hundred years; if nothing else can be adduced, in which its glory exceeded that of Solomon's temple, it must be allowed that the presence of the promised Messiah was intended; and if this be yielded, it will undeniably follow that "Jesus of Nazareth" was he; and thus they must condemn their own obstinate rejection of him, concerning whom all their own prophets spoke. For in this alone did the glory of the latter house exceed that of the former, that the "Desire of all nations," the Lord of glory came to it, personally and in human nature. So that this prophecy alone is sufficient to decide the controversy with them, seeing they allow the divine inspiration of Haggai. (Notes, Dan. 9:24-27.)—Some indeed speak, as if Herod the great entirely pulled down this temple, and builded another; but what Josephus records on that subject is not consistent with itself, and with other writers, and seems rather penned in the style of panegyric than of history: and, however Herod repaired, beautified, and enlarged the out-buildings of the temple, it never was the general opinion of the Jews themselves, that he demolished the second temple; but that it continued the same, till its destruction by the Romans. With that event the old dispensation ended; "for the Desire of all nations was come," and he erected his spiritual temple, as it were, upon the ruins of it.—The word rendered "come" (7) is plural, and it is with probability supposed, that the substantive should be plural also. "The desires of all the nations shall come." Some learned men, therefore, have argued, that the precious or desirable things, namely, the riches of the nations are meant: and that it is a forced construction to interpret the passage of the Messiah. —The objections to this interpretation are, the great solemnity of the introduction; (6,7.) and the impropriety of the 10 ¶ In ^athe four and twentieth day of the ninth month, in the second year of Darius, came the word of the LORD by Haggai the prophet, saying,

11 Thus saith the LORD of hosts; ^aAsk now the priests concerning the law, saying,

12 If ^aone bear holy flesh in the skirt of his garment, and with his skirt do touch bread, or pottage, or wine, or oil, or any meat, shall it be holy? and the priests answered and said, No.

13 Then said Haggai, ^aIf one that is unclean by a dead body touch any of these, shall it be unclean? And the priests answered and said, It shall be unclean.

14 Then answered Haggai, and said, ^aSo is this people, and so is this nation before me, saith the LORD; and so is every work of their hands; ^aand that which they offer there is unclean.

15 And now, I pray you, ^aconsider from this day and upward, ^afrom before a stone was laid upon a stone in the temple of the LORD:

16 Since those days were, ^awhen one came to a heap of twenty measures, there were but ten: when one came to the press-fat for to draw out fifty vessels out of the press, there were but twenty.

17 I smote you ^awith blasting and with mildew ^aand with hail ^ain all the labours of your hands; ^ayet ye turned not to me, saith the LORD.

18 Consider now from this day and upward, from the four and twentieth day of the ninth month, ^aeven from the day that the foundation of the LORD's temple was laid, consider it.

19 Is the seed yet in the barn? yea, as yet the vine, and the fig-tree, and the pomegranate, and the olive-tree, hath not brought forth: ^afrom this day will I bless you.

language, "The desirable things of all nations shall come," when it should rather be said, "the desirable things of all nations shall be brought." The word is used plurally, with the force of the singular, (like deliciae, or spes, in Latin,) Dan. 9:23. vis desideriorum, "greatly beloved." Cant. 5:16. we have... ipse totus desideria, for desiderabilis. ("He is altogether lovely.") It may well be doubted, whether the second temple could exceed that of Solomon, in the splendour and costliness of its ornaments. ... Pridcaux values the gold with which the holy of holies alone was overlaid, at four millions, three hundred and twenty thousand pounds sterling. ... It seems to me, that, supposing the Messiah to be prophesied of, greater precision in the language would not have been used: for this would have led the Jews to expect a demolition of the temple then building, and the erection of another in its stead. ... No nominal distinction, between Zerubbabel's and Herod's temple, seems to have been ever made by the Jews: but in popular language these structures, though really different, were spoken of as the same. On one occasion, Josephus himself mentions only two buildings of the temple; a former, in the time of Solomon; and a latter, in that of Cyrus.—In Chronicon Hebraicum, &c. Vespasian is said to have destroyed the temple, four hundred and forty years after it was rebuilt." Bp. Newcombe.—No more than seven years were spent in building Solomon's temple, and only four in building the second temple, from the time when the Jews resumed the work. It is indeed most evident, that Herod never pulled down the temple, in order to erect a new one. There was a temple, for the worship of JEHOVAH according to the law, during all the forty-six years, which was spent in repairing or rebuilding it.—One part must therefore have been taken down at once, as far as needful for the purpose, and no more: but the old foundation, and the most essential parts of the structure, no doubt remained.—Whoever compares the sixth chapter of the first of Kings, even with the most splendid accounts of the second temple, however adorned with costly stones, and other magnificent decorations: must perceive, that the former being overlaid in every part with pure gold, gave it a glory, of this kind, which was incomparably beyond that of the second temple, in its highest magnificence: and the prophecy clearly means, that the glory of the second temple should exceed the glory which the first had at any time been favoured with.—Nothing but the presence of the incarnate Son of God could fulfil this prediction.

V. 10-14. The time which had elapsed from Haggai's first message to this, being nearly four months, seems to have been taken up by the Jews in preparing to build: but now they proceeded to the work itself. The prophet was on this occasion ordered to propose two questions to the priests, the ordinary interpreters of the law. (Marg. Ref. u. Notes, Lev. 10:8-11. Ez. 44:23,24. Mal. 2:4-9, v. 7.) Supposing a man should carry, in the skirt of his garment, any part of the holy oblations, (which were to be eaten by the priests alone, in the courts of the temple,) and then with that same skirt should touch some ordinary provision, would that communicate sanctity to the bread, flesh, wine, or oil thus touched? This the priests answered in the negative; ceremonial holiness could not be thus conveyed. On the other hand, if a man, who was unclean by a dead body, touched such provisions, would not that render them unclean, unfit to be offered to God, or even for common use? To which they answered in the affirmative. It was then evident, that uncleanness was more easily communicated than holiness: and the inference was, that the people when they lived in the neglect of their duty, as to the building of the temple, through a covetous or self-indulgent attention to secular concerns, could not have their ordinary employments sanctified by the sacrifices which they offered; but on the contrary they polluted their religious services, by their own unbelief and hypocrisy, or selfish neglect of their duty in this particular.—"That thing, which is of itself good, cannot make another thing so; and therefore they ought not to justify themselves by their sacrifices and ceremonies: but contrary he that is unclean and not pure of heart, doth corrupt those things, and make them detestable to God, which else are good and godly." (Marg. Ref. x-a. Notes, 1:4-11. Lev. 6:25-29. Num. 9:6-8. 19:11,21. Prov. 15:8,9. 21:4,27. Is. 1:10-15. Ez. 44:17-20, v. 19. Tit. 1:14-16.)

V. 15-19. The people were therefore called on, to consider "from that day," both what had befallen them, and what was about to befall them; and to compare these together. Before they had begun to place more courses of stone, on the foundation which they had laid several years before, (that is, during the years the work had been neglected,) they had been strangely frustrated in their expectations. If a man came to a heap of corn, in the straw, or in the chaff, which he computed at twenty measures, he seldom obtained more than ten: for there proved to be much straw and chaff, and little corn. Or if a man expected fifty barrels of wine from the grapes which he carried to the winepress; when he came to draw it off after they had been pressed, there proved no more than twenty, they were so unproductive. For the Lord had been so offended with their carnal and selfish negligence of his temple, that he disappointed them in all their works; and visited them with various calamities, which they ascribed to second causes, and so did not repent or return to his service. (Marg. Ref. b-h. Notes, 1:5-11. Ezra 5:1,2. Ps. 107:33-43, v. 34. Joel 1:4,17,18. Am. 4:6-10. Zech. 8:9-15. Mal. 2:1-3, v. 2.) But let them take notice, that from that very day, when they began to build on the foundation of his house, though their corn was not gathered in, nor had their trees begun to bud, (for it was nearly the depth of winter,) and there was no appearance of a favourable change; yet from that day he would as remarkably bless them, with fruitful seasons and abundant increase; both graciously to recompense their obedience, and to encourage them to proceed. (Marg. Ref. i-l. Notes, 1:13-15. Prov. 3:9,10. Mal. 3:7-12. Matt. 6:33,34, v. 33. 2 Cor. 9:8-11.)

V. 20-23. "And the word of the LORD came the second time unto Haggai, in, &c." The conclusion of the book was a second message, sent by the prophet, on the same day with that which precedes.—Zerubbabel, as the governor of Judah, was the type as well as the progenitor of Christ; to whom doubtless the prophecy was principally directed. The Lord again declared his purpose of causing violent concussions and revolutions in the heavens and earth, or in the state of the church and of the world. He would subvert monarchies one after another, and destroy nations by intestine wars. (See on Note, 6-9, v. 6. Notes, Dan. 2:34,35,44,45. Rev. 1:15-18.) But he would take Zerub-babel, and keep him safe as his signet; and employ him to rule over his people; as a man ratifies deeds by his signet or seal, and sets it on any thing as a security, or to mark authenticity or appropriation: for he had chosen him for that purpose. (Notes, Cant. 8:6, 7. Jer. 22:24—27. Job. 6:22—27, v. 27. 2 Tim. 2:19.) This was a gracious intimation, that the Lord would preserve Zerubbabel, and the people of Judah by him, amidst the machinations of their enemies and the ruin of surrounding states and kingdoms. But it also predicted the establishment and continuance of the kingdom of Christ, the elect Servant of the Father, the Governor of Judah: by union with whom his people are sealed with the Holy Ghost, and stamped with his image, and thus distinguished from all other persons, and preserved unto the day of redemption. (Notes, 2 Cor. 1:21, 22. Eph. 1:13, 14. 4:30—32, v. 30.) And it predicted the changes, that would take place in the church, and in the kingdoms of the world, even to that time, when the kingdom of Christ shall subvert and occupy the place of all those monarchies which have opposed his cause.—^a This could not be fulfilled in Zerubbabel, who did not in all likelihood live many years after the finishing of the temple; and to be sure, did not see any of these great changes here foretold: and therefore the Messias must be here described under the name of Zerubbabel, as he elsewhere is under that of David. Louth. PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—9. The word of God is intended to encourage us, as well as to excite us to our duty.—Those who have witnessed or read of, extraordinary effects produced by the power of God in his ordinances, should not despise or dishearten those, who are endeavouring to do good in a little way, with small success, and under great disadvantages. Though it may appear "as nothing in their eyes," yet the seed may spring up and become a great tree; and every degree of good to souls should be thought important. (Zech. 4:10.) Indeed men are very incompetent judges of what is glorious, in religious matters: many things excite admiration because they are noisy and ostentatious; whereas "the kingdom of God cometh not with observation." Abiding and blessed effects are sometimes produced by obscure and despised instruments, and for a time in silence and neglect: till at length they burst forth to public view, and claim attention as excellent, useful, and permanent; when such as for a little time excited admiration and applause, but were more superficial, vanish or terminate in confusion. If we be therefore occupied, according to the command of God, and in dependence on his promise, we should "be strong" in faith, vigorous, and active, labouring in hope, even in obscurity and with little visible success; for though man may despise us, "the Lord of Hosts will be with us," according to his covenanted word, "Lo I am with you always, even to the end of the world;" and his Spirit who abides with his people for ever, will not refuse us a measure of success and comfort in our work: therefore we should not fear. That power, which shakes the heavens and the earth the sea, and the dry land; and which effected such wonderful changes and revolutions among the Jews and Gentiles, in the first ages of the gospel; can easily prepare men's hearts in any congregation, or of any description, to welcome Christ, as the Desire of their hearts and precious to their souls. He whose are all the riches of the earth and all their possessors, can defray the expense of any undertaking, which is really for his glory; so that we may depend on him for whatever we want: and if his ministers be poor, or the places appropri-horses and their riders shall come down, every one by the sword of his brother.

23 In that day, saith the Lord of hosts, will I take thee, O Zerubbabel, my servant, the son of Shealtiel, saith the Lord, and will make thee as a signet; for I have chosen thee, saith the Lord of hosts.

ated to his worship mean, or any apparently good design fail of adequate resources; we may be sure that he sees it best for his servants, and most for his own glory, that it should be so. They however, who are stewards of his gold and silver, should remember that he will demand an account of the use which they make of them; and when they contribute most liberally to pious or charitable designs, they should observe, that they only render to the Lord a portion of his own, and that he has a right to demand the whole when ever he pleases.—But the glory of the gospel-church is greater than that of either the former or the latter temple: for "behold a greater than Solomon is here!" The "Desire of all nations," is the precious Foundation and approved Cornerstone of this spiritual temple: believers are the living stones of which it is formed; and it is the constant habitation of God by his Holy Spirit, and shall be for evermore. (Note, Eph. 2:19—22.) Here are contained the whole spiritual beauty and glory of the earth: hereafter being removed to heaven, these will be the joy and admiration of angels and archangels to all eternity. May then revolutions and reformations, in churches and kingdoms, make way for Christ to be desired and valued by all nations; may he abundantly fill his habitation with the glory of his holiness, peace, and consolation; and may the poor blinded Jews have their eyes open to behold the preciousness of him, whom they have hitherto rejected, and who indeed is "a Light to lighten the Gentiles, and the Glory of his people Israel!"

V. 10—23. "Holiness becometh" the temple of God and his spiritual priesthood: and those who are appointed to interpret his word, ought to be ready and expert in solving cases respecting it. The merest novice, however, in spiritual things must know, that "evil communications corrupt good manners;" and yet the company of saints has no natural efficacy to sanctify: for diseases are often infectious, but health cannot be imparted in the same way. Pollution, being congenial to our nature, is more easily communicated than holiness: how dangerous then is it for those, who profess godliness, to form intimate connexions with unbelievers, vainly hoping to impart good, when they have immensely more cause to fear the most important injury to themselves! (Note, 2 Cor. 6:14—18.)—We should also learn not to depend on external services, which are all rendered unclean by an unbelieving, carnal, and hypocritical heart. While we live in known sin or neglect of known duty, we cannot reasonably expect benefit from ordinances, or comfortable success in our temporal concerns; but when we are uprightly obedient, the Lord graciously accepts our imperfect and defiled services.—Were we carefully to consider the different parts of our lives, and compare them with each other; we should most of us perceive an evident difference between those, in which we have been totally irreligious or greatly negligent, and those, in which we have endeavoured "first to seek the kingdom of God and his righteousness:" and that the former have been far more full of anxiety and disappointment, the latter of success and comfort, even in outward things. But if it have not been remarkably so with us; yet the Lord will curse the blessings of the wicked, and imbitter the prosperity of the negligent: and he will sweeten the cup of affliction to those, who humbly and diligently serve him. And, whatever changes take place on earth, all will concur in promoting the comfort, honour, and happiness of his servants, who devote themselves unreservedly to him: even as they will tend to establish the kingdom of Christ, the chosen Signet of the Father, by whom all believers are preserved and sealed unto life eternal.

THE BOOK OF ZECHARIAH.

ZECHARIAH began to prophesy two months after Haggai; being raised up to be his coadjutor, in exciting the Jews to rebuild the temple: but it is probable, that he continued to exercise his prophetic office during a much longer time; though the visions and predictions, in the latter part of the book, are not dated. Various traditions are extant concerning him: but in general they are improbable, or uncertain and frivolous; so that no more is known of him, than what is recorded in Scripture, and may be seen by consulting the marginal references on some of the verses in which his name is mentioned. His prophetic character and usefulness is recorded by Ezra: (Ezra 5:1, 2. 6:14.) and his book is repeatedly quoted and referred to, and thus sanctioned as the word of God, in the New Testament. (Compare 9:9. with Matt. 21:4, 5. John 12:14—16.—11:12, 13, with Matt. 27:7—10.—12:10, with John 19:34—37. Rev. 1:7.—13:7. with Matt. 26:31. Mark 14:27.) The numerous and extraordinary prophecies, however, which it contains, sufficiently demonstrate that the prophet "spoke as he was moved by the Holy Ghost." Many of these have been undeniably and most wonderfully accomplished: and the rest, though considered as peculiarly obscure, on careful investigation will be found to foretell, sometimes under other emblems and metaphors, the same future events with the most remarkable predictions, both in the Old and New Testaments.

Zechariah has been styled, 'the sun among the minor prophets'; and the time approaches, when the propriety of this title will no doubt be fully illustrated.—After general warnings, and exhortations to repentance, the prophet foretells the completion of the temple; the rebuilding, replenishing, security, and prosperity of Jerusalem, and the cities of Judah; and the judgments of God on the enemies of his people: but, in doing this, under the types of Zerubbabel and Joshua, and by using figurative language, he predicts the coming of Christ, our King and High-Priest, the establishment of his kingdom, the building of his spiritual temple, the conversion of the Gentiles, and the enlargement and prosperity of the Christian church. (1:—4: 6.) By the visions of a flying roll and an ephah, he shows the judgments which would come on the wicked Jews, and the abject and oppressed state of the nation, after they had filled up the measure of their sins. (5:) Then follow prophecies (interspersed with warnings and exhortations,) of prosperity and enlargement to Jerusalem; till at length, the strong nations of all languages would become the worshippers of JEHOVAH, and join themselves to his people. (7: 8:) The intermediate events to the surrounding nations, and to the Jews, from the completion of the temple till the coming of Christ, are next foretold, with figurative intimations of the prevalence of his gospel, by the triumphs of his apostles and servants. (9: 10:) To these are subjoined, the destruction of the temple, and the rejection of the nation for contempt of Christ, and other sins; and afterwards of the nations that oppressed Jerusalem and the church. At length a bright scene is opened to our view, by prophecies of the conversion of the nation to their crucified Messiah; the humility, zeal, and excellence of the new converts; and the final ruin of all idolatry and false religion. (11: 12: 13:—3.) And finally, the inspired writer returns to speak more explicitly of the death of Christ, as our Sacrifice, by the sword of divine justice; the tremendous judgments which would then be inflicted on the unbelieving Jews; the preservation of a remnant through fiery trials, and their conversion, the taking and destruction of Jerusalem, to be followed by the ruin of the nations who had fought against her; the removing of the succeeding ages, to the restoration of the Jews, and the rebuilding of their city, and the arrival of the Millennium, when all the nations will either be terribly destroyed, or become joyful worshippers of God; and during which the cause of holiness shall decidedly and finally prevail.—(13:7—9. 14:—) This is the general outline of the book, according to the author's view and interpretation of it, which is here given to assist the reader, in forming his judgment on the exposition of particular prophecies; in several of which he has been reluctantly compelled to differ from some learned and eminent expositors.

NOTES.—CHAP. I. V. 1. Marg. Ref. a, b.—Berechiah. (Note, Matt. 23:34—36.) It is the general opinion of expositors, that our Lord in the passage referred to, means Zechariah, the son of Jehoiada. (Note, 2 Chr. 24:19—22.) Yet some reasons may be alleged, which at least render it probable, that the prophet Zechariah was intended. For why should "the son of Jehoiada" be called, "the son of Barachias?" Chrysostom indeed asserts that Jehoiada was also called Barachiah, which signifies one that blesses the LORD, as Jehoiada does one that confesses him; but there is not the smallest proof in Scripture, that he was ever so called; and if the son of Jehoiada be meant, an alteration of the text in Matthew must be admitted, which is not advisable, unless absolutely unavoidable. Zechariah was a young man, when he began to prophesy; (24:) he might live long after the temple was finished, and after the death of Zerubbabel and Joshua.—Zechariah, of Iddo, is mentioned among the priests, in the days of Joiakim, the son of Joshua; (Neh. 12:4, 16.) and tradition reports, that Zechariah was of the sacerdotal line. It is not peculiarly improbable, that the Jews, exasperated by his faithful expostulations, should murder him in the inner court of the temple: and the canon of Scriptures, being previously closed, could not record it, any more than the martyrdom of those who suffered under Antiochus Epiphanes. The silence of Josephus proves nothing; as he uniformly, when he can, passes over, or palliates, whatever he thinks dishonourable to his people. The transaction, might, however, be well known in our Lord's time, by tradition or authentic history. But especially let it be considered, how far it might have been previously expected, that the murder of one, who suffered before the persecuting reigns of Ahab, Manasseh, and Jehoiakim, (during which more innocent blood was shed, and more prophets were slaughtered, than in all preceding ages,) should be mentioned as the last of the righteous persons, whose blood would be required of the generation which crucified the Messiah.—The blood shed after the death of Zechariah, son of Jehoiada, especially filled up the measure of national wickedness, and brought on Judah the Babylonish captivity: yet on this supposition it is wholly passed over by our Lord. But if Zechariah the prophet were meant, and if he were murdered after the captivity, as the other Zechariah had been before; the whole appears natural, and probably he might be the last eminent person who thus suffered by the hand of the Jews.

[Practical Observations.]

B. C. 7 ¶ Upon the four and twentieth day of the eleventh month, which is the month Sebat, in the second year of Darius, came the word of the Lord unto Zechariah, the son of Barachiah the son of Iddo the prophet, saying,

8 I saw by night, and behold a Man riding upon a red horse, and he stood among the myrtle-trees that were in the bottom; and behind him were there red horses, speckled, and white.

9 Then said I, O my Lord, what are these? And the Angel that talked with me, said unto me, I will show thee what these be.

10 And the Man that stood among the myrtle-trees answered and said, These are they whom the Lord hath sent to walk to and fro through the earth.

11 And they answered the Angel of the Lord that stood among the myrtle-trees, and said, We have walked to and fro through the earth, and behold, all the earth sitteth still, and is at rest.

V. 7. Sebat is the Chaldee or Syriac name of the eleventh month, which contained part of our January and part of February. Tables.

V. 8-11. The prophets saw in a vision, by night, (as denoting perhaps the afflicted state of the Jews at that time,) "a Man," one in human form, even the Son of God who afterwards became Man for our salvation; and he sat like a warrior upon a red horse, as about to execute vengeance on the enemies of his people. He was stationed "in the bottom," or in a low valley (denoting both the humility and low estate of the church) "among myrtle-trees," an apt emblem of true believers; (Note. Is. 55:12, 13.) and behind him were other horses with riders upon them. These seem to have been emblematic of holy angels, as ministers of Providence under Christ, who waited on him, being ready to execute his commands; and the diverse colours of their horses may denote the different dispensations of wrath or mercy, or both blended together, which they superintended. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. u, x. Notes. 6:1-8. Rev. 6:1-8. 13:11-16.) When the prophet saw these things, he inquired of One, who communicated with him, what they meant. He is called "the Angel;" it is however evident, that he seems to have been the same, before and afterwards called "the Man;" for "the Man, who stood among the myrtle-trees, answered and said" that these were they, whom JEHOVAH had commissioned to go throughout the earth, and to examine the state of it. (Marg. Ref. b-d. Notes. 6:1-8. u, v. 5:7. Job 1:7. 1 Pet. 5:8, 9.) And immediately, the other angel, as having returned from executing this commission, showed this Angel, that all the earth was still and at rest. So that the person called the Man, (8, 10) is also spoken of as "the Angel of the Lord." (Marg. Ref. z, a, c. Notes. 3:7-7. Gen. 16:7-11. 22:16-18. 32:24-30. 48:16. Ez. 32:6, 14. 23:20-23. Even the Chaldeans at that time lived quietly under him, and other nations were remarkably at rest, whilst the church was in great affliction and abasement.—Having given this answer, they seem to have waited for another commission. "The Man, or Angel, (11) . . . denotes the Logos, or Son of God, appearing as the Captain of God's hosts or armies. (Josh. 5:13, 14.) . . . They answer this Man, (8) or Angel, as if he were their Superior or Commander." Louth.—I had a vision by night; Christ, the Angel of the covenant, represented himself to me, as a Man riding on a red horse; . . . and behind him were several 12 ¶ Then the Angel of the Lord answered and said, O Lord of hosts, show how wilt thou not have mercy on Jerusalem and on the cities of Judah, against which thou hast had indignation these threescore and ten years?

13 And the Lord answered the Angel that talked with me, with good words and comfortable words.

14 So the Angel that communed with me, said unto me, Cry thou, saying, Thus saith the Lord of hosts; I am jealous for Jerusalem and for Zion, with a great jealousy.

15 And I am very sore displeased with the heathen that are at ease: for I was but a little displeased, and they helped forward the affliction.

16 Therefore, thus saith the Lord; I am returned to Jerusalem with mercies: my house shall be built in it, saith the Lord of hosts, and a line shall be stretched forth upon Jerusalem.

17 Cry yet, saying, Thus saith the Lord of hosts; My cities through prosperity shall yet be spread abroad; and the Lord shall yet comfort Zion, and shall yet choose Jerusalem.

V. 12, 13. "Christ, the Mediator, prayed for the salvation of his church, which was now troubled, when all the countries about were at rest, . . . Then Christ the Mediator of his church, answered and said, &c." Bp. Hall. (Note. 8-11.) The person, called "a Man" and "the Angel," was indeed the great Advocate and Intercessor of the church; and was introduced as pleading with the Father in behalf of Jerusalem and Judah, which had lain under his indignation for seventy years. (Marg. Ref. g. Notes. Ps. 74:9-11. 79:1-5. 102:13-22. Is. 64:9-12.) This period, as it was dated from the first captivity in the fourth year of Jehoiakim, expired when Cyrus first issued his edict; but it was almost seventy years at this time from the final destruction of the city and temple; and just seventy years from the time when Nebuchadnezzar laid siege to Jerusalem. (Marg. Ref. h.)—The Lord answered with good and comfortable words, such as were gracious and encouraging to the prophet; assuring the Angel that his intercession was accepted, and mercy would be shown to his people. (Marg. Ref. i. Notes. 14-16. Is. 40:1-2. Jer. 31:14-16. Am. 9:11-15. Zeph. 3:14-20.)

V. 14-17. The Angel, who condescended to commune with the prophet, next commissioned him to proclaim good tidings to his people; and to assure them that the Lord of all the armies in heaven and earth, was "jealous with great jealousy," or zealous, for Jerusalem, as he had been against her. His love and endeared relation to his people would not permit him to overlook the injuries done her. He was greatly displeased with the Chaldeans and others, who had reduced the Jews to deep and permanent distress: for he had been displeased a little with his people, and they had heaped forward the affliction. The Jews had indeed deserved the heaviest indignation of God; nor could their enemies proceed farther than he intended; but they acted out of ambition, malice, and enmity against them; they took pleasure in their disgrace and misery; they used their power with cruelty and tyranny; and they intended to keep them perpetually in a state of abject bondage and captivity, and persisted in injuring them after the seventy years of their captivity. Therefore the Lord was highly displeased with them.—God was displeased with the instruments of his vengeance, for their extreme cruelty to the Jews; and with the nations, who insulted over them in their distress." Bp. Newcombe. (Marg. Ref. m-n. Notes. 8-11. 8:2. Ps. 137:7-9. Is. 10:5-7. 47:6-10. 54:6-10. Jer. 51:34-37. Lam. 4:21, 22. Ez. 25:3-7, 12. Am. 1:3-15. Ob. 10-16.)—At the same time, the "cvs must be assured, that the Lord was actually reconciled to them and was returned to dwell among them, with abundance of mercy: the temple would certainly be rebuilt; and the line stretched forth over every part of the city, to mark out the streets of it for building, that it might be restored to its ancient dimensions and prosperity. Nay, the prophet was farther to proclaim, that through the prosperity, or good, (marg.) intended them, the other parts of the land would be replenished with cities: for the Lord would comfort the inhabitants of Zion, and make effectual his choice of Jerusalem, as the centre of his worship, and the place of his peculiar and gracious residence. (*Marg. Ref. q-t. Notes, 2:1-5, 10-13. 4:8-10. 8:3-5. Ezra 6:13-15. Neh. 11:7-9. Is. 44:25-28. V. 18-21. The prophet had, immediately after, a vision of "four horns," which the angel, answering his inquiries, showed to represent those powers, that had scattered the Jews and desolated the city and land. And then "JEHOVAH," evidently the same with whom he communed, "showed him four carpenters," or smiths, (workmen), who came to "fray," or terrify, drive away, or demolish "these horns of the Gentiles."—Some by the horns understand the four great monarchies, which had scattered or would scatter the church: and then the carpenters or workmen may mean in part the same powers. The Persians cast out the Chaldeans; the Macedonians, the Persians; and the Romans, the Macedonians; and the Goths and other northern nations cast down the power of the Romans. Others understand by the four horns, the several kings of Assyria, Chaldea, and Persia, who had successively crushed Israel and Judah; and then they suppose Zerubbabel, Joshua, Ezra, and Nehemiah, to be the four carpenters. But perhaps the vision only meant in general, that enemies from the four winds had arisen, or would arise, against the Jews and the church; but that able instruments would be raised up to defeat their attempts, to deliver the people of God, and so make his cause to prevail and prosper. And this may take in both the ministers of his word and those of his Providence. Some interpret the four horns to mean the Samaritans, Ammonites, Arabians, and Philistines, who harassed the Jews, that had returned from Babylon: but these nations had never "scattered Israel and Judah."—"Why four? To denote that these kingdoms had many enemies; enemies on every side." Bp. Newcombe.—"These signified all the enemies of the church, east, west, north, south. The carpenters, or smiths, are God's instruments, which with their mallets and hammers break these hard and strong horns; . . . and declare that no enemies' horn is so strong, but God hath a hammer to break it in pieces."—Carpenters. (20) "Or smiths. . . . These were to repair the destructions, which the horns had made." Lowth. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 9:13-16. 10:4. 12:6-8. Dan. 7:4-8. 8:3-7. Mic. 5:5-9.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-6. It conduces greatly to the conviction of the hearers, when several of the Lord's ministers testify the same truths: and those who profit by the means afforded them, shall have them continued and increased.—Humiliation for sin must precede the comfort of forgiveness: and therefore "the ministration of condemnation" should make way for "the ministration of righteousness, and of the Spirit." (Note, 2 Cor. 3:7-11.)—All our sufferings arise from the just displeasure of God: and this must continue from generation to generation against our sinful race, except as any turn to him by repentance and faith. His readiness to forgive, and to return in mercy to the humble suppliant, should encourage and induce us to repent; (Note, Rom. 2:4-6.) and we should earnestly beg of him to "turn us that we may be turned."—We must follow no examples further than they accord to the word of God: and therefore they, whose fathers have refused to hearken to the ministers of Christ, must by no means be like them: as the authority of parents will not bear men out in iniquity, idolatry, superstition, unbelief, or impence. For where are they now? They are dead, their places known no more, and their authority is terminated: "but the

CHAPTER II.

The prophet has a vision of One, who came to measure Jerusalem: and an assurance of its flourishing state, under God's protection, 1-5. The people are warned to leave Babylon, before the impending judgments were executed, 6-8. A call on Zion to rejoice in the presence of God, and the increase of the church; and on all flesh to be silent before him, 10-13.

I LIFTED up mine eyes again, and looked, and behold a man with a measuring line in his hand.

2 Then said I, "Whither goest thou? And he said unto me, "to measure Jerusalem, to see what is the breadth thereof, and what is the length thereof.

word of God endureth for ever." they can do no more harm or good; but he ever liveth to save, or to destroy. And where are those who died in their sins? If they have ruined their own souls, is that a reason why their posterity should ruin theirs also? How vain then is it for men to be satisfied with their notions or forms, merely because they "received them by tradition from their fathers," when they are contrary to the word of God! (Note, 1 Pet. 1:17-21, v. 18.) They, and the prophets, apostles, or ministers whose words they rejected, are gone to receive their recompense: but though the prophets do not live here for ever; yet their words of precept, promise, doctrine, or prediction, remain perpetually in force, and are constantly taking effect, or receiving their accomplishment: and the Lord continues to deal with men according to their doings, as tried by the standard. "Being dead they yet speak," and warn us to keep out of the reach of their threatenings; for they will surely overtake, and lay hold of us, except we trust in the promises and obey the commandments of God; as they have already taken hold of numbers, who too late found, and were forced to acknowledge, the truth of them.

V. 7-21. Our divine Redeemer, our Brother and Friend, is not only "King of kings," but likewise Lord of all angels, who go throughout the earth, to execute his purposes of mercy or of judgment, for the good of his chosen people. He condescends to notice them in their lowest debasement: he delights in their humility; he takes pleasure in the effects of his own grace, which changes thorns into myrtles; he peculiarly approves of their patience and meekness in suffering afflictions; and he is ever ready to instruct, and to answer the humble inquiries of his servants.—But it is no uncommon case for the enemies of God to be prosperous and careless, and quiet and at rest in their sins; whilst his people are enduring correction, harassed by temptation, disquieted by fears of wrath, or groaning under oppression or persecution. Yet their heavenly Advocate fails not to plead their cause: and the measure and duration of their fiery, but purifying trials, are determined by infinite wisdom and love. His fatherly indignation against them will not endure for ever; but he will have mercy on them and comfort them at the appointed time. "The LORD of hosts" will never reject the pleadings of his beloved Son for his beloved people; but will answer him with gracious and comfortable words, which shall be made known to his afflicted brethren, as he sees needful for them. Whatever their deserts, fears, or sufferings may be, their God and Father "is jealous for them with a great jealousy;" and his anger is little against them, compared with his heavy displeasure against their prosperous enemies; whose cruel contempt and enmity, when employed to correct the people of God, will ensure to themselves the heavier condemnation. But after every hiding of his face, the Lord will return to Zion with mercies; his spiritual temple will surely be builded in defiance of all opposition, and his churches must be spread abroad. Whatever opposers prevail to scatter his worshippers, or to run down his truth, he will raise up able instruments to defeat their designs, and to put them to confusion; whether persecuting tyrants are to be crushed, by powerful kings and their armies; or proud infidels and heresiarchs to be confuted and silenced by his ministers, and the effectual preaching of his holy gospel.

NOTES.—CHAP. II. V. 1-5. This was a continuation or variation of the foregoing vision, and related to the same subjects.—The prophet saw "a man with a measuring line in his hand," whom he ventured to interrogate about his purpose: and he answered, that he was going "to measure Jerusalem," and mark out the dimensions of it. If the Angel who talked with the prophet, was the same as "the man who stood among the myrtle-trees," (Notes, 1:8-13.) the Angel of the covenant, the Word and Son of God, as it seems most probable; the man with the measuring line must have been a created angel, in human form. (Marg. Ref. b, d. Notes, Ez. 40:3. Rev. 11:1, 2.)—When the Angel, who talked with Zechariah, went forth, the other angel, with the measuring line, went out to meet him, "To whom he," the first Angels, said, "Run, &c."—He directed him with the measuring line, to give the prophet, who was then a young man, further satisfaction: and to assure him that Jerusalem would be greatly enlarged and replenished; that it would be inhabited, as

3 And behold, the angel that talked with me went forth, and another angel went out to meet him,

4 And said unto him, Run, speak to this young man, saying, Jerusalem shall be inhabited as towns without walls for the multitude of men and cattle therein :

5 For I, saith the LORD, will be unto her a wall of fire round about, and will be the glory in the midst of her.

6 ¶ Ho, ho, come forth, and flee from the land of the north, saith the LORD: for I have spread you abroad as the four winds of the heaven, saith the LORD.

7 Deliver thyself, O Zion, that dwellest with the daughter of Babylon.

8 For thus saith the LORD of hosts: After the glory hath he sent me unto the nations which spoiled you: for he that toucheth you, toucheth the apple of his eye.

9 For behold, I will shake my hand upon them, and they shall be a spoil to their servants: and ye shall know that the LORD of hosts hath sent me.

10 ¶ Sing and rejoice, O daughter of Zion; for lo, I come, and I will dwell in the midst of thee, saith the LORD.

11 And many nations shall be joined to the LORD in that day, and shall be my people: and I will dwell in the midst of thee, and thou shalt know that the LORD of hosts hath sent me unto thee.

12 And the LORD shall inherit Judah his portion in the holy land, and shall choose Jerusalem again.

13 Be silent, O all flesh, before the LORD: for he is raised up out of his holy habitation.

cities which are not circumscribed by walls, but spread abroad on every side; or like those, whose suburbs are far larger than the part which lies within the walls. (Marg. Ref. h. Notes, 8:4,5. 14:10,11. Ez. 36:10,11.) Yet would it be in perfect security: for the Almighty God would defend it, as if it were walled round with fire, to consume every one who attempted to enter as an enemy: and he would be the glory of his people, by dwelling in his temple in the midst of the city. (Marg. Ref. i, k. Notes, 9:8. Is. 4:5,6. 26:1. 60:15-22. Hag. 2:6-9. Rev. 21:22-27. 22:2-5.)—The prosperity, and honour of Jerusalem, for some time after the captivity, were a feeble shadow of the extent of the Christian church, the number of her converts, her security under the Lord's protection, and her glory through his presence in his ordinances, and as dwelling in Jesus Christ. Yet this seems especially to refer to those glorious times, which shall succeed the destruction of the New Testament Babylon.—

Vitrings refers the literal completion of this prophecy to the time of the Maccabees; but thinks, that the protection and glory of the future Jerusalem may also be predicted. (Rev. 20:9.) Bp. Newcombe.

V. 6-9. The language of this proclamation first claims our attention. "The LORD of hosts" is the Speaker, (8) yet he speaks as one who is sent; at the same time he says, "I will shake my hand upon them . . . by this ye shall know that the LORD of hosts hath sent me." (9) The language shows, that not the prophet, but he that spake by him was intended. There are evidently two persons here called. "The LORD of Hosts;" one who is sent, and the other, he who sent him: even the eternal Son of God, and the Father who sent him, as his willing Messenger, to be the Saviour of his people. (Marg. Ref. r, z. Notes, 10-13. Is. 48:16.) Thus relatively, as well as in respect of his human nature, he condescended to be inferior to the Father, though he claimed to be naturally equal, as One with him in the unity of the Godhead. And had not the prophet, or rather the Holy Spirit who spake by him, considered the promised Messiah as "JEHOVAH Sabaoth," Immanuel, such language would not have been used; for it would have had an evident tendency to mislead us.—This must necessarily be understood of Christ, who being God, equal with his Father, was sent, as he was Mediator, to dwell in his church." (11)—The Lord having promised to protect, honour, and bless Jerusalem, here issued a proclamation to the Jews, (who still remained in Babylon and the northern regions of Chaldaea;) and to the Israelites in their dispersions, to return without delay that they might share her privileges. He had indeed scattered them on every side, by their late calamities; and this was their chastisement and affliction, rather than their sin. But, since the decree of Cyrus and the assurances of his returning favour, they would be inexcusable in remaining at a distance from the holy city, among devoted idolaters. They might till this time be considered as "Zion," the church of God, though dwelling in Babylon; but now they were commanded to deliver themselves without delay. (Marg. Ref. m-p. Notes, Num. 16:26. Deut. 28:64. Is. 48:20-22. 52:2,3. Jer. 51:6. 2 Cor. 6:14-18. v. 17. Rev. 18:4-8.) For, "after the glory" promised and already begun to be conferred on Jerusalem, by his presence with his people; the LORD of hosts had sent his Messiah to the nations which had spoiled the Jews, to take vengeance upon them: as he who touched them, "touched the apple of his eye" (speaking after the manner of men;) they touched him in the most tender part, and would surely excite his keenest resentment. (Notes, Deut. 32:10. Ps. 17:6-8. v. 8.) The Messiah would therefore shake his hand upon them, as making a signal to the executioners of his vengeance; and then they, who had been their servants, would plunder and oppress them: and by this the Jews and Israel would know that the "LORD of hosts had sent him." (Marg. Ref. q-t, x, y. Notes, Is. 14:1,2. 33:1. Jer. 27:4-9.) They ought therefore, without delay, to flee from those devoted cities and countries, lest they should be involved in their calamities.—Not long after this the Babylonians revolted from Darius, and he besieged that city for twenty months; and, having taken it, he made terrible slaughter of the inhabitants, and destroyed most of its fortifications, which prepared the way for its more complete desolation. (Note, Jer. 51:61-64. v. 64.)—This may also be considered as the call of Christ to his people, to separate from antichristian corrupters and oppressors of his church, before that destruction of the New Testament Babylon, which probably will be the grand means of convincing the Jews that Jesus was their promised Messiah.

V. 10-13. This seems to be an express prediction of the coming of Christ, in human nature, to dwell in the midst of his church. "The daughter of Zion," the inhabitants of Jerusalem, were called on to rejoice and sing, because he would come and "dwell in the midst of them;" for he was "the Glory of his people Israel." (Marg. Ref. a-c. Notes, 9:9. 10. Ps. 68:18. Is. 12:4-6. 40:9-11. 52:9-10. Zeph. 3:14-17. Mal. 3:1-4. v. 1. John 1:14. 12:12-19.) But he was also to be "a Light to the Gentiles;" and many nations, in that day, would renounce their idolatry, and join themselves to the Lord as his worshippers, among whom he would dwell and by this the Jews would know that the LORD of hosts had sent him to them.—Let the reader attentively mark the language: "Many nations shall be joined to JEHOVAH; and they shall be my people; and I will dwell, &c."—It is evident, that JEHOVAH here speaks; yet he adds, "Thou shalt know that JEHOVAH of hosts hath sent me unto thee." (11)—It is the singular number. The prophet "should know, that JEHOVAH of hosts had sent" that person to him, who spake in the name of the LORD; not the people that JEHOVAH had sent the prophet to them.—It seems impossible, that this language should be mistaken, except it be disregarded. Few passages, even in the New Testament, more clearly speak of distinct persons, in the unity of the Godhead, than this does. (See on Note, 1:8-11. Note, 6-9.)—The day intended may either mean the time when the gospel was first preached to the Gentiles; or that which will soon arrive, when "the fulness of the Gentiles shall come in." But the next verse evidently looks forward to the latter days; for then "the LORD will inherit Judah, in his holy land, and again choose Jerusalem;" when Israel shall be turned to the Lord their Messiah, and restored to their own land. (Marg. Ref. f, g. Notes, 1:14-17.) However, at both these times, he would evidently be raised up out of his holy habitation, to plead the cause of his people against their enemies: and it would behove all the fallen, frail race of men to fear before him, and to adore these displays of his power, justice, truth, and love, with silence and submission, and without murmurs, objections, or opposition. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. h, i. Notes, Ps. 46:10. Hag. 2:20.)—"Many were made proselytes to Judaism; the Edomites were converted in the time of John Hyrcanus." Bp. Newcombe. (11)—The vanquished Edomites were indeed then compelled to be circumcised and to profess themselves Jews.—But can any man of reflection be satisfied with such an interpretation? Have not whole nations, and powerful nations, at least in as unexceptionable a way, embraced Christianity. (Marg. Ref. d. Notes, 8:20-23. Ps. 22:27,28. 68:29,31-33. 72:8-11. Is. 60:1-14. Rev. 1:15-18.) And are not far more glorious times foretold? And does not

5 And I said, Let them set a fair mitre upon his head. So they set a fair mitre upon his head, and clothed him with garments. And the Angel of the LORD stood by.

6 And the Angel of the LORD protested unto Joshua, saying,

7 Thus saith the LORD of hosts; If thou wilt walk in my ways, and if thou wilt keep my charge, then thou shalt also judge my house, and shalt also keep my courts, and I will give thee places to walk among these that stand by.

his confirm, beyond reasonable doubt, that exposition, which explains the prophecy of our Lord's coming and kingdom?

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The great Builder of the church, whatever instruments he employs, always works by line and rule; and he knows the dimensions of his holy city, and all those who truly belong to it. But we may humbly, yet boldly, apply to him for information, about all interesting matters which perplex us: and by his gracious instruction, even the young and inexperienced will be made so wise, in the most important concerns, that no man can without great sin despise their youth.—The church of God is so admirably constructed, that, after all the millions which have already entered it, "there is yet room" for innumerable millions more: none shall be refused who trust in Christ; and he never excludes from the church in heaven, one of the true members of the church on earth.—Our desire, prayer, and endeavour then ought to be, that Jerusalem may be replenished with converts, so numerous that her present limits may be far too narrow, and that the suburbs of this holy city may become very much larger, than all her present dimensions are.—The inhabitants of Zion need fear no danger or disgrace, however exposed and despised they may be; seeing the LORD will be "a wall of fire around them, and a glory in the midst of them." We should therefore, in our several places, circulate his proclamation far and near: that sinners, who are scattered in all parts of the globe, may be brought to separate from their wicked companions; to renounce idolatry, superstition, and iniquity: and join themselves to the "God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ," as his worshippers and servants.—When he has displayed his glory in purifying his church, he will proceed to punish those who have spoiled her. Let all men therefore fear to harm his worshippers; for the least injurious touch will provoke his indignation: "if his wrath be kindled, yea but a little," and he do but shake his hand over his enemies, misery and contempt will seize upon them; and all the world shall know that the Father has sent the Son to be the Saviour of his people, and the terrible Judge and Avenger of all "who will not have him to reign over them." Let us then rejoice in his salvation, who now dwells in our nature, and abides with his people perpetually; and to whom many nations have already been joined, and all the rest in due time will join themselves. May we be found a part of his chosen inheritance, and yield him a large revenue of praise, honour, and worship: and then he will own us for his portion, and be our Portion in his holy land above. And let all flesh tremble and adore before him: for though he now has taken up his residence in his holy habitation in heaven, and many are ready to inquire, "Where is the promise of his coming?" yet he will soon arise, and make his cause triumphant, and punish his enemies: and he will ere long come to judgment, to complete the salvation of his people, and to "punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity."

NOTES.—CHAP. III. V. 1-4. The prophet next saw "Joshua the high-priest standing before the Angel of the LORD," (or "the Angel JEHOVAH," as a criminal upon his trial; or rather as Israel's representative, officiating in his ministry, and seeking a blessing upon his afflicted people. While he thus stood before Christ, Satan appeared to "stand at his right hand," as his adversary and accuser, "to resist him," and to show cause why he should not be accepted in his services, or why he should be condemned; by which the subtle and malicious endeavours of the devil, to discourage the servants of God from their work, or to defeat the success of it, were meant. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. c-c. Notes, Job 1:3-11. 2:1-5. Ps. 109:6-20, vv. 6, 7. Luke 22:31-34. Rev. 12:7-12, vv. 9, 10.) But "the LORD," the "Angel JEHOVAH," Christ before whom Joshua stood, said to Satan, "JEHOVAH rebuke thee, even the LORD who hath chosen Jerusalem, rebuke thee," &c. or, "will rebuke thee, or does rebuke thee." It could not be denied, that Joshua, and the other priests, and the people, were in many things very faulty: but Satan's accusations arose from enmity to God and his cause, and not from any dislike to their unworthiness; and therefore he ought to be, and certainly would be, rebuked and silenced. They had just been marvellously delivered from idolatrous Babylon, as "brands plucked out of the burning;" and no wonder if they carried about with them the marks of the fire, in which they had been nearly consumed: yet this was a reason, not why they should be thrown again into it; but why they should be pardoned, and "redeemed from all iniquity, and purified... a peculiar people zealous of good works." (Marg. Ref. g-i. Notes, Is. 54:15-17. Rom. 8:32-34. 11:1-6. Jude 9, 10, 22-25, v. 23.) While the Advocate of the church thus stood up in her behalf against her accuser; the prophet observed, that Joshua was clothed in filthy garments as he stood before him. This was an emblem of his sinfulness, and that of the people whom he represented; and as he was not properly habited to appear before the LORD, this seemed to give the enemy an advantage. (Marg. Ref. k. Notes, 2 Chr. 30:16-20. Is. 64:6. Dan. 9:18.) Various conjectures have been formed concerning the sins of which Joshua had been guilty: but his connivance at the neglect of the people respecting the temple, seems the most probable, as far as any particular crime was referred to. (Note, Hag. 1:4.) The vision, however, rather related to the manifold sins and defilements of Joshua, of the priests, and of the people, which the legal sacrifices could not take away. In this situation Joshua had nothing to say in his own behalf; till Christ ordered the attendant angels to remove his filthy garments, assuring him that his sins were pardoned, and "that he would clothe him with change of raiment." (Marg. Ref. l-o. Notes, Ps. 32:1, 2. Is. 6:5-7. 61:1-3, v. 3. 10, 11. Luke 15:22-24. John 1:29. Rom. 3:21-26, vv. 22-24. 13:11-14, v. 14. 2 Cor. 5:18-21, v. 21. Gal. 3:26-29, vv. 27, 28. Eph. 4:20-24. Phil. 3:8-11, v. 9. Heb. 7:26-28.) Thus he was prepared for ministering with acceptance in his sacred office: and the people were reminded, that the Aaronic priesthood could not profit them, except by the intervention of a better priesthood, by which iniquity might actually be put away.—The Logos, or Son of God, said unto Satan, "The LORD," even God the Father, "rebuke thee," and not suffer thy mischievous imagination against Jerusalem and the temple to prosper. ... This text seems parallel with Gen. 19:24. where it is said, "The LORD rained fire from the LORD out of heaven," a text alleged both by ancient and modern writers, to prove that a distinction of persons in the blessed Trinity was a doctrine delivered in the Old Testament, though but imperfectly. The words may be rendered, "The LORD hath rebuked thee," or rejected thy plea, having long ago chosen Jerusalem.' Louth.

V. 5. The prophet would doubtless rejoice to see Joshua rescued, and arrayed in clean garments: but he observed that he yet had not the mitre inscribed with "Holiness to the LORD," which was the peculiar mark of his appointment to the high-priesthood. (Marg. Ref. Note, Ex. 28:36-38.) But he was encouraged to entreat that this also might be put upon his head: and, his request being granted, Joshua was invested with that, as well as the other garments of his office.—Many, however, suppose the first clause to be a continuation of the orders given by the Angel of the LORD—"And accordingly I command you to set a fair mitre on his head: Bp. Hall.—I, the LORD, further commanded, and said... The Angel, "that talked with me," (6. 23.) still stood by, and made that solemn protestation which follows.' Louth.

V. 6, 7. When this was done, and Joshua was solemnly admitted to his high office, notwithstanding all former sins. (Notes, Is. 6:1-8.) the Angel protested to him, or solemnly assured him with the authority of the LORD of hosts, that i. he conscientiously walked in his ways, and faithfully continued to execute the important trust and charge committed to him, he should be honoured as the judge or ruler over the

V. 8. Joshua and the other priests, with Zerubbabel and his assistants, had been men greatly wondered at. Their marvellous deliverance from Babylon; their resolution in coming up to Jerusalem when it lay in ruins; their perseverance in the midst of many and great hardships and perils; and their preservation among inveterate and potent enemies, caused numbers to think of them with astonishment. (Marg. Notes, Ps. 71:7. Is. 8:18. 1 Cor. 4:9-13.) But they would surely be preserved; because One was in due time to arise from the remnant of Judah, of whom Joshua was a type, and who was called by the same name; "Joshua" being the Hebrew, and "Jesus" the Greek, termination. (Notes, Num. 13:16. Matt. 1:20, 21.) In due time the Lord would bring forth "his Servant the BRANCH"; namely, at his incarnation, when he would spring forth as a small branch from a decaying root, and yet grow up to supereminent dignity and glory. (Marg. Ref. y, z. Notes, 6:12, 13. Is. 4:2. 11:1. 53:2, 3. Jer. 23:5, 6. Ez. 17:22-24. 34:23-31, v. 29.)—"The word Mophet signifies not only a wonder, but likewise a sign, or a type. . . They are men intended for signs and tokens, they are typical men; . . . "men that foreshow something to come." They, with Joshua the high-priest at the head of them, are a figure of the restoration of the church under the government of the Messias. . . I will point out, or foretell, the coming of the Messiah into the world, as a person altogether distinct from Joshua, or any other present among you; and I will make him known to you under the name of the BRANCH. . . The word Tsemach, "Branch," the LXX render Avarelon*, the east, or sunrising, from whence it is applied to Christ, (Luke 1:78.) and rendered the dayspring. Louth.—How any man can suppose, as several have done, that Zerubbabel was exclusively meant, (when he was already "brought forth," and placed as high in authority, as at any future period,) would be astonishing; did not multiplied instances prove the extreme difficulty, with which some very learned men discern the Saviour in the clearest predictions and testimonies of Scripture.

V. 9, 10. An allusion might here be made to some corner-stone, or foundation-stone, of the temple, which had been laid, under the inspection of Joshua, and in the presence of many of the people; and on which the names of the tribes of Israel perhaps were engraven. But the Lord called their attention to the true Foundation and Corner-stone of the spiritual temple, which he had laid in his purposes and prophecies, and which he would openly lay before the people, in his incarnation and by the gospel, even Christ, as Immanuel, "God manifest in the flesh." (Marg. Ref. a. Notes, Ps. 118:19-24, v. 22, 23. Is. 28:16. Matt. 21:40-44. Acts 4:5-12, v. 11. 1 Cor. 3:10-15. 1 Pet. 2:4-8.)—"The "seven eyes" upon this stone are interpreted by many to signify the manifold and abundant wisdom and knowledge of Christ, as the Counsellor and ever-watchful Protector of his church; or the manifold gifts and graces of the Holy Spirit; and some explain it of certain superior ministering angels, so called. (Notes, 4:8-10. 2 Chr. 16:7-10, v. 9. Rev. 5:5-7, v. 6.) But others suppose that they denote the attention, which would be paid to this precious Corner-stone: and doubtless the eyes of all believers from the beginning had looked forward to it, through types and predictions; those of all believers, both of the Jews and Gentiles, after Christ's coming to the end of the world, would be fixed upon it, in faith, hope, and love; wicked men would behold it with contempt, abhorrence, or dismay; and evil spirits would eye it with malignity and despair. In short the eyes of all in heaven, earth, or hell, would, in one way or other, or at one time or other, be fixed upon it.—The Lord of hosts would "engrave the graving" of this Stone, as the Corner-stone of the temple had been engraven: this seems especially to refer to the sufferings of Christ, through which he was prepared to be the Foundation and Salvation of the whole church. (Marg. Ref. c.) On that "one day," on which Christ was crucified for his people, a complete atonement was made for all their sins, and the way opened for their pardon, acceptance, and sanctification. (Marg. Ref. d. Notes, 13:1. Dan. 9:24. John 1:29. 1 Tim. 2:5-7. Heb. 7:26-28. 9:24-26. 10:5-10. 1 John 2:1, 2.) And in that day, when sinners come to him, the tried Corner-stone, and obtain pardon, and spiritual life and grace from him; they begin to enjoy peace and to live in harmony; calling upon one another to associate in religious exercises, and in holy fellowship; while they rest under

This may perhaps have a special reference to that day, when the eyes of restored Israel shall be fixed upon Christ, the precious Corner-stone which they have hitherto rejected. Then their load of national guilt shall at once be removed; and they shall enjoy spiritual peace and temporal security in their own land, and in the days of Solomon. (*Marg. Ref. e. PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-7. If we could behold what goes forward in the world of spirits, we should see very much to alarm, to humble, and to encourage us.—The most honoured, eminent, and excellent of men, when viewed as "standing before the LORD," would appear to be sinners deserving of condemnation; not only for their actual sins, but for the defilement of their best services: and Satan would be seen employing a variety of subtle and malevolent machinations, to defeat all our pious designs, and even, if possible, to procure our condemnation. But, though we cannot answer the charges brought against us; our heavenly Advocate never wants an effectual plea, in behalf of all who intrust their cause in his hands. He will rebuke, confound, and silence our bold accuser, by arguments grounded on his own meritorious obedience unto death, and on the mercy and truth of the Father through him. If it be proved, by our genuine conversion, that we belong to that company, whom he "hath chosen, that they should be holy and without blame before him in love," we have nothing to fear. We were once as brands in the fire, without sense of our misery and danger, or desire of deliverance: yet he plucked us out, of his own most gratuitous, unsolicited mercy and grace, "according to the eternal purpose which he hath purposed in himself;" (Notes, Eph. 2:4-10, v. 4, 5. Tit. 3:4-7.) and he will not now leave us to be thrown back into the burning, because of those remains of sin, which are our grief and burden, when we stand daily before him, confessing our guilt, entreating him to pardon and cleanse us, and prepared to give him the whole glory of our salvation. If the great Intercessor then silences our accuser by arguments of this kind; we should resist his discouraging suggestions in the same manner; we should desire to be the Lord's instruments, in "plucking brands out of the fire;" and should bear patiently and meekly with the sins and infirmities of new converts and weak believers, according to the mercy of our Lord to us. In his sight we all appear as "clothed in filthy garments;" not only in our first approach to him for salvation, but in respect of our hearts and actions ever since: except as he orders the poor prodigal to be divested of his rags, and clothed with the best robe, which he has provided for his change of raiment. When we truly trust in Christ, we shall thus "be made the righteousness of God in him;" he will also cause our iniquity to pass away by his sanctifying grace, and enable us to "put off the old man, which is corrupt according to the deceitful lusts;" and, having "put on the new man," to walk thenceforth in newness of life." Happy then are they who seek help from him! the prayers of his ministers and people are accepted for them, and they are qualified for every work to which they are called. But if we would have the assurance and comfort of these privileges, and serve the Lord in any honourable and useful station; we must hearken to his protestations concerning the necessity of holiness and faithful obedience, as well as to his promises of free salvation. We must learn to walk in his ways, and keep his charge, and be faithful in a little: in order that we may be more and more employed by him on earth, and in hopes of serving him in heaven for ever, along with holy angels and perfected saints.

V. 8-10. Whatever trials we pass through, or whatever services we perform, or however we may be wondered at by friends or foes; our whole dependence must rest on Christ "the BRANCH" of righteousness; that we may be grafted into him and grow like him. On him must our eyes be fixed, as the only Foundation which the Father has laid for his church, or on which a sinner can rest his hope of salvation. He alone can remove our iniquity: in one day he made an all-sufficient atonement for sin; and the Lord laid on him the transgressions of us all; and when his hands, feet, and side were pierced for us, our names and cause were graven by the Father upon his heart. Whenever we look to him in genuine faith, the guilt and power of sin are marvellously removed; we then begin to enjoy true peace and comfort, in communion with him and his saints; and we have an antepast of heavenly felicity; while in his ordinances, by faith and love, "we sit down under his shadow with great delight, and his fruit is sweet to our taste." (Note, Cant. 2:3.)

CHAPTER IV.

NOTES.—CHAP. IV. V. 1. Some short interval having taken place between the foregoing and the following parts of the vision, Zechariah through the infirmity of the flesh was fallen asleep. But his divine Instructor waked him, that he might attend to what he had further to show him. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Jer. 31:23-26. Dan. 8:15-19, v. 18.)

V. 2, 3. (Note, Ez. 25:31-39.) This candlestick of pure gold (alluding to that in the sanctuary,) represented the church of God, formed of the excellent of the earth, and fitted for receiving and communicating the light of truth and holiness, in this dark world. The lamps of the candlestick, in the sanctuary, were supplied by the priests, in the ordinary manner; but this was supplied in a supernatural way, for there was a bowl, or common reservoir, placed on the top of the candlestick, at an equal distance from each of the seven lamps; and from this bowl were seven pipes, through which the oil gradually ran of itself to supply each of them, as it was wanted. At the same time, two olive-trees were growing, one on each side of the bowl; and a branch of each of them, being nearest to it, distilled of its own accord abundance of the finest oil, of a golden colour, through a golden pipe into the bowl; from which the lamps were replenished, through the seven pipes. (11, 12.) Beyond doubt, this represented the abundance of divine grace, for the illumination and sanctification of the ministers and members of the church, which is treasured up in Christ, to be from him dispensed, through his ordinances, to every individual in all parts of the world, as occasions and circumstances may require; and which cannot be procured or precluded by any human power, but is communicated according to the methods which he has established, and revealed in his word. This church was at that time found among the Jews, and the candlestick was set up at Jerusalem: and its light would be supplied and kept burning, notwithstanding the weakness or unworthiness of the persons concerned, the number or power of their enemies, or the apparent difficulties under which they laboured. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, 4-7, 11-14. Judg. 9:9-15, v. 9. Matt. 5:14-16. Rom. 11:16-24. Rev. 1:12-20, vv. 12, 20. 2:1. 4:5, 11:3-6, v. 4.)

V. 4-7. The prophet, not understanding the vision, ventured to inquire the meaning from his gracious Instructor: (Marg. Ref. g-i. Note, Mark 4:1-20, v. 13.) and, being gently reproved for his dullness of apprehension, or his attention being still more excited, he confessed his ignorance, and was left to discover the meaning, from the message which he was for the present ordered to deliver to Zerubbabel; assuring him, that his support and success would not be derived from armies, or human authority, but from the Spirit of God. The power of the Jews, or of the authority of the Persian kings, would not avail in these undertakings; but they would be rendered successful by the Holy Spirit. The first edict of Cyrus was procured by the secret operation of God on his mind; Darius and Artaxerxes would be influenced in the same manner to favour them. (Notes, Ezra 1:1-4. 7:27, 28. Neh. 1:5-11, v. 11. 2:4.) But especially the instruments employed, would not be invested with extensive authority or great power, or endowed with military conduct or courage; but with the Spirit of God, rendering them eminent for wisdom, holiness, faith, and zeal, and directing them to proceed in dependence on God. Such, in a measure, were Zerubbabel, Joshua, and their helpers; such afterwards were Ezra and Nehemiah, and those who concurred with them. By instruments and means of this kind, the temple was rebuilt, and at length the civil and ecclesiastical state of Judah was restored. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. k. Notes, 9:13-16. 2 Chr. 14:9-15, v. 11. 32:5-8, v. 7, 8. Is. 11:2-5. 32:15. 63:11-14. Ez. 37:11-14. Hos. 1:6, 7. 2 Cor. 10:1-6, vv. 4, 5. 1 Pet. 1:10-12, v. 12.) Indeed the obstructions in their way resembled a "great mountain," which would be immovable and insurmountable by any human power; but in the name and strength of that God, who would work by Zerubbabel, he might set them at defiance; for before him the "great 5 Then the angel that talked with me answered and said unto me, "Knowest thou not what these be? And I said, 'No, my Lord.

6 Then he answered and spake unto me, saying, "This is the word of the LORD unto Zerubbabel, saying, 'Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the LORD of hosts.

7 Who art thou, O great mountain? before Zerubbabel thou shalt become a plain: and he shall bring forth the headstone thereof with shoutings, crying, 'Grace, grace, unto it.

8 Moreover the word of the LORD came unto me, saying, mountain would become a plain;" and he would in due time bring forth the headstone, or the topstone, to be placed on the summit of the temple: whilst all the people, with loud and repeated acclamations, would ascribe their whole success to the free, unmerited, and abundant grace and favour of God; as well as seek his continued mercy and grace by fervent prayer. (Marg. Ref. l-o. Notes, 14:4, 5. Ezra 6:13-17. Ps. 118:19-24. Is. 28:16. 40:3-5. Jer. 33:10, 11. Dan. 4:44, 45. Hag. 2:20-23. Matt. 21:21, 22, v. 21. Rev. 5:8-14. 7:9-12. 19:1-6. 21:1-4.)—In all this, Zerubbabel doubtless was the type of Christ, who builds his spiritual temple, not by human power and authority, but by the regenerating and sanctifying influences of the Holy Spirit; and by instruments qualified and disposed by the same divine Agent: whilst mountains melt into plains before him, and the work goes on amidst the combined opposition of earth and hell. And thus will he proceed, till the whole multitude of the redeemed shall be perfected, body and soul, in heavenly glory; and angels join the full chorus of the church triumphant, in adoring praises to that free grace, which formed, conducted, and completed the surprising plan.—To this sense the Chaldee paraphrase expounds the words, "His Messiah shall come forth, who was named from all eternity, and shall obtain the empire of all the kingdoms of the earth." And St. Jerome tells us, . . . that the ancient Jews explained it so. Louth.

V. 8-10. The same truths are here expressed, or illustrated, in another manner. Zerubbabel with his own hands had, some time before, laid the foundation-stone, in the presence of Joshua and the people; yet, through various hindrances and discouragements, he probably despaired of seeing the work completed; but he was here assured that his hands should also finish it; and by this he would know, that the Lord had sent his prophet to him; or rather, by this Zechariah would know that JEHOVAH of hosts, the Father had sent his divine Instructor to him. "Thou shalt know," (meaning the prophet,) that I am Christ sent of my Father for the building and preservation of my spiritual temple. (Marg. Ref. p, r. Notes, 2:6-13. 6:12-15. Ezra 3:8-11. 5:6-17, v. 16. 6:13-15. Heb. 12:2, 3.) The aged person among the Jews had despised these small beginnings, and probably many others concurred with them; and thus they both distrusted God and disheartened one another. Perhaps those in Chaldea, "despising such a day of small things," excused themselves from returning into their own land; as if the dawnings of the day of God's returning favour ought not to have been highly valued. Their enemies also despised and ridiculed these feeble efforts. Yet all the friends of the work would at length rejoice, in seeing Zerubbabel successfully and skilfully sustain the character of the master-builder of the temple; and with his plummet in his hand take surveys of the work, to see that it was properly done, until the whole should be completed. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. s, t. Notes, Ezra 3:12, 13. Neh. 4:1-3. Dan. 2:34, 35. Hag. 2:3-5. Matt. 13:31-33. 1 Cor. 1:26-31.) This he would do "with those seven," which some explain of seven of his principal assistants; but probably it alludes to the seven eyes, that were upon the foundation-stone; (39.) and which would still watch over and superintend the work, till it was finished. These "were the eyes of the LORD, &c." His omniscience and manifold wisdom, by which he providentially directs every event all over the earth, would concur with Zerubbabel, and order all things in subserviency to his success. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. u, x. See on Note, 3:9, 10, v. 10. Notes, 1:8-11. Am. 7:7-9.) Thus Christ began, continues to build, and will himself complete, his spiritual temple. The small beginnings of his gospel were despised by numbers; and the feeble efforts that are made in different places to promote his cause, or the first dawnings of his grace in new converts, are often contemned. Even the friends of the gospel are apt to "despise the day of small things;" but they will all at length rejoice to see this great Builder carry on and complete his design

9 The hands of Zerubbabel have laid the foundation of this house; his hands shall also finish it; and thou shalt know that the Lord of hosts hath sent me unto you.

10 For who hath despised the day of small things? for they shall rejoice, and shall see the plummet in the hand of Zerubbabel with those seven; they are the eyes of the Lord, which run to and fro through the whole earth.

11 ¶ Then answered I, and said unto him, What are these two olive-trees upon the right side of the candlestick and upon the left side thereof?

12 And I answered again, and said unto him, What be these two olive-branches which through the two golden pipes empty the golden oil out of themselves?

and to observe how "the eyes of the Lord" watch over the operations of his grace, from first to last; till at length angels and men will count them the grand themes of their admiring praise and adoration.

V. 11-14. The prophet was still ignorant of the meaning of "the two olive trees," especially of those branches, from which the oil was more immediately conveyed to the lamps; and upon inquiry he learned, that "they were the two anointed ones, which stood before the Lord of the whole earth." Zerubbabel and Joshua, the anointed ruler and high-priest of Judah, who stood before the Lord, and were his instruments in the work of the temple, were "the anointed ones" intended; but they were only types and shadows, (as the temple itself was,) of him who was to come. They therefore typified Christ, as anointed with the Holy Spirit without measure, to be the King and High-Priest of the church, and to build, illuminate, and sanctify the spiritual temple. As the anointed High-Priest, he obtained these gifts by his sacrifice of himself, his resurrection, and ascension into heaven; and through his continual and all prevailing intercession, they are communicated by him as the anointed King of his church. From the union of these two offices in his mysterious person, both God and man, this inexhaustible fulness of grace is derived and conferred. Thus the olive-branches of themselves distill the golden oil, through the two golden pipes, into the bowl; and from this fulness all receive that grace, which they require in their several places and services, through the means of grace, as the seven pipes fed the seven lamps of the candlestick.—It is plain, that the golden candlestick is the Jewish state, both civil and religious; and that the oil, with which the lights are supplied, is the spirit of God. Bp. Newcombe. And is it not equally plain, that Zerubbabel and Joshua were, in these transactions, typical persons, types of Christ our King and our High-Priest? (Marg. and *Marg. PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

We are so dull, and so soon weary of attending on spiritual things, that our gracious God must not only set them before us, but again and again by various methods awaken our attention.—The church contains all the knowledge, holiness, and consolation which are to be found in this sinful world; and all this light comes from Christ, as its great Source. (Note, 1 Tim. 3:14,15, v. 15.) He has formed his candlestick on earth of the most valuable materials, and with the most exquisite workmanship; and he has so arranged his word, his ordinances, his ministers, and people, that no part of the church may be destitute of "the light of life," and that the whole may shine as "a light in the world."—Even when our ignorance or inattention deserves reproofs, if we ask wisdom of him, he will "give us liberally and not upbraid" us.—No human power or efforts can do good to the souls of men, except the Spirit of God work by them: nor can any authority or might prevent that good which this divine Agent is pleased to do, often by feeble and unworthy instruments. To make known the gospel throughout the world, and to render men wise, holy, and happy, we do not so much need the assistance of mighty monarchs and powerful armies; or that of wealth, great abilities, eminent learning; or even the power of philosophy, eloquence, and oratory: but we want men filled with the Holy Spirit, full of faith, heavenly wisdom, holiness, zeal for the glory of God, and love to the souls of men; who would go forth in simple dependence on the grace and providence of God, to use no carnal weapons, but the spiritual armour provided for them, and by fervent prayer to seek the blessing from him alone. Before such Zerubbabel's mountains would become plains; or rather before him who has said, "Lo, I am with you always, even to the end of the world." As his instruments, they would begin and finish many a good work; even as he laid the foundation, and will in due time bring forth "the headstone," of his church.—In the mean while, may we first give diligence to obtain the assurance, that we are a part of the spiritual building; that we may both witness and partake of the blessing, when the whole company of heaven shall exclaim, "Grace, grace, unto it." Having this assurance, whatever we are called to engage in, for the honour of God and the good of the church, let us use every means diligently, but trust only in the Lord. Let us not be discouraged by mountains in the way, for faith and prayer will not fail to remove them; and let us hope for a happy event to all our endeavours. Nor let us "despise the day of small things," either in respect of ourselves or others: for our God commonly produces great effects from small beginnings. Rather let us be thankful for every little hope, help, or success, or any little good done by us; let us rejoice to see instruments made active in the Lord's work, either in the magistracy, the ministry, or any other way. Especially let us fix our faith on Christ, and joyfully view him carrying on his work according to his own glorious plan, and daily bringing his spiritual edifice nearer to its completion; while the omnipresent and omniscient providence of God concurs with his grace, in perfecting the great design. Beholding him as our Priest upon the throne; let us seek through his intercession and of his royal bounty, supplies from that fulness, which has hitherto sufficed for all his saints and servants, according to their trials and employments; let us wait on him in all his ordinances, expecting communications of his Spirit; and thus let us hope to be sanctified wholly "in body, soul, and spirit;" "for faithful is he that hath promised, who also will do it."

NOTES.—CHAP. V. V. 1-4. The preceding visions were replete with encouragement to the pious rulers and people of Judah; but these bear a gloomy aspect, both towards obstinate sinners, and towards the whole nation in process of time.—The prophet's attention was called to "a flying roll." He saw several skins of parchment, or other materials of which rolls for writing were made, joined together and written upon, flying in the air; which seemed to him to be above ten yards long and five yards wide; and his divine Instructor informed him, that they represented "the curse," which would go "through the whole land" against all the wicked. (Marg. Ref. a-d. Notes, Is. 8:1-4, v. 1. Jer. 36:1-3,8-10,20-25,32. Ez. 2:9,10. Rev. 5:1-4.)—The Lord "would bring it forth," as the rule of judgment; and he would deal with every one according to it. So that the thief, being condemned by one part of it, would be cut off according to it; the perjured person, being condemned by another part of it, would be cut off according to it; and in like manner, with other criminals. For the curse would enter into the house of the thief, the perjured person, &c. and abide there till it had destroyed all the riches, comfort, and credit of him and his family; even as if it had consumed the stones and timber of his habitation. (*Marg. (3) "Holdeth guiltless guiltless." Marg. Not being detected in his perjury and dishonesty, and so escaping punishment from man; the thief and the perjured person would be emboldened to expect impunity, and to plead not guilty to every charge; but the curse of God would pursue and overtake him. (Note, Deut. 27:15.)—The large size of the roll might intimate, that it not only contained all the curses written in the law and denounced by the prophets, but also an account of all the sins of those, against whom it was sent forth: its "flying" might signify, that it continually *every one that ^{stealeth} shall be cut off ^{as} on this side, according to it; and every one that ^{sweareth} shall be cut off ^{as} on that side, according to it.

4 I will bring it forth, saith the LORD of hosts, and it shall enter into the house of the thief, and into the house of him that sweareth falsely by my name: and it shall remain in the midst of his house, and shall consume it with the timber thereof and the stones thereof.

hovered over the heads of the impenitent, and would speedily fall upon them; and the two crimes of theft and false swearing, might be mentioned as a compendium of the two tables of the law. (*Marg. V. 5-11. This vision seems to be a prediction of the present state of the Jewish nation. Their prosperity would indeed be restored for some ages; but they would at length "fill up the measure" of their iniquity, and be exposed to a far heavier and more durable calamity than the Babylonish captivity. The prophet, being again directed by his divine Instructor to look up, and see what went forth; (that is, from the counsels and decrees of God, before concealed but thus revealed;) he was shown an ephah, or a measure about the size of a bushel: and he was told, that "this was their resemblance through all the earth," or "the land" of Judah. This was the form in which this ephah was made: "yet it was of a much bigger size, large enough to contain a woman in it; which was the reason Zechariah did not know what it was." mouth. On the top of the ephah was suspended a talent of lead, as a ponderous cover for it. In the ephah sat a woman, the emblem of the Jewish nation: and the angel cast something into the measure, which he told the prophet was "wickedness;" denoting that he kept an exact account of their sins, and would put them all with the nation into the measure, and only bear with the people till that should be full; for the emblem requires, and the language implies, that the wickedness put into the ephah, should be considered as distinct from the woman. At length, the weight of lead was cast on the mouth of the ephah, by which the woman that sat in it, and the wickedness cast into it, would both be so closed up, as no more to be extricated. This seems to mean the condemnation of the Jews, after they had filled up the measure of their iniquities, by crucifying Christ and rejecting his gospel. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. m-o. Notes, Gen. 15:16. Matt. 23:29-36. 1 Thes. 2:13-16.) The "two women with wings like a stork, and the wind in their wings," seem to have been emblematic of the Roman armies and their rapid conquests, coming speedily at the call of Christ, to execute his righteous sentence on that devoted nation. And the lifting up of the ephah, and carrying it away through the air, to build it a house in Shinar, or Babylon, where it was to be fixed on its own base, so that its condition would for a very long time remain unaltered, represents the taking of Jerusalem, the dispersion of the Jews like that made by the Babylonish captivity, and the long continuance of that calamity; as the just punishment of their sins, and by reason of their obstinate unbelief and rejection of Christ, to cleave to the works of their abrogated law, and the superstitious traditions of their elders.—It is observable that the word "Shinar" signifies shaking out, and gives weight to this interpretation, which, in the grand outlines, seems very clear and satisfactory. "The meaning of the vision seems to be, that the Babylonish captivity had happened, on account of the wickedness committed by the Jews; and that a like dispersion would befall them, if they relapsed into like crimes." Bp. Newcombe.—The language also implies, that it would be far more durable. (Marg. Ref. p-s. Notes, Gen. 49:10. Deut. 28:49-59. Dan. 9:25-27. Hos. 3:4, 5. Am. 9:1-4. Luke 21:20-24, v. 24.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The full discoveries of the free and abundant grace of the gospel, and the greatest encouragements given to repentance, faith, and evangelical obedience, tend to aggravate the guilt, and enhance the punishment, of those "who go on still in their

9 Then lifted I ^{up} mine eyes and looked, and behold, there came out two women, and the wind was in their wings; and they had wings like the wings of a stork: and they lifted up the ephah between the earth and the heaven.

11 And he said unto me, "To build it a house in the land of Shinar: and it shall be established, and set there upon her own base."

wickedness."—The tremendous curses of God's word go forth "over the face of the whole earth" (Notes, Luke 21:34-36. 1 Thes. 5:1-3.) and they are continually falling upon the heads of the unjust and profane, according to the things written in the book of the law; and in the book of God's omniscience, who will never forget any of their works.—While men seek to enrich their families by fraud, rapine, oppression, perjury, or other crimes; they open their doors, and bring a curse into their habitations along with their ill-gotten gains; and it will there remain, to the ruin of their substance, and the impoverishing of their posterity: while another part of the same curse will rest on their souls, and sink them into everlasting punishment.—As we are all transgressors of the law, so we cannot escape this wrath of God, except we "flee for refuge to lay hold on the hope set before us in the gospel." To give us space for this, the Lord endures our provocations with much longsuffering; but there is an appointed measure for every individual, (as well as for every nation,) in which he sits, and into which all his wickedness is cast: and when he has filled this measure, the Lord will shut him up under his heavy wrath, as with a talent of lead, and commission the executioners of his vengeance to carry him to his own place, there to assign him his "long home," far from the city of our God, and among his enemies, as "a vessel of wrath fitted for destruction." There will be "established on his own base," and continue for ever a hater of God and his holiness, and an object of his unchangeable and hot displeasure. Let sinners then fear "to treasure up wrath against this day of wrath;" for the more they multiply their crimes, the faster the measure fills: let them especially take heed not to oppose, despise, or neglect the great salvation of the gospel; for this, above all other sins, hastens and ratifies the tremendous sentence: and whilst the day continues, "Let the wicked forsake his ways, and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return to the LORD, and he will have mercy upon him; and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon."

NOTES.—CHAP. VI. V. 1-8. "The two brazen mountains may be merely an ornamental part of the vision; or they may denote God's firm and immutable decrees by which he governs the earth. "His righteousness is like great mountains." Bp. Newcombe. The emphasis laid on "the mountains" being "mountains of brass," sufficiently proves that something essential to the vision was intended. (Marg. Ref. c. Notes, Ps. 33:10-12. 36:5-9. v. 5, 6. Prov. 21:30. Ec. 3:12-15. Is. 14:24-27. 46:10, 11. Eph. 1:9-12. 3:9-12, v. 11.) The four chariots are generally interpreted of the four great monarchies, the Chaldean, Persian, Grecian, and Roman, which successively executed God's purposes of justice and mercy. As the red horses mentioned at first are afterwards omitted; it is supposed to be intimated, that the first of those monarchies was already subverted; and the bay horses, which are first joined with the grisled, but afterwards mentioned separately, are supposed to denote the Goths, Vandals, and other barbarous nations which subverted the Roman empire. But the reasons assigned for the different colours of the horses, from the different complexions (so to speak) of these monarchies, do not give entire satisfaction. Certainly the Persian monarchy was more favourable to the Jews, than any of the others; and it does not seem to have been more fatal to other nations. And whatever favours Alexander the Great showed to the Jews; the sufferings of that nation, under some of his successors, especially Antiochus Epiphanes, exceeded all which they endured, from the Babylonish captivity till the coming of Christ. The "white horses," therefore, are not in this respect, a proper emblem of the Grecian empire. Nor does it appear, for what end the Chal-

CHAPTER VII.

The Jews inquire concerning the observance of certain appointed fasts, 1-8. The prophet reproves them for not regarding God in their fasting, 9c-4-7. He warns them not to copy the obstinacy and rebellion of their fathers, and exhorts them to practise justice and mercy, 8-14.

AND it came to pass in 'the fourth year of 'king Darius, that the word of the LORD came unto Zechariah, in the fourth day of the ninth month, even in 'Chisleu;

2 When 'they had sent unto the house of God, Sherezer, and Regem-melech, and their men, 'to 'pray before the LORD,

3 And to 'speak unto the priests which were in the house of the LORD of hosts, and to the prophets, saying, 'Should I weep in the 'fifth month, 'separating myself, as I have done these so many years?

4 'Then came the word of the LORD of hosts unto me, saying, and priesthood in Christ. The former had been confined to the family of David, the latter to that of Aaron; from them Zerubbabel and Joshua were risen, and they concurred in building the temple. But One would at length arise, "after the order of Melchizedek," who would be a Priest upon a throne, and unite the two distinct offices in his single person, of which the crowning of Joshua was a type. As a Priest, he would offer an atoning sacrifice, and expiate sin, and then make intercession for sinners: as a King, he would rule, enact laws, execute judgment, conquer and destroy his enemies; protect and exalt his people; and thus "the counsel of peace" would be accomplished by this union of the two offices in our Prince of peace. (Marg. Ref. d. Notes, 4:11-14, v. 14. Ps. 85:9-13. Mic. 5:3-6, vv. 4, 5. Rom. 5:1, 2. Eph. 2:14-18. Col. 1:18-20.) And, as the prophets were always cordial helpers to the pious kings and priests, in the execution of their offices: so the prophetic office of Christ makes him known in his kingly and priestly office. This was understood of the Messiah in the days of our Saviour. 'Herod . . . had a mind to be thought the Messiah; his flatterers would put this thought into his head, who from thence were called the Herodians, (Matt. 22:16.) as many of the ancient writers suppose. This put him upon rebuilding the temple.' Louth.

V. 14, 15. After these crowns had been put on the head of Joshua, they were to be placed in the temple for 'a memorial' of the transaction, and of the piety of those men, who had presented the gold of which they were made.—'Helem' seems to have been the same person as Heldaï, and 'Hen, the son of Zephaniah,' as Josiah. (10) Perhaps these names were inscribed on the crowns. And, as they came from a great distance to bring this oblation, so it was foretold, that they who were far off, would "come and build in the temple of the LORD," either as instruments in the hands of the great Builder, or as coming to be made a part of the spiritual building. Thus they would know the truth of the prophet's mission. (Marg. Ref. g-h. Notes, 2:10-13, v. 11. 8:20-23. Is. 56:3-8. 60:10-14. 1 Cor. 3:10-15. Eph. 2:19-22. 1 Pet. 1:4-6.)—Some reference may be had to the assistance afforded by the Jews who lived in distant countries, and even by Gentile princes, in building the material temple: but this typified the calling of the Gentiles into the church, and the usefulness of many Gentile converts in promoting its extent, purity, and prosperity. These things would come to pass, "if they diligently obeyed the voice of the LORD," &c. (Marg. Ref. i. Notes, 3:6, 7. Is. 58:3-12.)—'And ye, of the Jewish nation, shall be first sharers in the benefits arising from Christ's kingdom and priesthood, (and then those "that are far off," if you diligently hearken to the voice of God speaking to you, both by his prophets and by his Son.' Louth. (Note, Acts 13:42-48.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

All the diversified events, that take place in the world, spring from the unchangeable counsels of God, which are formed in unerring wisdom, and perfect justice, truth, and goodness. "His counsel shall stand and he will do all his pleasure;" and none can stay his hand, or say to him, What doest thou?" (Num. Dan. 4:34-37.) He might justly fill the earth with unmingled woe: but he moderates the severity of his vengeance, as far as consists with the honour of his justice, and when his judgments have "quieted his spirit," as provoked by man's daring rebellions.—The holy angels delight in executing his mandates, whether of wrath or of mercy. While they seek to go forth, they wait his orders and exactly conform to his will; and, as we hope shortly to be equal to them, we should now study and copy their examples.—If insuperable hinderances prevent men from giving personal assistance to pious and good designs; it is well, if they are willing to contribute towards them from their substance; and, when such services spring from faith and love, they will remain for "a memorial" to their benefit in the temple of the LORD above. Yet nothing can be accepted from sinners, but what is presented in dependence on Christ, our Priest and King. 'For us men and for our Salvation he came down from heaven, and became incarnate, and grew as a Branch out of a dry ground, till he arose to his pre-eminent dignity and glory; showing us, that humiliation and self-abasement are the first steps towards true glory and honour. To him, the great Builder, as well as Foundation, of the temple, all the glory belongs, and shall be rendered for ever. We must both submit to him as our King, trust in him as our Priest, and give him all the glory of our salvation; if we would have the new covenant ratified with us, and its blessed peace communicated to our hearts and consciences. Let us not think of separating what God has joined together in his "counsel of peace;" for we cannot obey Christ as our King, unless we come to God by him as our Priest; nor come to God by him as our Priest, if we refuse to have him reign over us as our King. We have heard the gospel of peace, through the blood of his cross, in these distant regions; but are we come to him and built on him, as a part of his spiritual temple; or are we yet the palace of Satan? (Note, Luke 11:24-26, vv. 21, 22.) Are we endeavouring to promote the purity and prosperity of this temple; or do we defile it by our sins? Certainly we can have no comfortable ground to think our peace is made with God, unless we diligently endeavour to obey his voice, and keep his commandments.

NOTES.—CHAP. VII. V. 1. This transaction occurred above two years after the visions recorded in the foregoing chapters: but the prophet doubtless continued to instruct and exhort the people during that time, though none of his predictions were recorded.—'Chisleu,' the "ninth month," answered to part of November and part of December. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 2, 3. 'The verb in the Hebrew is singular, "He had sent," but our interpreters render it plurally, by an enallage of the number, which is frequent in the Hebrew; and the vulgar Latin interprets it to the same sense. According to this syntax, the words might be as well translated thus, "When Sharezer, and Regem-melech, and their men, had sent unto the house of God." These probably were men of some note among the Jews that still continued at Babylon.' Louth.—Either the Jews in Chaldea, or those in Judah, sent the persons here mentioned, with their attendants, to the temple; both to offer prayers in their behalf, and to propose a question to the priests and prophets, concerning some fasts which they had been used to observe. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. c, d. Notes, 6:10, 11. Ezra, 6:6-12. See on Note, Hag. 2:10-14, v. 11.) They kept an annual fast in the fourth month, in remembrance of the breaking down of the wall of Jerusalem; (2 Kings 25:3, 4.) another in the fifth month, in remembrance of the burning of the temple; (2 Kings 25:8, 9.) another in the seventh month on the day on which Gedaliah was slain; (2 Kings 25:25.) and another in the tenth month, because at that time the siege of the city was begun. (8:19. 2 Kings 25:1.) But the Jews now questioned, whether they ought to continue the observance of these fasts, seeing the city and temple were both in part rebuilt and likely to be completed.—They had wept for their sins, and separated themselves from food and ordinary recreations and employments, that they might spend the day in devotions; and they had persevered in it for many years: but must they still continue thus to employ and deny themselves? (Marg. Ref. f, h.)

V. 4-7. Whoever originally proposed the question before stated, it evidently concerned the whole nation; and therefore God sent his prophet to the people and priests on the occasion.—The fasts, which they had observed, were not of divine appointment; though the observance of them would have been good, had they uprightly kept them. (Note, 2:3.) But they were not truly humbled or sorry for those sins, which had provoked the wrath of God against them; and, while they wept as sufferers, they did not submit to his jus-

7 Should ye not hear the words which the LORD hath meried by the former prophets when Jerusalem was inhabited and in prosperity, and the cities thereof round about her, when men inhabited the south and the plain?

8 And the word of the LORD came unto Zechariah, saying,

9 Thus speaketh the LORD of hosts, saying, Execute true judgment, and show mercy and compassions every man to his brother:

10 And oppress not the widow, nor the fatherless, the stranger, nor the poor; and let none of you imagine evil against his brother in your heart.

11 But they refused to hearken, and pulled away the shoulder, and stopped their ears, that they should not hear.

They were not truly penitent; they did not forsake their sins; the glory and favour of God were not their grand object; their fasting was the result of self-righteousness, or ostentation; or a matter of custom, a form, a compliance with human authority, out of regard to ease, interest, or reputation; and it had no salutary effects upon their temper and conduct: so that they pleased themselves as really, when they wept and fasted, as when they ate and drank in a sensual and ungodly manner. PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

If we earnestly desire to know the will of God in doubtful cases; we must not only consult his word and ministers, but seek his direction by fervent prayer.—Some duties are obligatory at all times, and others belong to special seasons. It behooves those who are suffering or trembling because of their sins, to weep and fast, and separate themselves from lawful pleasures, to attend to the great business of humbling themselves before God, and seeking forgiveness; and it is equally seasonable for those who have experienced signal deliverances and special tokens of his reconciling love, to abound in praise and in every expression of grateful joy. But most men rest in the outside of these religious exercises; and whether they fast and pray, or eat and drink, they do it to themselves, according to their own humour, or for their own honour, or interest, or quiet, in one way or other. Yet they are in general so pleased with their performances, that they think it a ground of murmuring and complaint, that God will not richly reward what they "did not at all to him," and what in fact he abhors, as the result of pride, selfishness, and hypocrisy! Nay, many who, with apparent conscientiousness inquire the truth and will of God, prove indisposed to embrace the one, or to practise the other. But the neglect of moral duties is as inconsistent with sincerity in religious observances, as the neglect of religion is inconsistent with the practice of morality, from a single eye to the glory and will of God. Our rule is, that "whether we eat or drink, or whatever we do, we do all to the glory of God;" and true Christians will aim to receive all with that thankfulness, and use all with that moderation, which may render even their meals honourable to his name: but they will be conscious, that they continually fall short of their rule, and need forgiveness in every thing. What then must be the case with numbers, whose very religion is as selfish as their "banquetings and revellings"?—Willful disobedience mars the prosperity of cities, and of apparently flourishing churches; and no mourning or fasting, under public or personal rebukes, will prove of real use, except the ground of the Lord's controversy be removed. In this all his servants, in every age and under every dispensation, are agreed.—Except magistrates "execute true judgment," and private persons do justice and show mercy and compassions to their brethren; except they cease to "oppress the widow, the fatherless, the strangers," and the poor of every name or nation; except men repress their resentments, and no longer "imagine evil against their brethren in their hearts;" they evidently refuse to hearken to the warnings of God's word, and to bear the yoke of his commandments; they increase the natural hardness of their stony hearts, by resisting convictions, and indulging their prejudices and passions, "lest they should hear the law and the words of the LORD by his Spirit in his prophets;" and they cannot expect that even their prayers will turn away the great wrath of God from them. He indeed always readily hears the cry of the broken-hearted penitent: yet it will soon come to pass, in respect of all who die impenitent and unbelieving, that, "as he cried, and they would not hear, so they will cry and he will not hear" or help them. And then there will be no remedy or refuge from those miseries, which here they despised and defied, but which they then will not be able to endure.

2 Thus saith the LORD of hosts; ¹I was jealous for Zion with great jealousy, and ²I was jealous for her with great fury.

3 Thus saith the LORD; ¹I am returned unto Zion, and will dwell in the midst of Jerusalem: and Jerusalem shall be called ²a city of truth; and the mountain of the LORD of hosts, ³The holy mountain.

4 Thus saith the LORD of hosts; ¹There shall yet old men and old women dwell in the streets of Jerusalem, and every man with his staff in his hand for ²very age.

5 And the streets of the city shall be full of boys and girls, ³playing in the streets thereof.

6 Thus saith the LORD of hosts; If it be ¹marvellous in the eyes of the remnant of this people in these days, ²should it also be marvellous in thine eyes? saith the LORD of hosts.

7 Thus saith the LORD of hosts; Behold, ¹I will save my people from the east country, and from the ²west country;

8 And I will bring them, ³and they shall dwell in the midst of Jerusalem: ⁴and they shall be my people, and I will be their God, in truth and in righteousness.

9 ¹Thus saith the LORD of hosts; ²Let your hands be strong, ye that hear in these days these words by the mouth of ³the prophets, which ⁴were in the day ¹that the foundation of the house of the LORD of hosts was laid, that the temple might be built.

10 For ¹before these days ²there was no hire for man, nor any hire for beast; ³neither was ⁴there any peace to him that went out or came in, because of the affliction: ⁵for I set all men every one against his neighbour.

11 But now ¹I will not be unto the residue of this people as in the former days, saith the LORD of hosts.

12 For ¹the seed shall be ²prosperous; the vine shall give her fruit, and the ground shall give her increase, and ³the heavens shall give their dew: and I will cause ⁴the remnant of this people ⁵to possess all these things.

13 And it shall come to pass, ¹that as ye were ²a curse among the heathen, ³O house of Judah, and house of Israel; so will I save you, ⁴and ye shall be a blessing: ⁵fear not, ⁶but let your hands be strong.

14 For thus saith the LORD of hosts; ¹As I thought to punish you, when your fathers provoked me to wrath, saith the LORD of hosts, ²and I repented not:

15 So again ¹have I thought in these days to do well unto Jerusalem and to the house of Judah: ²fear ye not. [Practical Observations.]

NOTES.—CHAP. VIII. V. 2. The Lord had been exceedingly jealous for his people, and displeased with their oppressors; (Marg. Ref. Note, 1:14-17.) and he had already in part avenged them on the Chaldeans and his other enemies, with great fury.—This is the general interpretation; but perhaps the verse in the connexion in which it here stands, has another meaning.—“I have been jealous against Zion, with a vehement jealousy; and I have been angry against her with great fury.” Zion, the church of the Jews, acted as an adulterous wife; and the calamities which she had endured, were the effects of the Lord’s jealousy and indignation: but he was now about to return to her in mercy.—The construction of the original, which is required for this interpretation, and is objected to by Bp. Newcombe, is exactly the same as in Ps. 106:16.

Rev. 21:1-4.—A city, &c.* That is, a city in which divine truth was known and believed; the true God worshipped in the appointed manner, and in sincerity; and where fidelity, as well as justice and equity, was practised among men. This primarily related to the state of Jerusalem, as reformed by Zerubbabel, Joshua, Ezra, Nehemiah, and others: yet it was typical of the Christian church consisting of true believers, which alone can fully answer to these characters. V. 4, 5. These verses are beautifully descriptive of a state of great outward tranquillity, attended with plenty, temperance, and contentment. The inhabitants of the city are supposed to live to extreme old age, and to walk cheerfully and without fear in the streets; whilst their numerous descendants being healthful and lively, free from want, fear, or sorrow, amicably engage in their childish diversions on every side of them: a sight extremely pleasing to those aged spectators. V. 9-15. The Jews who had heard and obeyed the words of Haggai and Zechariah, when they called them to build the temple, were encouraged to proceed in that good work with vigour and alacrity. While this had been neglected, there had been no profitable employment for those who endeavoured to subsist by the labour of their hands, or by that of their cattle; nor could they travel from place to place in safety, because of the calamities of the times; for the Lord had been provoked to leave them exposed to their enemies, and even let them loose to quarrel with each other. The lands should bring forth abundance, and they should possess it in peace; and the heathen who had deemed them a contemptible, wretched, and accursed people, and treated them accordingly, beholding their wonderful deliverances and prosperity, should consider them as an honourable and happy nation. For, as nothing could prevent the execution of his purposed wrath upon their fathers; so nothing should interrupt the course of his promised mercy towards them. (Marg. Ref. r-x. Notes, Gen. 26:12. Ref. a. Notes, 20-23. Gen. 12:1-3, v. 2. Is. 19:23-25.)—The mentioning of both Judah and Israel, which had been so long separated, shows that both the curse and the blessing here spoken of, in the ultimate sense, belong to the whole body of the Jews; who, as they are a public instance of God’s judgments now, so shall they hereafter be of his blessings; viz. at the general restoration and conversion of that nation? Louth.—It may be added, that this event will be “as life from the dead” to all the nations, and the Jews shall then indeed be a blessing to mankind at large.—Ye were a curse, &c. (13) *Marg. While the Jews had neglected the truths of God's words, and his true worship; and while they deceived, defrauded, and quarrelled with each other, God had given them occasion for mournful fasts; but he had now promised to change those into cheerful feasts; and he therefore exhorted them to "love the truth and peace," as the proper method of perpetuating their comforts and mercies. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 7:2-7. Ez. 36:25-27. Luke 1:67-75, vv. 74, 75. Tit. 2:11-14.)

V. 20-23. "These verses refer to the great accession of converts, which the Jewish church received, between the captivity, and the coming of Christ; to the number of Christian disciples which the Jewish preachers made; and to the future conversions of which the restoration of the Jews will be an eminent cause." Bp. Newcombe.—Notwithstanding all the miseries that the Jews had long endured, and the approach and weakness which still attended them: it would at length "come to pass," that "people," or peoples, from many cities, would come to court their friendship. For the inhabitants of one city should go to those of another, purposely to persuade them to go with them without delay, "to pray before JEHOVAH" the God of Israel, and to seek his favour, each individual purposing to accompany them in so doing. In this manner "many peoples," yea, "strong nations," would come to Jerusalem to seek and worship JEHOVAH, and to lay hold "on the skirt of a Jew; a gesture naturally used to entreat assistance and protection." Bp. Newcombe. (Marg. Ref. z. Note, Is. 4:1.) For they had heard that God was in an especial manner present with that people. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes. 2:10, 13. v. 11. 14:16-19. Josh. 2:8-16. Ruth 1:16, 17. 2:11, 12. Ps. 22:27, 28. 72:17-19. 117: Is. 2:2-5. 11:10. 60:14-14. Jer. 16:19-21. v. 19. Hos. 1:8-10. Mal. 1:9-11. v. 11. Matt. 1:20-23. 8:10-12. Acts 15:13-18. Rom. 11:11-15. 15:8-13. 1 Cor. 14:20-25, vv. 24, 25. Rev. 11:15-18.)—This is indeed a clear prediction of the most extraordinary and unlikely event, which, at the time when Zechariah delivered it, could be imagined; namely, that many nations, powerful nations, renowned for arts and arms, for civilization and philosophy; nations, which had successively subjugated and oppressed Israel; nations, which had despised and ridiculed, with unbounded scorn, the worshippers of JEHOVAH, would at length learn religion from that very people!—The Jews, when prosperous in their own land, were exceedingly prone to embrace the idolatries of the surrounding nations: what then could be more improbable, or more contrary to general observation, than that, after they had been crushed and enslaved, by successive conquerors, they should at length become teachers of religion to their oppressors, and to the nations of the earth? Yet this is expressly foretold: with emphatical repetition and variation of circumstances!—The term "Jew," or Judean, became the more general national appellation, from the Babylonish captivity: and we have had repeated occasions to remark, that the prophets foretold the conversion of the Gentiles, in language taken from the stated religious worship of their own times. (Notes, Is. 66: 19-23. Ez. 40:2.) It is therefore here evidently foretold, (Marg. Ref. x.) that at least ten times as many Gentiles would be converted to the true religion, as there were Jews, properly so called, among them at the time when the prophecy should begin to be fulfilled.—The astonishing interposition of God in behalf of his people, at Babylon and Susa, &c. (Esth. 3:-9. Dan. 2:-6): and the translation of the Scriptures into Greek, and the wide dispersion of them in that language, no doubt had considerable effects; but effects far beneath the language here used. For this certainly can mean nothing less, than that many powerful nations, of all languages, would renounce idolatry and become the worshippers of the God of the Jews, and learn the way of salvation from them, with the grand peculiarities of their religion: and that they would look up to the Jews, as a people peculiarly blessed by the presence and favour of God, and press with great earnestness to share their privileges. This and indeed much more is foretold: and accordingly it is an undeniable fact, that Greece and Rome, Egypt, and very great multitudes in Assyria, Persia, renowned countries both in the east and the west, by the propagation of the gospel, renounced their idols, became the worshippers of JEHOVAH, and took the Jewish Scriptures as his sacred oracles. In process of time, whole nations embraced Christianity; and all the knowledge of the true God, and of true religion in the world, is derived from Judah, by the Saviour, "the Light of the Gentiles, and the Glory of his people Israel," originally through the writings and preaching of prophets, apostles, and evangelists, who were of the stock of Israel: nor is there the least genuine knowledge of the one living and true God in the world at this day, which may not be traced back to that source, and that method of communication. And, no doubt, when the Lord shall render his cause universally triumphant, all the ministers will draw their instructions from the Scriptures of the Old and New Testament, nearly the whole of which, excepting the book of Job, and probably the gospel of Luke, and the Acts of the Apostles, (Preface to Luke), were written by the descendants of Israel. For, though it pleased God to employ Gentile converts, as preachers, pastors, and teachers in the primitive times: yet none (except Luke) were honoured as writers in the New Testament. And it is highly probable indeed, there can scarcely be a doubt that numbers of the converted Jews will be employed and greatly prospered, in the future conversion of the Gentiles. Hitherto, however, the prophecy has been most wonderfully and exactly accomplished, and future events will no doubt throw still more abundant light upon it.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-15. The unchangeable love of God, and his faithful engagements to his people, form their only and their sufficient security, that no enemy shall prevail against them, or injure them with impunity: and his gracious presence with his church, and that alone, renders her worthy to be called, "the city of truth and the mountain of holiness."—Godliness and honesty conduce exceedingly to peace and prosperity, in cities and nations. It is beautiful to behold the old and young living amicably and comfortably together; and we ought to be thankful to behold our children healthful and cheerful, and engaged in those diversions which suit their tender age, without any cause of terror or complaint; but it is most desirable to see "young men and maids, old men and children," with one accord joining in the worship and service of God, as citizens of the heavenly Jerusalem. If, in the present low state of vital godliness, we can scarcely conceive how so entire a change can be effected, as to render it general all over the earth: let us not conclude that it cannot be: for it is "no marvellous thing in the eyes of the LORD," that a revolution thus extensive and glorious should be effected; and the almighty power of his new creating Spirit could produce it in less time than he was pleased to employ in creating the world. When he pleases thus to work, he will save multitudes in all parts of the earth, and they will become citizens of his holy city, and his obedient people; and he will be "their God in truth and righteousness;" for while he performs his promises, and makes them partakers of his salvation; they will learn "to serve him in righteousness and true holiness." Let then the hands of all those be strong, who are labouring to promote the cause of the gospel; for, while they attend to the words of his prophets and apostles, they may be sure that their labour will not be in vain. But let us not forget, that we best consult our own interest, by giving the service of God a decided priority in our choice and endeavours. (Note, Matt. 6:33, 34.) When he is provoked by men's procrastination or negligence, he can cause trade to decay, and peace to remove, and "set every man against his neighbour:" but when he returns in mercy, peace and plenty result from his smile, and they become most prosperous, honoured, and happy, who were most abject and miserable. (Note and P. O. Ps. 107:33—43.)

V. 16—23. While we rely on the Lord's promises, we ought also to consider what are the things which we ought to do. Surely Christians should remember the exhortation to "put away lying, and to speak every man truth with his neighbour;" to execute the judgments of truth and peace, to abhor all malice, fraud, and perjury; to hate what the Lord hates, and to love that in which he delights! When they thus serve him, and he turns their mourning for sin into joy and gladness; when divine ordinances become their "cheerful feasts," and they evidently "love truth and peace;" they appear amiable, excellent, wise, and happy; "their light shines before men;" they "adorn" and recommend "the doctrine of God our Saviour," and convince all around them that the Lord is with them of a truth; and thus supported and elevated, a cottage, a dungeon, a death-bed, a fiery furnace, or a lion's den may be the scene of great peace and enjoyment. In this way the ancient servants of God attracted the attention and admiration of their heathen neighbours: thus they softened their prejudices, and insinuated themselves into their affections, whilst they saw "what manner of men they were among them for their sakes;" and so Christianity has diffused its blessed influence through many powerful and prosperous nations. The same cause would again produce the same effect; and when Christians shall generally cease from their sharp contentions, renounce unscriptural tenets and practices, and show their "love of truth and peace" in the whole tenor of their conduct; we may expect a far more extensive promulgation of true religion, than any which yet has taken place. In the mean time let us stir up ourselves and each other, to "go and pray before the Lord," and seek his face: let us strive to make known his truth in dark places, and to give weight to exhortation by example. And let not Britons forget, while they thankfully rejoice in their peculiar privileges, and are themselves living witnesses of the fulfilment, in their case, of this ancient prophecy, how deeply all, of every rank and station, are indebted to the ancestors of the dispersed and too generally despised Jews. That distinguished nation has been, and will be, "a blessing" to the nations of the earth, and should be loved and honoured for their fathers' sake; who, as it were, call upon us to make grateful returns for our immense obligations to them, by attempting, in every scriptural and practicable way, as well as constantly and earnestly praying for, the conversion of their descendants to their divine Messiah.

NOTES.—CHAP. IX. V. 1. This chapter begins another prophecy, which reaches to the end of the eleventh; and it opens with predictions of judgments upon several nations, bordering upon the Jews. This "burden of the word of the Lord" first related to Hadrach: Syria is doubtless intended; but it is not certain whether Hadrach was the name of some idol, or of some district in Syria; or for what reason it was thus called. This burden, however, would fall and rest on Damascus, the capital of Syria. (Marg. Ref. a—c. Notes, Is. 9:8—12, v. 8. 17:1—3. Jer. 49:23—27. Am. 1:3—5.) The prophecy was fulfilled by Alexander, who seized on immense riches in that city, and by his successors who governed it as conquerors: but it is not foretold of Damascus, as of Tyre, that the city should be destroyed: (4) and accordingly it is still a considerable city, and probably the most ancient city in the world. (Gen. 14:15. 15:2.) These events would take place, "when the eyes of man, as of all the tribes of Israel, should be toward the Lord;" which may denote, that these troubles would continue till the coming of Christ, when the eyes of men in general, as those of all the tribes of Israel, should be fixed upon the true God, expecting help and salvation from him: and it might intimate, that the Syrians would not be delivered, till they were converted to Christianity, and became worshippers of Israel's God. (Marg. Ref. d. Notes, 8:20—23. Is. 17:4—8, v. 7, 8. Jer. 16:9—21, v. 19.) Or, that this burden would rest on Damascus, "when the eyes of men, even of all the tribes of Israel, would be towards the Lord;" by whom they would be protected when their neighbours were reduced. When the Jews saw the conqueror approach, they looked to God and implored his protection: and Jaddua, the high-priest, met Alexander in his pontifical robes, who received him very graciously. (Note, Dan. 8:5—7.)—Some learned men have endeavoured to show, that this and the two following chapters were not written by Zechariah, but before his time. Their arguments, however, do not bring any degree of conviction, to my mind at least. They urge, that it was not at all likely for Zechariah to predict the destruction of the temple, when encouraging the Jews to build it; (Note, 11:1—3.) but did not God, by Moses, predict the dispersion of Israel, while encouraging them to go up and possess the promised land? (Deut. 28:—32.) Did not the Lord foretell to Solomon the destruction of the temple, through the sins of the people, even when it had just before been dedicated? (Note, 1 Kings 9:7—9.) And did not Daniel, a considerable time before Zechariah began to prophesy, foretell the destruction of Jerusalem and the temple, and the judgments of God on his people within seventy weeks: on the very day, when his prayer was heard for the rebuilding of the temple, and the restoration of Jerusalem? (Note, Dan. 9:25—27, v. 27.) It is certain, that Tyre was very affluent and powerful, when Alexander the great took and destroyed it: and why should that judgment, and not the desolations by Nebuchadnezzar, be predicted? The arguments, indeed, adduced in favour of this opinion, would not have been much noticed, had they not been sanctioned by eminent names: but one thing above all others satisfies my mind, that the opinion is unfounded; namely, they who do not allow that Zechariah delivered these predictions, are not agreed to whom they should be ascribed, or what date to assign them. Some argue that Jeremiah was the writer of them; but others carry back many parts of them to a far earlier period. In fact, the whole book has been ascribed to Zechariah by the Jews, in every age: and it is rather remarkable, that learned men, who frequently suppose errors of transcribers, and propose conjectural amendments, should be influenced, by what probably was an error of a transcriber, (Notes, 11:12—14. Matt. 27:6—10, v. 9.) to assign part of this book to Jeremiah, or to some preceding prophet, contrary to the constant tradition both of the Jewish and Christian Church.

V. 2—4. Hamath bordered on Syria on the one hand, and Tyre and Zidon on the other; and they would share her burden. (Marg. Ref. e—g.) The Tyrians deemed themselves exceedingly wise. (Note, Ez. 28:2—5.) They had strongly fortified the city upon the island, since Nebuchadnezzar had destroyed that upon the continent; and they were become extremely rich by their industry and commerce. But the Lord meant to reject and impoverish them, and to destroy the strong holds which were built in the sea, as well as their naval force; and to burn the city with fire. This was fulfilled by Alexander. (Notes, Is. 23: Ez. 26: 27: 28: 29: 17—20. Am. 1:9, 10.) "New Tyre was built on an island, at the distance of half a mile from the shore: so its situation was very strong; and it was fortified with a wall round it one hundred and fifty feet high. . . . By her merchandise she had gained immense riches. . . . The Carthaginians shall not be able to assist her with their naval forces." Isaiah.—"Her power in the sea" may signify the strength of her insular situation: and this distinguishes the Tyre taken by Alexander, from that destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar. (Note, Ez. 26:14.)—The carnage made by Alexander, when he took Tyre, the multitudes sold for slaves, and likewise the entire desolations of the city, fix the fulfilment of the prophecy to the latter event; and the fall of Tyre would of course prove ruinous to Zidon. (Marg. Ref. i—n.)

V. 5, 6. The Philistines having witnessed the desolations of Tyre and Zidon, would be greatly alarmed and distressed even in their principal cities. Perhaps they had hoped, that Tyre would stop and terminate the progress of Alexander's victories, and that they should escape; but they would be made "ashamed of these expectations," and find themselves exposed without defence to the power of the conqueror. Then the king would be destroyed at Gaza; Ashkelon would be reduced to desolation; either some base person would be made ruler over Ashdod, or the city would be given to be Strabo, speaking of Gaza, . . . saith "It was formerly a city of note, but was destroyed by Alexander the great, and remains desert and uninhabited. . . . (Acts 8:26.)" Louth. When Gaza was thus taken and destroyed, the other cities of the Philistines fell into the hands of the conqueror, and probably experienced little favour from him; and especially some stranger, not a native of the country, had authority in Ashdod. 'The family of Israel shall dwell in Ashdod, who before were in it as strangers.' Chaldee paraph. quoted by Louth. The Maccabees conquered Ashdod; and the Philistines are not mentioned in the New Testament, but their country seems to have been possessed by the Jews.

V. 7. The Philistines, and other enemies of the Jews, would be deprived of their power to waste them any more; and the spoil, which they had taken by the most bloody and atrocious murders, or rapines, would be torn from them, as the prey from between the teeth of a wild beast. (Marg. Ref. t. Notes, 1 Sam. 17:34—37. Am. 3:9—15, v. 12.) Yet a remnant would embrace the true religion, and become the people of God devoted to his service; and they would be honoured even as "a governor in Judah," and the inhabitants of Ekron would be privileged as a Jebusite, or a citizen of Jerusalem; or as some Jebusites, whom David perhaps proselyted and incorporated among his people, when he took Jerusalem. Araunah, on whose thrashing-floor David was ordered to sacrifice, and on which the temple was afterwards built, was a Jebusite; but his conduct showed the spirit of a genuine Israelite. (Marg. Ref. u-y. Notes, 8:20—23. 2 Sam. 24:15—25. 1 Chr. 21:28—30. 22:1. Is. 19:23—25.) Many Philistines might be proselyted to the Jewish religion, at or after the times of the Maccabees; but their conversion to Christianity was principally intended.

V. 8. While the Macedonian conquerors were extending their ravages; and afterwards, while the successors of Alexander, who reigned in Syria and in Egypt, were continually marching their armies through Judea, in their wars with each other; the Lord promised to encamp round his temple to protect it from being plundered and destroyed: for he had seen the oppression of the Chaldeans and others, and he would watch over it to protect it from similar depredations. (Marg. Ref. z, a. Notes, 2:1—5. 7:14. 2 Kings 23:29—34. 2 Chr. 35:20—24. Dan. 11:5—30, 40—45.) Antiochus Epiphanes was permitted to profane the temple, and to persecute the Jews: but this was only for a short time, and not like the desolations of the Chaldeans; and it ended in the honour of the Jews, and the disgrace and ruin of their persecutors: so that no such oppressor as Nebuchadnezzar passed through them any more; that is, till after Christ was come and rejected, when they ceased to be the people of God. But the passage no doubt refers to events yet future, which will far more signally accomplish it. (Marg. Ref. b. Notes, Is. 51:21—23. 54:15—17. 60:15—22. Ez. 28:24—26. 34:23—31. 37:23—28. 39:23—29. V. 9, 10. 'From the promise, contained in the foregoing verse, of God's protecting his church and temple, the prophet, in a sudden transport, takes occasion to break forth into a joyful representation of the coming of the Messias. . . . "He is righteous and the Saviour." . . . The ancient Jews explained this prophecy of the Messias; and it is plain from the gospels, that the Jews in Christ's time understood it so. For when our Lord applied it to himself, by entering into Jerusalem upon an ass, it so affected the multitude, that they spread their garments and palm-branches in the way, as at the reception of some great prince: (Matt 21:8, 9.) nay, his disciples took occasion, from this sight, to rejoice and praise God with a loud voice.' Louth.—All the preceding deliverances of the Jews were types of the blessings to be conferred on the church under the reign of the Messias, or introductory to them. "The daughter of Zion" was therefore called on to rejoice greatly and shout for joy, because her long expected King was about to come unto her. (Marg. Ref. d, e. Notes, 2:10—13, v. 10. Gen. 49:10. Ps. 2:4—6. 21:1. 45:1—5, 9. 11. 96:11—13. Is. 9:6, 7. 12:4—6. 52:9, 10. 62:10—12. Jer. 23:5, 6. Zeph. 3:14—17.) When he appeared, he would be perfectly just and holy in his character and public administration; yea, he would honour the divine law and justice in the salvation of his people. Though the most honourable and mighty of all the kings and conquerors, who ever appeared on earth; he would display none of that magnificence and grandeur, by which they generally are distinguished. On the contrary, humility and lowliness would mark his deportment; poverty and outward meanness, his circumstances; and contempt and insult would be his lot on earth. On the single occasion, in which he would at all assume the character of a King; on the memorable occasion, when he would enter Jerusalem amidst the Hosannahs of the multitude, (which soon after as loudly demanded his crucifixion,) he would for once ride; not on a stately steed gorgeously caparisoned, or in a triumphal car; but on an unbroken untractable creature, an ass's colt; a proper emblem of the ungraceful nature of those, over whom he came to reign; but whom his powerful grace renders submissive and obedient; even as his miraculous energy made this animal go on undismayed and guidable, amidst the joyful acclamations of the surrounding multitudes. Even this "ass's colt" was not his own, as Man, but borrowed; nor was it fitly prepared to be ridden on, but merely with the clothes of the disciples cast loosely upon it. In every respect, the divine majesty and dignity of this King were contrasted with the unexampled manner in which he was received into the holy city, that was typically the capital of his mighty kingdom, (Marg. and Marg. Ref. f, g. Notes, Ps. 45:6, 7. 72:1—7. 85:10—13. Is. 11:2—5. 42:1—4. 45:23—25. 61:1—3. Matt. 1:22, 23. 11:28—30, v. 29. 12:14—21. 21:1—11. Mark 11:1—11. Luke 19:28—40. John 12:12—19. Rom. 3:19—26.) Then the Lord intended to deprive both Jews and Israelites of all carnal confidences; to terminate the contentions among such as submitted; and to destroy all the force and power of those, who rebelled against him. And at the same time he would send his gospel of peace among the heathen, reconciling them to God and to each other, and inducing them to submit to Messias's dominion; until it should at length extend, not only all over the land, but to the utmost borders of the earth. (Marg. Ref. h-k. Notes, Ps. 2:7—12. 46:8—10. 72:8—11. Is. 2:2—5. 57:19. Hos. 1:6, 7. Mic. 5:5, 6, 10—15. Hag. 2:20—23, v. 22. 2 Cor. 5:18—21. Eph. 2:14—18. Col. 1:15—20.) 'As horses are used in war, Christ may be supposed by this action to have shown the humble and peaceable nature of his kingdom. . . . Ephraim and Judah shall not engage in war to spread the Messias's kingdom; but their spiritual King shall peaceably convert the Gentiles, and shall extend his dominion every where.' Bp. Newcombe.—The beginning of the tenth verse may be rendered, "For I will cut off." &c. Both Israel and Judah had been exceedingly prone to rely on chariots and horses; but the ruin of these confidences, by the calamities of successive ages, would introduce the reign of that meek and righteous King and Saviour, who would enter Jerusalem riding on an ass's colt.—'By these places ("from sea to sea," &c.) he meant an infinite space and compass over the whole world.' (Marg. Ref. l, m.)

Having salvation. (9) "Saving himself." Marg. יָצַו. "By being saved." All the ancient versions render the word as our translators do, or nearly; but the Jews object to it, and indeed it is not easy to defend the translation. Zion's King, as "saved" through his awful sufferings, and made triumphant over his numerous and powerful enemies, and exalted to the throne of glory in our nature, is "become the Author of eternal salvation to all them that obey him." Thus, without any forced rendering of the words, the same general meaning is established. (Notes, J. 50:5—9. Jleb. 57:10—10.)

Hall*.—The restoration from the Babylonish captivity, and the great future restoration, may both be foretold.' Bp. Newcombe. The bondage of Egypt, from which the Israelites were delivered by the sprinkling of the blood of the paschal Lamb; and that from which they had just been restored, were like pits or dungeons, in which was no water; where they were sinking in the mire, or perishing for want by a lingering death: and both these deliverances were granted in virtue of the engagement of Christ to shed his blood for his people. But these only shadowed forth the deliverance of sinners from the bondage of sin and Satan, and from the sentence of condemnation under which they lay: and numbers have been from age to age sent forth from their gloomy bondage, "in the pit where is no water," by the blood of the Redeemer's covenant; and saved from that horrible pit, where not a drop of water can be had to cool the burning tongue, of those who are tormented in the flame. V. 12. This may be considered as an address to the Jews, who still remained in Chaldaea; they were prisoners; yet the favour shown them by the Persian kings, and especially these promises and predictions, rendered them "prisoners of hope." Let them then without delay return to Zion, as "the strong hold" prepared for them; assured that God would render their prosperity double to what their adversity had been, or double to all the advantages which they could relinquish for this purpose; for he had that day solemnly declared it. Yet it is also an address to the prisoners of sin and Satan, who, having such a Saviour preached to them, may hope for liberty and felicity: let them then turn to Christ; and in him the power, truth, and love of God will be their "Strong hold;" and let them expect joys and comforts double and far more than double both to all their sorrows, and to all the sinful pleasures and worldly advantages which they renounce, or the trials which they may be called to endure. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Job 42:10-17, v. 10.)

Prisoners of hope. 'A beautiful address, as God, when he doomed his people to banishment, by no means totally rejected them.' Bp. Newcombe.

V. 13-16. When Judah had been prepared, by a revival of true religion, to be as a "bent bow" in the Lord's hand; when Ephraim, or the remnant of the ten tribes, should be made as arrows, to "fill the bow," and to be employed against his enemies; when Judas Maccabeus, and his followers the sons of Zion, should be raised up against Antiochus Epiphanes and his armies, who were of Grecian extraction, and they should become terrible, as the sword of a mighty man, to their oppressive assailants: then the Lord would be "seen over them," as the eagle hovers over and protects her young; and his arrows would be piercing and destructive as the lightning: then he would blow the trumpet of alarm, to call the Jews to the standard, and they would bear down all before them, as the whirlwinds do in the southern deserts. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. t-c. Notes, 10:5-12, v. 5-7. 12:2-8. 14:1-3. Josh. 10:11-14. 2 Sam. 22:7-16. Ps. 45:3-5. 149:7-9. Is. 27:12,13. 30:29-32. 66:15-18, p. 15,16. 2 Cor. 10:1-6, v. 4,5.) While the Lord should thus defend them, they would consume their enemies and destroy them with sling-stones, as David did Goliath. (Marg. Notes, 2 Sam. 17:45-53.) they would celebrate their victories with every expression of joy, and their exhilaration and acclamations of gratitude would be so great, that they would resemble those who "make a noise through wine;" and be filled with all good things, or with holy consolations, as the bowls used for the drink-offerings (or the corners of the altar into which a part of their wine was poured,) were with the wine. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. g.) Thus the Lord would take care of them as his flock, and count them precious as the jewels of his crown, and set them up as an ensign for the Jews to flock to, who had been dispersed by the persecutions of Antiochus. John 10:26-31. 1 Pet. 5:1-4.)—Others, however, interpret the passage of the apostles, and the preachers of the gospel, in the primitive ages. They were prepared for their work, as the Lord's "bow and arrows;" they were raised up to oppose the idolatry, iniquity, and proud science of Greece and Rome; and they were "as swords in the hand of a mighty man." Wherever they went, God was evidently with them: his word from their lips (like an arrow from the bow,) penetrated the hearts and consciences of the hearers. The blowing of the gospel-trumpet called together increasing numbers, who, with accumulated weight, bore down before them the empire of idolatry and wickedness. They were marvellously defended, in the midst of persecuting foes, by the power of God: they gained surprising victories by faith and prayer; they drank abundantly of divine consolations, and were "filled with the Spirit" as consecrated vessels. (Notes, Acts 2:12-21, v. 13,15. Eph. 5:15-20, v. 18.) They were saved by the good Shepherd as his flock, and honoured and valued as his jewels and crown; and multitudes continually resorted to them as his ensign, to enlist as soldiers in the army of Jesus Christ. The former interpretation may be admitted, as in some measure typical of the latter, which is much more satisfactory.—Alexander the great is called the king of Javan, or Greece. (Dan. 8:21.) . . . I will animate the Jews against the troops of Antiochus.' Grotius.—It is true that Judas Maccabeus gained some advantages over the Syrians; but the language of this prophecy seems too strong for these events; and may remain to be fulfilled against the present possessors of the countries called Javan, which were Greece, Macedonia, and part of Asia Minor.' Bp. Newcombe.—This may probably be the case: yet the context favours the preceding interpretation.

V. 17. The "goodness" of God would appear admirable, in the protection and successes of the Jews above mentioned: but far more in the redemption of sinners by Jesus Christ, and the success of the gospel among the benighted Gentiles. The free mercy and plenteous grace, the tender compassion and love of Christ to rebels and enemies, in the whole design of his salvation, and in its completion, pass all knowledge; and every deep contemplation upon them must issue in admiration. At the same time "his beauty" (or the excellency and glory of all the divine perfections, as harmoniously displayed in the person and work of Christ,) is equally admirable with "his goodness:" for power, justice, holiness, truth, and wisdom are as conspicuous as mercy in this grand concern. (Marg. Ref. l, m. Notes, Ps. 31:19,20. 50:1,2. 104:34. Cant. 5:10-16, v. 16. Is. 64:4. Rom. 5:20-21. 2 Cor. 3:17,18. 4:5,6. Eph. 1:3-8, v. 7,8. 3:9-12, v. 10. 14-19.) This therefore may be supposed to be the principal object, which the prophet had in contemplation, when he thus anticipated the admiring praises of the church in the predicted times. The plenteous gifts, graces, and consolations of the Spirit, afforded to believers of every description at and after the day of Pentecost, were represented under the allusion of young persons made exceedingly cheerful, by an abundance of temporal provisions: as when pinching penury is succeeded by plenty of every thing conducive to enjoyment; or as when victories are celebrated by feasts and rejoicings. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. n. Notes, Cant. 2:4,5. 5:1. Is. 62:8,9. 65:13-15.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-8. Dreadful will be the case of those, on whom "the burden of the word of the Lord" shall rest, at that solemn season, when the eyes of all the race of men shall be fixed on him, as come "to judge the world in righteousness." May our eyes now be fixed on him, in faith, hope, and love, as becomes the true Israel of God! All other wisdom will soon prove folly; all other strong holds, except "the name of the Lord," will be cast down; and all the wealth, that men have gloried and confided in, will become contemptible "as the mire in the street;" nor will even oceans quench that fire, which shall be kindled by the indignation of God. -Terror sorrow, and confusion will soon succeed to the most sanguine expectations of those whom he rejects; their dwellings will be turned to aliens, their pride will be trampled upon, and all the fruit of their abominations will be torn from them, together with the power of doing further mischief. But the remnant which is devoted to God will be safe and happy, and they shall be honoured as the "governors of Judah," and as citizens of the heavenly Jerusalem. The Lord still encamps about his church; and while armies of proud oppressors pass by and return, his eyes watch over her that they cannot prevail; and shortly the time will come when "no exactor shall pass through her any more."

V. 9-17. Let all, who love the Lord, rejoice with loud acclamations in Zion's King; in his majesty and meekness, in his purity and compassion, in his righteousness and salvation; and while we admire and confide in his lowliness, equity, truth and love, may we transcribe them into our own spirit and conduct. Let us "not mind high things, but condescend to men of low estate;" and be content with poverty and mean accommodations: let us compassionate the indigent and the unworthy, and be willing and guidable in every service; lest we should be sent to learn docility and submission from the ass's colt. We should be thankful that the Son of God did not come with the weapons and the terrors of war; but with the words of mercy and peace: that, being pardoned and reconciled to God, and rescued from our former usurping lords, and renouncing our carnal confidences, we may be his willing subjects; and heartily desire that his dominion may be extended throughout the earth. For, through the precious blood of his covenant, numbers of the poor prisoners of Satan have been and are set at liberty from the horrible pit, in which they must otherwise have perished, without hope or comfort. And if we be thus escaped, and have "our feet set upon the rock, and a new song put into our mouths;" let us call to our fellow-sinners "as prisoners of hope," to turn to the same strong hold, assured of an abundant recompense.—Sharp have been the conflicts, immense the exertions, and extensive the conquests of Zion's sons, whom the Lord has raised up, qualified, and employed in the spiritual warfare, against his proud despisers in former ages; and whenever he thus makes any of them as "polished shafts" in his hand; when he animates them with courage, faith, and zeal; when he helps them to "cast off the works of darkness, and to put on the armour of light;" he will assuredly go with them to the combat, and give them a measure of the same success. Let us then sound the trumpet of the gospel, and take the sling and stone of faith and prayer, "the sword of the Spirit," "the helmet of salvation, and the whole armour of God;" and we shall be able to face any Goliath, who shall defy the armies of our Immanuel. And, while we drink abundantly of his divine consolations, and are "filled with the Spirit;" we shall be joyful under every hardship, and bold in all dangers. For the good Shepherd will save his purchased flock, from every wolf and lion that assaults them. He will preserve every redeemed sinner, as a bright jewel in his glorious crown, and set him as an ensign, by which to bring others to list themselves in his armies. And the more we are employed, nourished, comforted, and satisfied with the plenteousness of his house; the more we shall admire, love, and praise his goodness, and his beauty, which all heaven adores and celebrates as revealed in the face of our Redeemer. May we "behold his glory as in a glass," till we are "changed into the same image, from glory to glory, by the Spirit of our God."

NOTES.—CHAP. X. V. 1. The spiritual blessings, promised in the preceding chapter, had been shadowed forth under allusions to temporal plenty: (Notes, 9:13-17.) and the people were therefore reminded, that they must ask them from God. As rain is essential to the fruitfulness of the earth, they were directed to pray for it in its regular seasons: and so the Lord would make "bright clouds," either such as are forerunners of rain, or such as are bright by the lightnings which accompany it; and then every field would produce grass, or other vegetables in plenty.—This may be considered as an exhortation to the people, and the preachers of the gospel, to seek the fruiting influences of the Holy Spirit by faith and prayer, without which no means can be successful. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, Ps. 65:9-13. 72:4-7. v. 4. Is. 55:6. Jer. 14:19-22. Ez. 36:37. 37:1-10. v. 9. Hos. 10:12, 13. 1 Cor. 3:4-9. Jam. 5:7, 8, 16-18.)

V. 2, 3. "The prophet detests the Jews from seeking to idols, by putting them in mind of the calamities idolatry brought on their forefathers. . . The idols are said here to speak vanity, that is, by the answers the priests gave in their name; for elsewhere they are called dumb idols. (Ps. 115:7. Hab. 2:18.) Louth.—The idols of the Jews before the captivity; and their oracles, diviners, and false teachers, had deceived their expectations, imposed upon them with false doctrines and lying predictions, and giving them vain and delusory comfort, by their assurances of continued prosperity. Therefore the people were driven away like a flock of sheep by robbers; and their troubles arose from want of faithful rulers and teachers. For they, who bore those characters, provoked the Lord to anger by their crimes, and by leading the people into wickedness, through their influence and example: and therefore he punished "the goats," or the great men, who went before the people, as the he-goat before the flock. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. e-l. Notes, 11:4-9, 15-17. Is. 56:9-12. Jer. 10:6-8, 12-15. 14:13-16. 23:13-17. 27:4-11. 28:15-17. Ez. 13:6-16. 34:2-10, 17-22. Hos. 3:4, 5. Mic. 3:5-12. Matt. 9:36-38.) But having cut off the shepherds and the goats, the Lord had in mercy visited the remnant of the flock, and was about to renew their courage and strength for conflict and victory, even as the goodly horse is prepared for the battle. This may be applied to the successes of the Jews after the captivity, under the Maccabees; or to that of Jewish preachers in spreading the gospel. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. m, n. Notes, 1:14-17. 9:13-16.)—"He will be merciful to his church, and cherish them, as a king or prince doth his best horse, which shall be for his own use in the day of battle."

V. 4. Every one, who should be raised up to support the nation, as "the corner-stone" does the building; or to unite discordant parties, as the nail, the different timbers, must come out from the Lord, who ought to be trusted and thanked for them. Or, if any should be employed to crush their enemies, their valour, helpers, and success must come from him. This may be applied to Christ the Corner-Stone, and the uniting Nail, of his church, and her Protector and Ruler, who crushes all her enemies by his own power, and by the weapons which he employs.—The rulers and teachers of the church, and the preachers employed in converting the nations to Christianity, may likewise be intended. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 5-12. 1:18-21. 9:9-10. 12:6-8. Ezra 9:8. Ps. 118:19-24. v. 22. Is. 22:20-25, vv. 23-25. Mic. 5:5-9. Ren. 19:11-21.)

V. 5-12. These verses are in some things similar to those considered in the former chapter; yet there are expressions, which can scarcely be applied to either of the events there mentioned. (Notes, 9:13-17.) Under Judas Maccabæus the Jews became indeed very formidable, and trod down the forces of Antiochus "as the mire in the streets;" and "because the LORD was with them," his cavalry could not stand against them. Thus the house of Judah was strengthened and delivered, and re-established in their civil and religious privileges, and many of the dispersed Israelites were joined to them. This might also be applied to the success of the apostles and evangelists, in their spiritual warfare:

6 And I will strengthen the house of Judah, 'and I will save the house of Joseph, and I will bring them again to place them; 'for I have mercy upon them: and they shall be 'as though I had not cast them off: 'for I am the LORD thy God, and will hear them.

7 And they of Ephraim shall be like a mighty man, 'and their heart shall rejoice as through wine: 'yea, their children shall see it, and be glad; 'their heart shall rejoice in the LORD.

8 I will 'hiss for them, and gather them; 'for I have redeemed them: 'and they shall increase as they have increased.

9 And I will 'show them among the people: and they shall 'remember me in far countries; and they shall 'live with their children, and turn again.

10 I will bring them again also 'out of the land of Egypt, and gather them out of Assyria; and I will bring them 'into the land of Gilead and Lebanon; 'and place shall not be found for them.

11 And 'he shall pass through the sea with affliction, and shall 'smite the waves in the sea, and all the deeps of the river shall dry up: and 'the pride of Assyria shall be brought down, and 'the sceptre of Egypt shall depart away.

12 And I will strengthen them in the LORD; and they shall 'walk up and down in his name, saith the LORD.

CHAPTER XI.

The destruction of Jerusalem, the temple, and the Jewish rulers, 1-8. Under the type of Zechariah is shown Christ's care of his flock, and the people's hatred of him, 4-7. The rejection of the nation, for ingratitude and contempt of Christ, is denoted, by his breaking the bread, called 'Heavenly and Bands, 8-14. The emblem and curse of a foolish, or 'idol shepherd, 15-17.

3 'There is 'a voice of the howling of the shepherds: 'for their glory is spoiled: 'a voice of the roaring of young lions; 'for the pride of Jordan is spoiled.

but what follows leads me to conclude, that the recovery of the Jews, and the whole house of Israel, from their present dispersion, and future events for which that nation is reserved, were predicted: and that it can only be accommodated to any of the past affairs of Israel, or of the church. A time is coming, when the Lord will have mercy on them and hear their prayers; he will again place them in their own land, and "be as though he had not cast them off." Then power and gladness will be given to their tribes; and they and their children shall "rejoice in God." He will call them together by his word, as the shepherd calls his dispersed flock by his well-known whistle: he will gather them as his redeemed people, and increase them as he had done in former ages. He indeed intended to scatter them as seed through the nations of the earth; alluding to their present dispersed state, in which they are nevertheless marvellously preserved a distinct people. In this dispersion they would at length remember him, in the most distant lands, and turn again and "live before him, with their children;" then he would bring them from the lands, in which they had been in bondage and captivity, as he had of old brought them out of Egypt and Assyria, or Chaldea; and he would replace them in their own land, which would be so replenished, that room would not be found for them. At this approaching time, they will experience the same marvellous protection and assistance against the enemies, who oppose their return or settlement, as their fathers had done, when they passed through the Red Sea from their affliction in Egypt, and through Jordan into the promised land; and all the power and pride of their antichristian assailants will be destroyed, like those of Pharaoh and Sennacherib. Thus, being "strengthened by the LORD," they will walk up and down in his name, trusting and rejoicing in him, and celebrating the praises of his glorious perfections and wonderful works. -It can scarcely be doubted, that some more signal fulfilment of this prophecy is yet to be expected: but the event alone can exactly determine, in what way the predicted deliverance will be effected. (Notes, 12:2-8. 13:8, 9. Deut. 4:29-31. 30:1-10. Is. 2:2-5. 11:11-16. 12: 19:23-25. 27:12, 13. Jer. 30:5-11, 19-22. 31:27, 28. Ez. 28:24-26. 34:23-31. 37:20-28. 38:8-23. 39:23-29. PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The blessings held forth in the promises are actually obtained and enjoyed through faith and prayer: and success in every undertaking, must be expected and sought from God alone. It forms "the bright" and the black clouds, and sends both the beneficial rain, and the destructive thunderstorm: both "the ministration of death," and "the ministration of the Spirit and of righteousness," are from him: and he not only invites, but commands us, to ask good things from him; assuring us, that "every one who asketh, receiveth." But deists, diviners, and false teachers of every description, seduce men by lies; and comfort them in vain: and when these deceivers and blind guides are mistaken for pastors, the flock will be scattered and troubled like "sheep that have no shepherd." Those who bear the office, either of rulers or of teachers, and neglect their duty, but lead men from God and into sin or error, kindle his wrath against themselves and those under their care: but however he may punish degenerate professors of his gospel and corrupt pastors, he will visit his people, and prepare them for the conflict and the victory. To the Lord we must therefore look, to raise up persons to support, cement, unite, defend, and deliver his church: and all useful persons are the servants and instruments of Christ, from whom the stability, unity, successes, and triumphs of the church proceed, and to whom the glory of them must be given. Those whom he strengthens and attends, become "mighty men," "valiant for the truth," and successful in their warfare against the most formidable enemies. When he excites a spirit of prayer, even in those who seem to be cast off, he will hear and have mercy upon them; then will he renew their comforts, and make their hearts to rejoice in him and his salvation: and he will bless them and their children after them, that they may live before him. Thus he continually calls sinners by his word, redeems them from their iniquities, and gathers them into his church; for his chosen are scattered through the nations, and walk in evil ways, till he causes them to remember him, and to seek his salvation: then being delivered from the bondage of sin and separated from the world, they pass through seas of affliction and temptation; by his powerful support, they are made conquerors over their inward enemies, and their outward persecutors: and they shall soon pass safely through the Jordan of death, to the regions of endless felicity. Let us then trust and rejoice in the Lord, and strengthen our hearts and hopes in him; and let us walk up and down this evil world, by faith in his name, and celebrating his praises: assured of being received into those blissful mansions, where there will be room found, for all the innumerable multitude of those, whom Jesus "hath redeemed unto God with his blood." And let us constantly pray, and labour as we are able, for the performance of these predictions and promises to his ancient people Israel, in all their dispersions.

NOTES.-CHAP. XI. V. 1-3. 'There is a remarkable story mentioned in the Jewish writers to this purpose. Some time before the destruction of the temple, the doors of it opened of their own accord; a circumstance attested by Josephus. . . . Then R. Johanan . . . directing his speech to the temple, said, I know thy destruction is at hand, according to the prophecy of Zechariah, "Open thy doors, O Lebanon, &c." Louth. This story shows at least, what event the ancient Jews supposed to be here foretold. (Note, 9:1.) Lebanon may either signify the temple built of cedars from that mountain; or the city filled with haughty and prosperous inhabitants, and with stately mansions like the cedars of Lebanon. (Marg. Ref. a. Notes, Jer. 22:6, 7, 20-23. v. 23. Hab. 2:15-17. v. 17.) This must therefore be a prediction of the destruction of Jerusalem and the temple by the Romans: for there were no ravages from the time of this prophet to that event,

4 Thus saith the Lord my God; ¹Feed the flock of the slaughter;

In the former chapter, the future conversion of the Jews was predicted; (Note, 10:5—12.) in this, the manner by which they would be reduced to their present dispersed condition was described. After a time, the nation would fill up the measure of their iniquities; and then the country would be laid open to the Romans, and they would destroy Jerusalem and the temple, as a conflagration would devour the cedars of Lebanon. The persons of inferior power, or nations less distinguished than they, may be intended by "the fir-trees" and "oaks of Bashan," who were called on to "howl because the cedars were fallen." (Marg. and Marg. Ref. c. Notes, Is. 2:10—18, v. 13. 10:28—34, v. 33, 34. Ez. 31:3—9, 18. Nah. 3:8—11.) Jerusalem and the nation of Israel had been fenced, planted, and tended as a vineyard, whence a vintage was expected; but it was become an unfruitful forest, and it would be hewn or burned down to the ground. Or, "the defenced forest," (Marg.) may mean Jerusalem, with its strong fortifications. The princes, priests, and scribes would howl in madness and despair, at seeing all their honour, authority, wealth, and prosperity torn from them; and all the principal persons would roar like enraged lions, driven from their coverts by an inundation of Jordan, when it desolated the neighbouring fields, which were as the pride of that river. For thus would the Romans expel these oppressors, when they wasted the land. (Marg. Ref. d—h. Notes, 4—9, v. 5, 8. 15—17. Is. 56:9—12. Jer. 49:19, 20. Ez. 19:2—9. 20:45—22:25—28. Mic. 3:8—12. Zeph. 3:1—4. Matt. 23:34, 36. Acts 7:51—53. 1 Thes. 2:13—16. Jam. 5:1—6.)

V. 4—6. It is evident, that the prophet performed some symbolical actions, as emblems of the events predicted; but doubtless Christ was here especially intended. The Father (whom as Man he acknowledged to be the Lord his God, John 20:17.) appointed him as "the good Shepherd" to feed the flock, just before it was given up to the slaughter. "He came to seek and save the lost;" and his personal ministry was among "the lost sheep of the house of Israel." His labours, doctrines, and miracles were calculated to reform and preserve the people: yet they eventually occasioned the ruin of the nation; and he seemed to feed them for the slaughter. (Marg. Ref. i—l. Notes, 7—9. Is. 40:9—11. Jer. 23:1, 2. Ez. 34:2—6, 17—22. Mic. 3:1—4, 9—12.) Their rulers and teachers, who bore the pastoral office, deceived, oppressed, and devoured the people, without shame or remorse; nay, they boasted of their own righteousness, and hypocritically praised God for making them rich; as if he had concurred in their unmerciful oppressions! (Marg. Ref. n—p. Notes, Hos. 12:7—9, John 10:1—5, v. 1, 10—13. 1 Tim. 6:5—10, v. 9, 10. 2 Pet. 2:1—3.) Therefore the Lord determined to show them no more pity than they had done the people; and as the nation in general was extremely corrupt, and concurred in rejecting Christ; so he would involve them in one common calamity; (except "a remnant according to the election of grace;" Note, Rom. 11:1—6.) and the people would both be given up to destroy one another by furious intestine dissensions, and be left in the power of the Roman emperor, whom they acknowledged as their only king, when they demanded the crucifixion of Christ their true King. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. q—t. Notes, Is. 27:1—1, v. 11. Dan. 9:25—27, v. 26, 27. Mal. 4:4—6, v. 6. Matt. 10:21, 22. 23:1—10, v. 7. 24:6—14. John 19:13—18, v. 15. Heb. 10:26—31.)—Idolatry is not here mentioned among the sins of the Jews, in the times predicted; but covetousness and hypocrisy are specified; which, with the context, fully proves, that the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans was intended. "He noteth the hypocrites, which have ever the name of God in their mouths, though in their life and doings they deny God! attributing their gain to God's blessing, which cometh of the spoil of their brethren."—"Ye devour widows' houses, and for a pretence make long prayers therefore ye shall receive the greater damnation." (Note, Matt. 23:14.) Some suppose the Romans, when selling the captive Jews for slaves, to be meant; but the language far better suits the covetous, oppressing, hypocritical scribes and Pharisees. The Jews presumptuously expected, that God would deliver his worshippers, city, and temple from the Roman idolaters: they had no prophet sent expressly to declare the contrary, as in the siege of the city by the Chaldeans; and they had forgotten or explained away these ancient predictions, and scorned the warnings of Christ and his disciples. But the event, and their condition for above seventeen hundred years, have abundantly shown, the fallaciousness of their hopes.

V. 7—9. The good Shepherd, by his forerunner John the Baptist, and personally, and by his apostles, would "feed the flock of slaughter;" but his attention would chiefly be directed to the "poor of the flock," among whom a remnant would be preserved from the common ruin of the nation. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. x, y. See Note, 4—6. Notes, Is. 11:2—5, 61:1—3. Zeph. 3:11—13, v. 12. Matt. 11:2—6, v. 5. Luke 4:16—19.) Some by "the flock of slaughter," understand the poor and oppressed, who were "counted as sheep for the slaughter" by their cruel oppressors.—As an emblem of this feeding the flock, it is probable, that the prophet "took two staves," such as were generally used by shepherds: one of these he called "Beauty," by which was meant the honour, privilege, and ornament, which the Jews possessed, according to their national covenant, in the oracles, instituted worship, and temple of God: and especially by the ministry of Christ, and his apostles, who preached the gospel to them before all others. The other he called "Bands," denoting the connexion of the nation under one government, and the harmony that had in some measure hitherto united them, as the flock of God. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. z—a. Notes, 10—14. Ps. 133:1. Ez. 37:15—19. Luke 2:28—32, v. 32. John 10:14—18, v. 16, 17:20—23. Rom. 3:1, 2. 9:5. Eph. 2:13—23.) But it would soon appear, that they did not generally profit by the doctrine and ministry of Christ, but chose to adhere to false teachers in preference: and he would therefore "cut off three shepherds in one month."

Some explain this of the three leading sects among the Jews, the Pharisees, Sadducees, and Herodians: others of their rulers, priests, and scribes, who were three orders of pretended shepherds, and were all degraded and cut off suddenly. "One month seems a proverbial expression for a short time." Louth. They were set aside, when the apostles were commissioned and sent forth to preach; and they were destroyed by the Romans, the executioners of the Lord's vengeance. For his righteous soul "loathed" their pride, hypocrisy, and wickedness; and they as much abhorred his holy character, doctrine, and precepts. He therefore gave them up, and would feed them no more; but left them unprotected to destroy one another; to be destroyed by their enemies; and to perish in their sins without good instruction, or those means of grace which he had abased. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. b—l. Notes, Deut. 28:49—57. 32:19, 20. Is. 9:18—21. 49:7, 8. v. 7. Hos. 9:15—17. Matt. 15:12—14. Luke 19:11—27, v. 14, 27.)

Loathed. (9) "Was straitened for." Marg. "I have a baptism to be baptised with: and how am I straitened till it be accomplished." (Luke 12:50.)—Or "grieved." "He was moved with indignation, being grieved at the hardness of their hearts." (Mark 3:5.) The word (חָנַן) translated "abhorred," is not met with elsewhere in Scripture.—It has this sense in the Syriac. Bp. Newcombe.—The LXX render it, Ἄν ψυχὰς αὐτῶν ἐρωποῦν ἐν ἐμῇ ("Their souls went against me," or rushed upon me:) a striking prediction of the fixed, and virulent purpose, of the most distinguished orders among the Jews, with all their policy, power, and influence, to procure the death of Christ.—The horrid circum-

That that dieth, &c. (9.) The translation of this verse accords with that of the LXX, in deference to whom it was probably made. But the Hebrew is feminine throughout, and may be rendered thus: "... She that dieth, let her die; and she that is cut off, let her be cut off: and as to those women who are left, they shall eat every woman the flesh of her female friend." עֵרְוַת הַנְּשִׂאִים אֶת־בֶּרֶךְ הַנְּשִׂאִים

V. 10, 11. These events seem to have been prefigured by the prophet's cutting asunder his staff, or crook, called "Beauty," when he had delivered this part of the prophecy. This signified the abolition of the national covenant with Judah and Israel, who would be deprived of all those distinctions, which had been their glory and beauty; and which virtually took place when they rejected and crucified Christ. For then, as a nation, they ceased to be God's peculiar people, and their ordinances lost their efficacy, "waxed old, and were ready to vanish away;" and the poor of the flock, those who waited on Christ, "knew that it was the word of the Lord." They soon learned, that the Jews were no longer to be regarded as the peculiar people of God; and so they separated from among them, when they saw the Roman armies about to besiege Jerusalem, being well aware of the event. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. See on Note, 7-9. Notes, 13:9. Jer. 31:31-34. Ez. 16:60-63. Hos. 1:8-10. Zeph. 3:11-13. Matt. 24:15-18. Rom. 11:7-10. Heb. 8: 8-13.)

V. 12-14. This evident prophecy of a transaction, recorded in the New Testament, is expressed with much obscurity; as indeed might previously have been expected. It is probable that the prophet performed some symbolical action of the kind here described, before the rulers and priests, as a type of Christ, and as showing by what means the Jews would seal their own condemnation. He demanded his wages for feeding the flock, if they thought good to give him any; and he received "thirty pieces of silver," probably shekels of about the value of half a crown or three shillings each. These the Lord directed him to cast unto the potter; disdaining, that he or his shepherd should be valued at so paltry a sum; and accordingly the prophet cast them to the potter in the house of the Lord; either the potter came thither for that purpose, or he was at work near the temple. This predicted the bargain of the chief priests with Judas, for that very sum to betray Christ into their hands; the traitor's returning the money in horror of conscience to the chief priests, in the precincts of the temple; and their determining to purchase with it a "potter's field to bury strangers in." (Marg. and Marg. Ref. n-p. Notes, Gen. 37:28. Ez. 21:28-32, v. 32. Matt. 26:14-16. 27:3-10. Acts 1:16-19.) Then their Shepherd brake the other staff called "bands," that he might break the brotherhood between Judah and Israel;" which denoted the dissolution of their civil and ecclesiastical state, and that the people would be given up to the most destructive and furious contests with each other. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. r. Notes, Matt. 24:9-14, v. 10. Acts 23:6-10. Jam. 4:1-3.) Some suppose that the whole was merely a vision, which the prophet reported to the people; but it is recorded as a transaction or a direct prophecy, and not as a vision. (Note, Hos. 1:2,3.) The rulers and priests giving thirty שֶׁקֶלִים, is the wages of the prophet; the contempt thus shown to God himself; the money being thrown back by him that received it; and its eventually being given to the potter; are circumstances sufficiently strong to show, that St. Matthew does not accommodate the passage, but gives us the real meaning of the Holy Spirit in it, though some other circumstances do not coincide. And the awful and affronting nature of the messages and predictions in this chapter, and towards the close of this book, give additional weight to the opinion, that this prophet was "Zacharias the son of Barachias," whom the Jews "slew between the temple and the altar; and his blood, the last of the innocent blood thus shed till the coming of Christ. (Note, 1:1.)—The name of Jeremiah stands in our versions of the New Testament, 15 ¶ And the Lord said unto me, Take unto thee yet the instruments of a foolish shepherd.

16 For lo, I will raise up a shepherd in the land, which shall not visit those that be cut off, neither shall seek the young one, nor heal that that is broken, nor feed that that standeth still; but he shall eat the flesh of the fat, and tear their claws in pieces.

17 Wo to the idol-shepherd that leaveth the flock? the sword shall be upon his arm, and upon his right eye: his arm shall be clean dried up, and his right eye shall be utterly darkened.

but many learned men, on very probable grounds, are of opinion, that no name was originally in the text. "Then was fulfilled that which was spoken by the prophet, saying, &c." (Note, Matt. 27:6-10, v. 9.)

The brotherhood, &c. (14.) I cannot explain this passage, without supposing, that the kingdom of Israel subsisted when the prophet wrote it; and that ... the wars between Judah and Israel are referred to. Bp. Newcombe. But do not many prophecies, allowedly written long after the captivity of the ten tribes, and predicting the times of the Messiah, thus mention Judah and Israel separately? Does not Ezekiel foretell, among other things, the final restoration of the Jews, as introduced, under the emblem of two sticks uniting in his hand; signifying, so to speak, the miraculous reunion of "the staff Bands," after it had been thus broken? (Notes, Ez. 37:15-28.) And what connexion had the wars between Judah and Israel with the betraying and crucifying of Christ? The principal calamities of the race of Jacob began, when they divided into two kingdoms: on their return from captivity they all formed one people; but after their rejection of Christ, internal discords, far more fierce and more speedily destructive than the wars between Judah and Israel, hastened the fatal catastrophe of the nation. This is quite sufficient for prophetic language.—"The Lord said... a goodly price, &c." (13) Marg. Ref. q. Note, Is. 53:2,3.—God was despised in the person of his prophet; but the Lord o Hosts himself was also sold for this small sum!

V. 15-17. Thus far the prophet had typified the great and good Shepherd; but now he was ordered, to take "the instruments of a foolish shepherd;" as an emblem of the infatuated rulers and blind guides, whom Providence in righteous judgment would then place over the nation. From the time that they rejected Christ, and he rejected them, they should have rulers, priests, and prophets, of one sort, and of one heart, (as if they had formed "one shepherd,") to oppress, devour, deceive, and ruin them, both in respect of soul and body. But wo to this idol-shepherd, that left off to feed the flock, and attended to nothing but eating their flesh, and disabling them from resistance by "tearing their claws in pieces!" (Marg. and Marg. Ref. s-x. Notes, Is. 56:9-12. Jer. 23:1,2. Ez. 13:1-4. 34:2-6,17-22. Matt. 15:12-14. 23:16-33. John 10:10-13. Acts 20:29-31.) Such a one resembles a shepherd, as an idol does a deity: the idol receives the homage, oblations, and sacrifices, but disappoints the deluded worshipper to his ruin: and the idol-shepherd has the garb and appearance of a shepherd, receives submission, and is supported at much expense; but he leaves the flock to perish through his neglect, or leads them into ruin by his false doctrine, and wicked example. Therefore the sword of the divine vengeance would rest on "his arm" and "right eye," to wither the one, and utterly "to darken" the other: for a total deprivation of power and authority, and an entire judicial blindness would make way for his total ruin. This referred to the proud, blind, and hardened scribes, Pharisees, priests, and rulers of the Jews; and to what company of men, in any age, can either the character, or the threatened judgments on them and their successors and disciples, be applied with more exact and discriminating justice? It indeed suits many others, in different churches and nations; and it has had an awful and long-continued fulfilment, in the character of the Jewish teachers, and the condition of the nation in all ages, since the days of Christ. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Is. 6:9,10. 29:9-12. 42:18-20. 44:19,20. Matt. 13:14,15. John 9:39-41. Rom. 11:7-10,25-32.)

A shepherd, &c. (16) "A shepherd" in the singular number denotes a succession of such governors, as are described in the following words. So the succession of priests is represented under the single person of Levi, Mal. 2:5,6. Louth.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Bashan to howl.—If any part of the Lord's vineyard prove an unfruitful forest, it must be cut down and cast into the fire: and those, who have been pre-eminent in rank and office, will have the precedence in suffering, when all their glory and pride shall be spoiled: yet in such a state of the community, the best methods of reformation often excite so great contempt, enmity, and opposition, that they hasten its downfall.—Alas! very many, who possess rank and authority in the church, only consider what gain they can make of their situation; and, whilst they fatten upon the miseries or final ruin of the flock, they are too callous to feel either remorse or pity. They follow precedents, take accustomed advantages, and keep out of the reach of human laws; and many cloak their oppression and avarice with hypocrisy, and bless God that they are rich; when their conduct proves them destitute both of piety and humanity. But the Lord leaves nations to rulers and teachers of this base character for their sins: and it is common for even the oppressed to copy the crimes of their oppressors, till they are given up together into the hands of their neighbours and enemies; who smite and destroy them, and there is none to pity or deliver them. Yet the good Shepherd still has and will have a flock: and he often feeds the poor in mercy, and they learn to wait on him; whilst the rich and powerful are ripening for vengeance. But he does not withdraw from favoured nations those privileges, which have been their glory and beauty, till their hypocrisy and enmity to him and his cause render it necessary for him to make them examples of his awful severity. When this takes place, the criminals become of all men the most infatuated, hardened, mischievous, and miserable: and when the ordinances and oracles of God are withdrawn from those who have long abused them, the very poor of the flock will remember, that "thus it was written, and thus it must be."

V. 12-17. Wilful contempt of Christ is the great cause of men's ruin, in those places which have the word of God sent to them. Alas! at how low a price do men value this precious Saviour! What sums do multitudes lavish on those who minister to their pleasures, amusement, or decorations: and how they grudge the veriest trifle, where the edification of their own souls, or those of other men, is concerned! A trifling loss, to be submitted to for conscience' sake, seems a great matter: a few pieces of silver still seem to many more valuable than "the unsearchable riches of Christ!" And the contempt cast upon him, by putting such trifles in competition with him, or giving them the preference to his love and salvation, has in it a proportion of the same guilt, which the priests and rulers contracted, who bribed Judas to betray him for thirty shekels; which Judas contracted who thus sold his Lord; or which they incurred, who cried out, "Not this man, but Barabbas." He may therefore continually say unto us, "A goodly price, that I am valued at by you!" and no wonder he disdains men's persons and services, and pours contempt on their treasures, when they prefer every worthless object to his immeasurable love. Thus nations and churches provoke him to withdraw his presence and to leave them in darkness; and to give them up to "bite and devour each other, till they are consumed one of another;" and if professed Christians were more generally agreed in their supreme valuation of Christ, they would not in general contend much about other matters. But when men reject his authority and salvation, they are often, in awful judgment, delivered over to follow "blind guides" and "foolish shepherds," and "idol-shepherds," who are far more tremendous scourges than war, famine, and pestilence all combined together. While such pagans and worthless idols deceive others to their ruin, they will themselves incur the deepest condemnation; and their usurped or abused authority, or pretended illumination, will end in deep contempt, and the darkness of misery and despair: for "if the blind lead the blind, they shall both fall into the ditch" together. (Notes, 2 Pet. 2:17. Jude 11-13.)

NOTES.—CHAP. XII. V. 1. This verse forms a solemn introduction to the following prophecy, and shows the very great importance of it. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Gen. 27. Num. 16:22. Is. 40:12-24, vv. 12,22. 57:15,16. Heb. 1:10-12. 12:9-11, v. 9.)

V. 2-5. Some expositors consider this as predicting the victories of the Maccabees over Antiochus; but that persecutor never besieged Jerusalem: and the language is much too strong to denote the successes of the Maccabees. Bp. Newcombe. Others apply it to the success of the first preachers of the gospel in converting the nations, and to the judgments executed upon their opposers and persecutors. But, however it may be accommodated, some special events were doubtless intended by the Holy Spirit; and it is probable that the grand accomplishment of it is yet to be expected.—It was foretold, that God should make Jerusalem "a cup of trembling," or a stupefying poisonous draught, to all the people round about, when they would be engaged in besieging that capital and the other cities of Judah. That is, divine judgments would immediately overtake them, as the evident effect of their attempts. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. e. Notes, Ps. 75:8. Is. 51:17-23, vv. 17,22,23. Jer. 25:15-17. Hab. 2:15-17. Rev. 14:9-11. 16:17-21, v. 19. 18:4-8.) Yea, he would make Jerusalem "a burdensome stone to all, that should burden themselves with it." This alluded to large stones, or weights, that men use to try their strength by lifting, which sometimes proving too heavy for them, bruised, or even killed them: thus all, who attempted to injure Jerusalem, would destroy themselves; even though all the people (or peoples) of the earth should gather themselves against it. (Marg. Ref. f, g. Notes, Ez. 38:39. Dan. 2:34,35,44,45. Joel 3:9-17. Mic. 4:11-13. Matt. 21:40-44. Rev. 19:11-21.) For the Lord would smite their horses with terror and blindness, as well as the riders with madness, out of his attentive and watchful care over Judah: so that the rulers of Judah would cordially expect help from "the Lord of hosts, their God," by means of the inhabitants of Jerusalem, without seeking out for any foreign succours. Or, "There is strength to me, and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem in the Lord of hosts, their God" (Marg. and Marg. Ref. i-m. Notes, 6-8. 9:8,13-16, 14:1-3,12-15. Gen. 19:11. 2 Kings 6:13-18. 2 Chr. 32:5-8. Hos. 14:1-3.)—The former part of this chapter... relates to an invasion made upon the inhabitants of Judah and Jerusalem, in the latter times of the world, probably after their return to, and settlement in their own land. ... The horses and their riders shall be put into such confusion, as to run foul of one another. (2 Kings 6:18.) ... The marginal reading (5) is to be preferred: "There is strength to me, and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem, in the Lord of hosts, our God." God doth visibly interpose for our deliverance, and thereby encourage us to rely on his protection. Lowth.

V. 6-8. These verses further confirm the supposition, that the grand accomplishment of the prophecy is yet future; and that it relates to the times when Israel shall be converted and restored to their own land. Then their governors will be "like fire upon a hearth," that kindles the wood laid on it; or like a torch put to a sheaf or faggot, as they will consume all those who oppose their re-establishment in their own land; and Jerusalem will be rebuilt in its actual situation, to be their habitation, or capital city. (Marg. Ref. n-q. Notes, 9:13-16. 14:10,11. Ps. 149:7-9. Jer. 30:12-18. Ez. 48:30-35. Mic. 4:11-13, 5:7-9.)—A the time pre-the glory of the inhabitants of Jerusalem, do not magnify themselves against Judah.

8 In that day shall the Lord defend the inhabitants of Jerusalem; and he that is feeble among them at that day shall be as David; and the house of David shall be as God, as the Angel of the Lord before them.

9 ¶ And it shall come to pass in that day, that I will seek to destroy all the nations that come against Jerusalem.

10 And I will pour upon the house of David, and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem, the Spirit of grace and of supplications: and they shall look upon me whom they have pierced, and they shall mourn for him, as one mourneth for his only son, and shall be in bitterness for him, as one that is in bitterness for his first-born.

11 In that day shall there be a great mourning in Jerusalem, as the mourning of Hadadrimmon in the valley of Megiddon.

12 And the land shall mourn, every family apart; the family of the house of David apart, and their wives apart; the family of the house of Nathan apart, and their wives apart; dicted, "the LORD will save the tents of Judah first." The conversion of the nation will begin among the more obscure Jews, and not among their principal persons, who occupy the rank of the house of David, &c. that these may not glory over their inferiors, as if the change had been effected by their power, valour, sagacity, or influence, or assume any improper ascendancy over them: or, those from whom less is expected, will be first honoured as instruments of their deliverance and victories. At the same time, even the feeblest will resemble David in courage, faith, and grace, and be as eminent in every thing good, as that man after God's own heart had been; while "the house of David," or their most eminent characters, will be "as God, even as the Angel of the LORD," (of whom the prophet had so often spoken,) even as Christ, to go before them, and set them an example. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. r-y. Notes, 2:6-9. 3:1-4. 4:4-7. v. 6. Gen. 48:15, 16. Is. 7:13, 14. 9:6, 7. 11:1-5. 63:9. Jer. 23:5-6. Mic. 5:2-6. Luke 1:26-33. 1 Cor. 1:26-31. 2 Cor. 4:7.)—This accords to the idea, which we are taught to form of the immense abundance of spiritual gifts and grace, to be conferred on the people of God, at the time when this prophecy shall have its most signal accomplishment.

V. 9-14. "God's signal interposition in behalf of Judah and Jerusalem, after their future restoration, having been foretold, the prophet proceeds to foretell their conversion to Christianity." Bp. Newcombe. (Marg. Ref. z. Notes, 2-5. Ez. 38, 39. Dan. 11:40-45.)—At the time, when the Lord was about to destroy the enemies of the Jews, he intended to prepare them for that favour by "pouring upon the house of David and the inhabitants of Jerusalem," that is, both upon the rulers and common people, "the Spirit of grace and of supplications." The Holy Spirit is infinitely gracious and merciful; he is most freely bestowed upon sinners; and he is the Author of all grace, or holiness. He is also "the Spirit of supplications;" he shows men their ignorance, indigence, guilt, pollution, misery, and danger; he leads them to understand and believe the truths and promises of Scripture; and he excites hope and spiritual desires, and thus inwardly constrains them to pour out their hearts in earnest prayer. (Marg. Ref. a-c. Notes, Ps. 143:10. Is. 32:15. Acts 2:14-21. Rom. 8:24-27. Eph. 6:18-20. Tit. 2:4-7.) Miraculous or prophetic gifts are not mentioned in this prediction, but only spiritual grace. (Note, Joel 2:23-32, vs. 28, 29.) Then, says the Speaker, (JEHOVAH, who alone can give the Holy Spirit, Note, John 16:7.) "they shall look on Me, whom they have pierced." (John 19:37.) The ancestors of that generation of Jews caused Christ to be nailed to the cross, and pierced by the soldier's spear; for they employed the Romans to execute the sentence which they had denounced, exclaiming, "His blood be on us, and on our children!" And their posterity have ever since been consenting to this deed by their impenitent unbelief, and the language with which they have always spoken of him. (Note, Matt. 27:24, 25.) But at the predicted period, they will know who this crucified Jesus was; and then they shall by faith "look to him and mourn" over him, as pierced and slain by them. This reflection will melt their hearts into extreme sorrow and compunction; they will repent of that national in, and of all their personal transgressions, as men are used bitterly to lament the death of an only or a first-born son: for they will perceive that they had wickedly slain the Hope and Glory of their nation. (Marg. Ref. d, e. Notes, Ps. 22:16-18. Is. 45:20-22. Luke 22:8-32, v. 32. John 1:39. Acts 3:12-16. 5:29-31. Heb. 12:2, 3.) This will be a general mourning of the whole people, like that which was occasioned by the death of Josiah, who was slain in the valley of Megiddon. (Notes, 2 Kings 23:29, 30. 2 Chr. 35:25-27.) "It may be the field, where the battle was fought, might be called Hadadrimmon." Louth. All the people shall mourn with godly sorrow, which will not only be expressed in public, but in their families and in private; and even husbands and wives will separately, in retirement, express their godly sorrow, and humble themselves before God for all their sins. And as their rulers, priests, scribes and people, had concurred in the crucifixion of Christ; so all orders of men will concur in this humble and believing repentance. The family of David the king, that of Nathan the most eminent prophet in David's reign; that of Levi, or the priests and ministers of religion; and that of Shimei, who perhaps was some noted scribe, might be mentioned, as representing the different orders of men among them.—A partial fulfilment of this took place, at and after the day of Pentecost, in the conversion of numbers of the Jews who had just before crucified Christ; (Notes, Acts 2:37-41.) and it is descriptive of the conversion of sinners in every age. Yet there can be no reasonable doubt, that it is an intended prediction of the conversion of Israel, when they shall as one body embrace the gospel of Jesus Christ.—Some suppose Nathan the son of David to be meant; (12) but then the royal house is twice mentioned, and the prophets are unnoticed, which in the Old Testament are generally considered as a distinct order. (Marg. Ref. g-l. Notes, Ez. 19:10-15. Joel 2:15-17. 1 Cor. 7:1-5, v. 5.)

First-born. (10) What a reflection is this simile suited to excite in our minds, of the bitterness experienced in Egypt, on the sudden death of the first-born throughout the land! (Note, Ez. 12:29, 30.) And of the intenseness, in some instances, of that "godly sorrow, which worketh repentance unto salvation."—In the margin of the English Bible we have, Or, of Simcon. Our translators, therefore, thought, that the Hebrew text might sometimes be corrected by the Greek version. Bp. Newcombe. This reading, however, has been added since the time when the present translation was made; and is not found in the old copies with marginal readings, in which marginal readings I have not met with one deviation from the letters of the Hebrew text.—Shimei. (13) Marg. Ref. m.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The word of the LORD, "who stretcheth forth the heavens and layeth the foundation of the earth, and formeth the spirit of man within him," will be a heavy burden on those against whom it is sent; but it is "for Israel," and speaks peace to all true believers.—Many have been the attempts of wicked men to extirpate the people of God; but they have only ruined themselves: for the church has always proved "a cup of trembling" to all her assailants, and "a burdensome stone, to those who have burdened themselves with her;" and all will assuredly be crushed or cut in pieces, who injure her, even if all the power, valour, policy, learning, wealth, and multitude of the whole earth should combine against her.—So long as the rulers and teachers of the church expect their help and "strength from the LORD of hosts their God," and use no means or instruments except such as are consecrated; his watchful eyes will ever be open to take care of them, and his arm stretched forth to protect them, and to strike their persecutors with astonishment, blindness, or madness. But it is far more desirable, when the examples, labours, and conversation of ministers and Christians, render them as "an hearth of fire among the wood, or like a torch in a sheaf," to kindle the flame of divine love and holy affection from heart to heart, and to diffuse the influence of piety to the right hand and to the left.—In the conversion of sinners, as well as in redemption, the Lord will "exclude boasting," and take care that "no flesh shall glory in his presence;" therefore not many mighty, noble, wealthy, or learned, are called; and he often begins among the poor and despised in families, towns, cities, and nations; and then uses them as his instruments, in the salvation of a remnant of the rich, the wise, and the honourable; that these may not have any ground of self-preference or contempt of others, or any pretence for assuming authority over them.—The best of men have hitherto been so very far from perfection, that it is possible for a company of believers to be called forth, the weakest of whom shall exceed the most illustrious of those who have yet been known on earth : and we are led to conclude, that this will actually be the case, in that purer state of the church which is predicted. Then the feeblest Christian will equal David in strength of faith, and vigour of affections, and holy courage : yet there will be rulers, teachers, and examples of such superior attainments, as to be fully qualified to go before the people in every duty and every grace. These will be "followers of God as dear children," and bear the image and possess the mind of Christ, to a degree of which in these lukewarm days we have scarcely any conception.—Before we can expect the peculiar protection and consolation of the Lord ; we must be deeply humbled for our sins. The beginning, progress, and perfection of our sanctification come from "the pouring out of the Spirit of grace and supplications," wherever that is granted, fervent prayer and deep humiliation will be the never-failing effects ; the eyes of the mind will soon be directed in faith to him, who was pierced for our sins : and while we condemn the conduct of him who betrayed, and of those who "crucified the Lord of glory," we shall not exculpate ourselves. We shall remember, that in fact our sins were the cause of the Redeemer's crucifixion ; our unbelief has been a continuation of the crime of his crucifiers ; our ingratitude and dishonourable conduct have often verged towards the guilt of "crucifying him afresh." We may therefore all "look to him, whom we have pierced," and upon our sins, as the thorns, the nails, and the spear. This will increase the poignancy of our sorrow and remorse ; while we hope for mercy through that blood which we helped to shed. When our sins are viewed in this glass, we see more cause to mourn for them, than for the loss of any earthly object ; and we become inconsolable, save by the consolations of the blessed gospel. Such godly sorrow will not be ostentatious, but will court privacy, and pour out itself in secret ; and it will cause us to derelict the ordinary comforts and pleasures of life. It is also equally needful to all orders of men in society ; "for all have sinned and come short of the glory of God." When we are thus humbled, and yet can rejoice in the grace of the gospel ; let us pray for the outpouring of the Spirit on the benighted heathens, that with one consent they may look unto Jesus, mourn for sin, become his disciples, and partake of his grace and salvation ; and especially on Israel, in all his dispersions, whose conversion and restoration shall be "as life from the dead," to all the nations upon earth. (Note, Rom. 11:11-15.)

NOTES.—CHAP. XIII. V. 1. In the day mentioned at the close of the foregoing chapter, (Note, 12:9-14.) a fountain would be opened to the rulers and people of the Jews, in which to wash away their sins. This must mean the atoning blood of Christ, connected with his sanctifying grace. It began to flow, when from "his pierced side came forth blood and water." (Notes, John 19:31-37, vv. 34, 37, 1 John 5:6.) This is not like the laver, or sea of brass, in the court of the temple, which continually had need to be replenished : for it is a fountain supplied from his infinite fullness, and the infinite sufficiency of his atonement, and never diminishing, how much soever it is used. This fountain has indeed been hitherto closed, with respect to the unbelieving nation of Israel : but when "the Spirit of grace" shall humble and soften their hearts, he will also open it to their view, and lead them to wash away their guilt and pollution in it. (Notes, 2 Cor. 3:12-16.)—^c He sheweth what shall be the fruit of their repentance, to wit, remission of sins by the blood of Christ, which shall be a continual running fountain to purge them from all uncleanness.^d When Christ was crucified, the blood and water from his pierced side, were emblems of pardon through his atonement, and regeneration and sanctification by his Spirit. These blessings are outwardly represented in baptism and in the Lord's supper : but to explain this promise of either or both of them, considered as external ordinances, is palpably to mistake "the sign" for "the thing signified," than which a more perilous and ruinous notion has scarcely ever been entertained, however it may be supported by eminent names and specious reasonings. (Marg. Ref. b. Notes, Ps. 51:1-7, 10, Ez. 36:25-27, 1 Cor. 6:9-11, Tit. 2:4-7, 1 John 1:5-7, Rev. 1:4-6, 7:13-17, v. 14, [Uncleanness.] Marg. and Ref. Note, Is. 64:6-8, Ez. 36:17.)

V. 2, 3. Idolatry had, before the captivity, been the prevailing sin of the Jewish nation : and their false prophets had been the instruments of unclean spirits, in seducing the people into that and other abominations. But they were never addicted to gross idolatry after the days of Zechariah. That remembered : and also I will 'cause the prophets and the unclean spirit to pass out of the land.

3 And it shall come to pass, that when any shall yet prophesy, then his father and his mother that begat him shall say unto him, Thou shalt not live ; for thou speakest lies in the name of the LORD : and his father and his mother that begat him shall thrust him through, when he prophesieth.

4 And it shall come to pass in that day, that the thorough reformation, however, which will take place upon the conversion of Israel to Christianity, is predicted under these allusions. Idolatry and superstition have been, and are, exceedingly prevalent in many parts of the Christian church : and while this has formed one grand hindrance to the conversion of the Jews ; it has also ensnared many of them, by inducing them to idolatrous compliances to escape persecution. (Note, Deut. 28:64.) But about the time here predicted, all these antichristian abominations will be terminated ; and converted Israel will watch very carefully against every appearance of such abuses. The very names and memorials of all the idols will be abolished ; and the false prophets, and the unclean spirit that inspired them, will be banished. (Marg. Ref. d-f. Notes, Ez. 23:13, Deut. 12:2-4, v. 3, Josh. 23:7, Is. 65:11, 12, Jer. 10:11, Mic. 5:10-15, Matt. 12:43-45, Rev. (19:17-21, v. 20, 20:1-3).) And if any shall still presume to prophesy against the gospel of Christ, or to promote idolatry or superstition ; even their parents will strenuously oppose them, and be the first to bring them forth to punishment, according to the law of Moses. (Marg. Ref. g. Notes, Deut. 13:6-11, 18:20-22, Luke 14:25-27, 2 Cor. 5:16.)—^c They shall treat such a one in the same manner as their fathers did the true prophet, the Messiah ; shall pierce or thrust him through.^d Louth. How far the nation of Israel may then, under a theocracy, be governed according to their judicial law, we cannot determine : but these expressions, taken from it, merely denote the vigorous and decided measures which will be used to suppress these abominations, according to the nature of the dispensation under which they shall live.—The universal ruin of idolatry seems also predicted. "That gross idolatry wherewith the world was infected, shall now cease ; and the very names of those pagan idols shall now be forgotten." Ep Hall.

V. 4-6. The odium cast on false prophets at the predicted time, as well as the failure of their predictions, will put them to shame ; and they will no longer wear rough garments, like those of the true prophets, in order to deceive the people. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 2 Kings 1:8, Matt. 3:4.) But they will disclaim the name, for fear of disgrace and punishment ; declaring that they had been brought up to other occupations, about which they meant to employ themselves : "for man hath taught me, &c.," or, "man hath possessed me from my youth," that is, as his servant. Some have thought that the abolition of the several orders of the monks and friars was here predicted ; who will at length be ashamed of their distinguishing habits, and pretensions to superior sanctity and miraculous powers, and will gladly betake themselves to other employments. But perhaps it only applies to them, because they in many respects resemble the false prophets ; who seem to have sat for the picture, which the prophet drew of future deceivers.—Among those who will disavow their being prophets, some will be found "with wounds in their hands," which may refer to marks imprinted in their hands, as a badge of their being devoted to some idol ; to the wounds that men have often given themselves by voluntary austerities ; or to some punishment which had been inflicted on them for their impostures. These they ascribe to other causes, as having been the effect of accident or correction, when at home with their friends ; or, as a mark affixed to show to what person or family they belonged. (Marg. Ref. k-m. Notes, Rev. 13:13-17, vv. 16, 17, 14:9-11.)—As a most remarkable prophecy of Christ follows in the next verse, some expositors explain this also of him, and the wounds that he received in his hands when crucified. The Jews were professedly the friends of the promised Messiah, and he had acted in the most friendly manner to the nation : but they put him to death by a blind and malevolent perversion of the law, which God by Moses had given against deceivers and false prophets.

V. 7. The prophet here enters on a new subject : he had been prophesying of more remote futurity ; but he returns to predict the death of Christ, and shows what the consequence of that event would be to his people. "The sword" of divine justice had lain asleep, as it were, during the long season of God's forbearance. (Note, Rom. 3:21-26, vv. 25, 26.) but he now commanded it to "awake," in order to execute vengeance upon "his Shepherd," whom he had appointed to feed his flock : it was commissioned to awake "against the Man," one in human nature, the Redeemer now considered as incarnate : yet this was no ordinary man, much less an enemy

5 But he shall say, I am no prophet, I am a husbandman; for man taught me to keep cattle from my youth.

6 And one shall say unto him, What are these wounds in thy hands? Then he shall answer, Those with which I was wounded in the house of my friends.

7 ¶ Awake, O sword, against my Shepherd, and against the Man that is my Fellow, saith the LORD of hosts: smite the Shepherd, and the sheep shall be scattered; and I will turn my hand upon the little ones.

8 And it shall come to pass, that in all the land, but "my Fellow," Companion, Equal, Compeer, "saith the LORD of hosts," even the Son of the Father, "the Word that was with God, and was God." It was commissioned "to smite the Shepherd" without sparing him; which may refer to the whole of Christ's sufferings, in which men and evil spirits were no more than the executioners of that wrath of God which he suffered for our sins: yet it seems especially to relate to his agonies in the garden, and his exclamation on the cross, when he endured unspeakable anguish from the immediate hand of the Father, who "was pleased to bruise him and to put him to grief," till divine justice was fully satisfied. When the Shepherd should thus be smitten for the sins of the flock, "the sheep would be scattered," as the disciples were when Christ was apprehended; (Matt. 26:31, 56, Mark 14:27.) and then the Lord would "turn his hand upon the little ones," to take care of the helpless company, which would be exposed like little children to the rage of their persecutors, when their Lord was taken from them. (Marg. Ref. s. Notes, 11:7-11, v. 7, 11, Matt. 10:40-42, 18:14, Luke 22:31-34, John 6:36-40, 16:31-33, 18:4-9.) —My fellow.] עֲמִיתִי. The word rendered neighbour in general. V. 8, 9. In consequence of the sin of the Jews, in rejecting and crucifying Christ, and in opposing his gospel, the Romans would be employed to go through and destroy the greatest part of them, all over the land. But a remnant, "a third part," would be preserved: and, after having passed through trials and afflictions, like a fiery furnace, till they were proved and refined; they would at length be converted, and be acknowledged as the people of God. (*Marg. Ref. t-y. This may refer to the conversion of a remnant of the Jews, in the days of the apostles; but it seems also to predict that the remnant of the nation, which should survive the almost extirpating destruction made of them by the Romans, after having been long preserved a distinct people in the midst of extraordinary trials and oppressions, would at length, when "the Spirit of grace and supplications should be poured out upon them," call upon the Lord in humble faith and great fervency; and, being converted to Christianity, should be readmitted to the privileges of his people, and taught to acknowledge him for the Lord their God, as he is revealed to sinners in Jesus Christ; and so he would own and bless them as his people. PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Blessed be God, he has prepared a fountain for the most guilty and polluted; and his gospel invites us all to wash in it and be clean. The proud and unbelieving, however, cannot discern its nature, use, or excellency. But when the heart is humbled and set against sin, the fountain is disclosed to view; and the believer daily washes in it, till his robes are made white, and he is prepared to join the glorious company before the throne of God.—Pardon of sin is inseparably connected with genuine repentance; so that justifying faith is never separated from sanctifying grace. Thus men learn to love the truths, precepts, and ordinances of God, and to hate every false way. They forget or abhor their idols and iniquities; they become zealous against all impostures, by which false teachers and unclean spirits corrupt the minds of men: they "thenceforth know no man after the flesh" Christ becomes more dear to them than sons or daughters; they will "content earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints;" nor will they connive at their nearest relatives, who "speak lies in the name of the LORD." Indeed the Christian dispensation does not require those severities, which God commanded by the judicial law of Moses: yet the prevalence of true religion will bring all delusions into neglect, and expose them to censure: and it will make men ashamed and afraid to publish their false visions or impostures, "by which they lie in wait to deceive."—Even external mortification and apparent deadness to the world, may be the cloak of ambition and hypocrisy; and "rough garments" may be used, as well as more pompous sacerdotal vestments, to awe men's minds into a blind deference to an antichristian deceiver.—It is desirable that false teachers should be driven from that employment to some more useful occupation: but still more that they should "repent, and do works meet for repentance."—It can never be without benefit for us to recollect the "wounds in the hands" and feet of the gracious Saviour. Alas! how often has he been wounded in the house of his professed friends? Yea, by his real friends, his disciples, when, forgetful of their obligations, they have acted inconsistently with the honour of his gospel. May we then ever remember the price, which it cost him "to open for us a fountain for sin and uncleanness;" may we not forget the dignity of our Shepherd, as the Compeer of the Lord of hosts; nor yet the depth of his humiliation and the intenseness of his sufferings, while smitten by the sword of divine justice, when it awoke against him, that he might be punished for our sins; nor the "love which passeth knowledge," which moved him thus to interpose in our behalf. Thus whilst we wash in the sacred fountain, we shall reflect with awe and gratitude on him, whose vital blood supplied the purifying stream; we shall learn to hate sin, and love, adore, and obey our Benefactor; to submit to corrections, and endure persecutions; expecting to be conformed to the Redeemer by suffering in this evil world, as we hope to be in glory, when we arrive at that better world above. For while the many neglect this great salvation to their ruin, the remnant who are saved must pass "through much tribulation into the kingdom of God;" that, by these fiery trials, as well as by the purifying fountain, they may be refined like gold, and made "meet for their Master's use, and ready for every good work." But if the sharpest sufferings lead us to call upon the Lord, with increasing fervency, frequency, and importunity, he will hear us: and if we be "his people, and he be our God," the event of our trials will be "praise and honour, and glory, at the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ."

NOTES.—CHAP. XIV. V. 1-3. 'The Romans, being lords of the known world, had the strength of all nations united in their forces.' Louth.—Half. (2) 'The Hebrew word may be rendered a portion. . . The Romans spared the young and useful part of the Jews. However these were either condemned to the mines in Egypt, or exposed to the sword, and to the wild beasts, in the provincial theatres, or sold for slaves. . . The forty thousand, who were permitted to go where they pleased, were Idumeans.' Bp. Newcombe. Yet all these were "cut off from the city."—Some expositors, on this and other grounds, suppose that all the predictions of this chapter relate to events still future: but probably they begin with the catastrophe of Jerusalem's destruction by the Romans, and so gradually extend to those events, which shall hereafter take place in respect of the Jews, the church of Christ and their enemies. The time when the Romans marched their armies, composed of many nations, to besiege Jerusalem, was "the day of the LORD" Jesus, on which he came to "destroy those that would not that he should reign over them." (Marg. Ref. a, b. Notes, Matt. 22:1-10, v. 7, 24, 33-35, Luke 19:11-27, v. 14, 27, 41-44.) When

4 ¶ And his feet shall stand in that day upon the mount of Olives, which is before Jerusalem on the east, and the mount of Olives shall cleave in the midst thereof toward the east and toward the west, and there shall be a very great valley; and half of the mountain shall remove toward the north, and half of it toward the south.

the Romans had taken the city, all the outrages were committed, and the miseries endured, which are here predicted. (Marg. Ref. c-e. Note, Luke 21:20-24.) A very large proportion of the inhabitants were destroyed, or taken captives, and sold for slaves; and multitudes were driven away to be pursued by various perils and miseries: numbers also, having been converted to Christianity, became citizens of "the heavenly Jerusalem," and thus were "not cut off from the city" of God. (Notes, Gal. 4:21-31. Heb. 12:22-25.) But, it is probable that the remnant of Jews who survived this almost exterminating destruction, and their descendants who have for so many centuries been preserved a distinct people, in order to their future restoration, are intended. (See on Note, 13:8, 9.)—It is also observable, that the Romans after having been thus made the executioners of divine vengeance on the Jewish nation, never prospered as they had done before; but the Lord evidently fought against them, and all the nations which composed their overgrown empire; till at last it was subverted, and their fairest cities and provinces were ravaged by barbarous invaders. (Marg. Ref. g. Note, 12-25.)

Day of battle. (3) "When he overthrew the Egyptians in the Red Sea; or when the ark of God's presence led the armies of Israel in the land of Canaan." Louth. (Marg. Ref. h.)

V. 4, 5. The Lord Jesus, who will "go forth to fight against" the enemies of his people, often stood upon the mount of Olives when on earth; from thence he ascended into heaven; and, in consequence of his ascension, and the commission granted to his apostles, the gospel was sent to the different regions of the globe. (Marg. Ref. i. Notes, Ez. 11:22-25, v. 23. Matt. 21:1-5. Luke 24:50-53. Acts 1:9-12.) The ceremonial law, and the whole Mosaic dispensation, which obstructed the admission of the Gentiles into the church as the surrounding mountains did their entrance into Jerusalem, were then virtually removed. The peculiar privileges, that Jerusalem had enjoyed, (of which the pleasant and fruitful mount of Olives was an apt emblem,) were taken from her and divided among the heathen nations; and the remnant of Jews, who believed the word of God, fled away from the destruction which was coming on Jerusalem. The valley caused by the removal of this mountain, "reached unto Azazel." Some suppose this to be a proper name of some place, near the mount of Olives; but being derived from a verb which signifies to separate, it may signify the separate place. Some think that the Gentiles are meant, who, by the ceremonial law had been separated from the people of God, yet were at length admitted into the church: but perhaps the place to which the Jewish converts fled, to separate themselves from their unbelieving countrymen, when the Roman armies were about to encompass Jerusalem, may be intended. Thither they fled, being warned by these convulsions. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. k-n. Notes, 4:4-7. Is. 64:1-3. Mic. 1:3-4. Matt. 24:15-18. 27:51-53, v. 52.)—On the cleaving of mount Olivet, while part was removed to the north and part to the south, a valley, or chasm is supposed to have been made from east to west, through which those who took the alarm hastened to escape, as the Jews had "fled from before the earthquake in the days of Uzziah." This seems to have been very terrible, as the traditional memory of it was common when Zechariah prophesied, nearly three hundred years after. (Notes, Am. 1:1. Rev. 11:13, 14. 16:17-21.) Then says the prophet, "the Lord my God will come, and all the saints with thee;" that is, Christ would come to destroy Jerusalem and to establish his church and kingdom, in which all his saints and angels would joyfully concur. (Marg. Ref. p, q. Notes, Deut. 33:2. Ps. 50:1-3. 96:10-13. 98:1-9. Dan. 7:9-14, 23-27. Matt. 16:24-28, v. 27. 24:29-31. 25:31-33. 2 Thes. 1:5-10. Jude 14-16.) The above seems the most satisfactory interpretation: the language made use of may with great probability be considered as figurative; and the rejection of the Jews, and the establishment of the Christian church, chiefly of Gentile converts with only a remnant of God's ancient people, and the total abolition of all the ancient rights, was the most extraordinary religious revolution, which had then, or has yet, taken place.—Some, however, consider the passage as a prediction of events yet unfulfilled; but, as might have been expected, they are not agreed what particular events are intended.

V. 6-9. If the preceding verses have been properly explained, these contain a compendious prophecy of the state of the church, from its establishment in the apostle's days, to those glorious times, which are expected in the predicted millennium. "In that day," under the Christian dispensation, for a long season, the light would neither be "clear nor dark;" it would be greatly obscured by ignorance, heresy, superstition, and idolatry; yet not wholly extinguished; and the state of the church would be much deformed by sin and calamities; yet some holiness and consolation would be found. This period could neither be called a clear bright day, cheered and illumined by the shining of a summer's sun; nor would it be dark, as if the sun were set, or totally eclipsed; but it would contain a great mixture of truth and error, of holiness and sin, of happiness and misery. Yet it would form one day, and never be interrupted by a night of total darkness. It would also be known unto the Lord, as to the degree of its light, and the term of its continuance; and he would watch over it, and take care of his cause and people during all the time of it. But his people would hardly know, whether to call it day or night, or a compound of both; yet at length, towards the evening of the world, "the Sun of righteousness" would break forth, and shine with unclouded splendour, dispelling the gloom of ignorance, heresy, idolatry, and superstition; and illuminating the church, and the earth, with knowledge, righteousness, peace, and consolation. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. r-u. Notes, Is. 9:6, 7, v. 7. 30:26. 60:15-22. Dan. 2:4, 45. 7:8. 11:31-45. Hos. 3:4, 5. 6:1-3. Rev. 11:3-14. 19:1-21. 20:1-6.) During that whole period, however, the gospel, attended by the influences of the Holy Spirit, having begun its progress from Jerusalem, would continue its course on every side, amidst all those changes of which summer and winter are an emblem. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. x, y. Notes, Ez. 47:1-11. Joel 3:18-21.) Thus nothing should totally impede its progress, till "the Lord shall be King over all the earth," not only in right but in fact; till neither idols, false religion, nor antichristian power should remain, as his rivals; till all princes should submit to and serve him; and all the earth should agree in one Object and way of worship, and unite in submission and obedience to one Lord. No longer would they have deities of different names, according to the regions which they inhabited; or trust to the tutelary care of this or the other saint; or be divided into a number of sects and parties; but they would be all of one mind, to worship that one "name of the Father the Son, and the Holy Ghost," into which all Christians are baptized.—This interpretation evidently accords with various other prophecies, both in the Old and New Testament, and with the history of the Christian church, which records the fulfilment of those prophecies: and it shows, that the prophet was inspired to deliver a regular series of predictions, from the death of Christ (Note, 13:7.) to the establishment of the millennium: (Marg. Ref. z, a. Notes, 8:20-23. Gen. 49:10. Ps. 2:6-12. 22:27, 28. 72:4-7, 17-19. Is. 2:2-5. 11:6-9. 54:3, 5. Zeph. 3:9, 10. Matt. 25:19, 20. Rev. 11:15-18.) whereas, according to some eminent expositors, the most distant events are brought together, without the least connexion; and the reader cannot tell, whether any part has been fulfilled, or what part; or whether the triumphs of the church on earth, or the glories of heaven are foretold.

V. 10, 11. About the same time, an entire change will be made in the condition, disposition, and character of Israel, even as great, as if a large district should be entirely levelled to a plain; the mountains being cast down, and the valleys filled up. Every outward or inward obstruction to their conversion, and restoration to their own land, will be effectually removed. Jerusalem, which has long been "trodden under foot of the Gentiles," will be raised up from that debased condition, and rebuilt to the whole of her former extent, and inhabited throughout: and it shall no more be devoted to utter destruction, under the awful curse of God, as it had been after the crucifixion of Christ; but it will become a secure and peaceful habitation for the converted Jews. V. 12-15. These verses seem to predict the tremendous judgments, which will be inflicted on those who shall oppose the settlement of the Jews in their own land: but whether they are to be understood literally, or not, the event must determine. They will all, however, be subdued by Judah "fighting at Jerusalem," and by their fierce contentions with each other: and all that appertain to them will share in the plague: while restored Israel, whom they shall assault, will be enriched by their spoil. But it may also be interpreted of the destruction of all antichristian powers, which shall precede the glorious millennium. "The LORD will save the tents of Judah first;" (12:7.) and then "they shall join their forces against the common enemy, when he comes against Jerusalem." (12:2.) Louth. No doubt the same events are predicted as in the verse referred to. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, 10:4-12, v. 4, 5, 12:2-8, Judg. 7:16-22, 1 Sam. 14:11-15, 2 Chr. 20:22-25, Ez. 38:19-23, 39:2-10, Dan. 11:44, 45, Joel 3:1, 2, 9-17, Acts 12:20-23, v. 23, Rev. 16:8-11, 17:15-18, 19:11-21.)

V. 16-19. The feast of tabernacles was typical of Christ's dwelling in our nature, as in a tabernacle; and of the Christian's contempt of the world, and joy in the Lord, as a stranger and pilgrim on earth. (Marg. Ref. p-r. Notes, 8:20-23, Lev. 23:39-43, Neh. 8:14-18.) To keep the feast of tabernacles therefore seems to mean, that the persons intended would be converted to Christ, and join with pleasure in his ordinances, continually and with perseverance. The remnant of the nations, which had just before been fighting against Jerusalem, or the church; the surviving subjects of the eastern and western antichrists, and all the Gentiles, will in general be converted to pure Christianity, and become the spiritual worshippers and obedient servants of the Lord. But such as persist in idolatry, and opposition to true religion, will be visited with drought and famine; which probably implies both temporal and spiritual judgments. And, as Egypt seldom has any rain, and another method must be taken to visit her with famine; so no situation or circumstances shall preserve any people from these judgments, who refuse to worship the Lord alone, because of their attachment to their ancient superstitions and idolatries, or to their iniquities: they must therefore either be converted or destroyed. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. s-u. Notes, Ps. 2:6-12, 149:7-9, Is. 5: 6, 7, Am. 4:7-9, 8:11-14, Jam. 5:16-18, Rev. 11:3-6, 15 And ²⁸so shall be the plague of the horse of the mule, of the camel, and of the ass, and of all the beasts that shall be in these tents, as this plague.

16 And it shall come to pass, ²⁹that every one that is left of all the nations which came against Jerusalem, shall even go up from year to year to worship ³⁰the King, the LORD of hosts, and to keep the feast of tabernacles.

17 And it shall be, ³¹that whoso will not come up of ³²all the families of the earth unto Jerusalem to worship the King, the LORD of hosts, ³³even upon them shall be no rain.

18 And if the family of Egypt go not up, and come not, ³⁴that have no rain; there shall be the plague, wherewith the LORD will smite the heathen that come not up to keep the feast of tabernacles.

19 This shall be the ³⁵punishment of Egypt and the punishment of all nations that come not up to keep the feast of tabernacles.

v. 6.) The impossibility of all nations literally coming to Jerusalem, every year, to observe a feast, is alone sufficient to prove that a figurative meaning must be sought for: but the event only can fully ascertain that meaning. (Note, Is. 66:19-23.)—The Jews have a tradition, that the defeat of Gog and Magog, which seems to be the same discomfiture which is here described, shall fall out upon the feast of tabernacles; or as others say, that the seven months' cleansing of the land (Ez. 39:12.) shall be finished at that time. Louth. In the upper parts of Egypt they seldom have any rain; but near the Mediterranean sea it sometimes rains abundantly, which is considered as a detriment, and not an advantage.

V. 20, 21. At length the time of the complete peace and purity of the church will arrive. Then the very "bells of the horses," or their "brides" (marg.) will be inscribed with HOLINESS TO THE LORD, according to the inscription on the mitre of the high-priest. (Note, Ex. 28:36-38.) Some explain this of the war-horses; supposing it to mean, that these being disused, their ornaments will be consecrated to God. Others understand it of horses employed in common services; and suppose it to imply, that the most secular occupations will then be so conducted, that they will become holy actions performed to the glory of God. Then the pots (either the earthen or brazen pots, which were used in boiling the sacrifices, or the drinking cups of the priests,) will be as holy as "the bowls before the altar" had been; which may signify, that the meanest minister or Christian (who is a spiritual priest,) will be equal to what the most eminent of God's servants formerly were; or that all their pleasures will be regulated with such moderation, and united with so much piety and gratitude and love, as to render them acceptable even like solemn religious services. This will be the case with all the "pots in Jerusalem and Judah;" all persons will then be thus devoted to God in their employments and satisfactions. They are likewise represented as using these pots, even for sacrifices, which may mean, that the ceremonial distinction between holy and unholy will be abolished; and that men will conduct their ordinary affairs and their sacred services, upon the same holy principles of faith, fear, love, and obedience. (*Marg. Ref. x-b. This happy state will continue to the end of the world.—How exactly do all the prophets agree about the final event of the long-continued contest, between the worship of the true God and idolatry; betwixt piety and impiety, truth and error, holiness and unholiness!—"At the even tide it shall be light;" and, blessed be God, that season cannot be very distant. (See on Note, 6-9.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-11. The judgments of God commonly begin at the sanctuary. When his day of retribution comes, he can soon gather the nations together to battle against the objects of his wrath; indeed, he needs only give them power, and their own wicked hearts will dispose them to all the enormities, which avarice, cruelty, revenge, or lust can perpetrate. But the residue of his chosen people shall never "be cut off from the city of our God;" and he seldom permits those to prosper, who have imbrued their hands in the blood of his worshippers.—

"The Lord of glory," by his incarnation, and obedience unto the death upon the cross on earth in our nature, and by his ascension into heaven, and constant intercession for us, as our faithful, compassionate, and all-prevailing High-Priest before the Father's throne, has removed all obstructions to our entrance into his church, and into the mansions of felicity; and by his gospel, he has, as it were, sent Jerusalem's choicest privileges to these distant regions: yet except we "flee for refuge to lay hold on this hope set before us," and "come to God by him," we shall be no better for these advantages, in that day, when he shall come to judgment "and all his saints with him."—Men flee without delay from an earthquake, and leave every thing behind them, "lest the earth swallow them up also;" how should we then flee to the greatest distance from the brink of that tremendous gulf which continually swallows up such multitudes of the ungodly!—In this world the believer enjoys the light of day: yet it is attended with so many clouds and storms, that it often seems to resemble the night. He sees; but it is "through a glass darkly;" he experiences some hope and consolation; but they are interrupted with a variety of fears, sorrows, and temptations; and his feeble beginnings of holiness are greatly counteracted and obscured, by the remains and prevalence of his sinful passions. His life is therefore a strange mixture, or interchange, of light and darkness, and he often can scarcely tell whether it be day or night with him; yet is it "one day that is known to the LORD;" his faith and hope may be much enfeebled and clouded, but they are never extinguished: his Sun may be eclipsed, or hidden, but it never goes down: it may be winter with his soul, but it is never total darkness, as with those who are yet unconverted. The Lord also knows all his difficulties, discouragements, and temptations: he can distinguish between his conflicts, failures, errors, and seasons of distrust or slackness; and the total unbelief, the willing slavery and negligence, of "the children of disobedience;" and he knows how to make all needful allowances, and to communicate proportionable supports.—It often happens likewise, that, towards the evening of life, the believer's light becomes more clear and abiding, and his last days his best days: and indeed his personal experience generally accords to that of the church, the "light of which will shine more and more unto the perfect day" (Notes, Prov. 4:18, 19. 2 Cor. 3:18, 19. 4:6. Gal. 5:16-18, v. 17. 2 Pet. 1:19. Rev. 21:22-27.) Let us then be thankful even for the dawning "of the Sun of righteousness" upon our souls; and let us rejoice in the hope of a clearer and more sanctifying and cheering and seeth therein: and in that day there shall be no more the Canaanite in the house of the LORD of hosts.

17. John 2:15, 16. Rev. 18:11-15. 21:27. 22:15. d 1 Tim. 3:15. Heb. 3:6 1 Pet. 4:17.

light, towards the close of our pilgrimage; as ushering in the perfect light of the world above. The sacred streams of living waters also, which flowed from Zion, have reached our land: may we continually refresh our souls with them, amidst the varying dispensations of Providence; and may every revolution, and every distress of nations, make way for them to flow on, wider and deeper, till the Lord Jesus be acknowledged "King over all the earth;" till all men, in sincerity and peace, unite in the spiritual worship and service of our God and Saviour; and all distinctions are swallowed up in the universal harmony of "the nations by the obedience of faith." When the Lord shall begin to work in answer to our prayers, every mountain shall be brought low, and every valley shall be exalted; proud Babylon shall fall, and the ruins of Jerusalem shall be repaired, and her borders enlarged; that men may dwell therein safely, and fear no curse or utter destruction for ever.

V. 12-21. Whilst the grand revolutions, predicted in this chapter, shall be taking place, (and indeed at all times,) tremendous will be the plagues of all, who fight against the church; and could we see the present condition of those, who have perished in this conflict; we should behold far more terrible things, than if we witnessed men's "flesh consuming as they stand upon their feet, their eyes consuming in their holes, or their tongues in their mouths;" and every member of the body, which had been an instrument of unrighteousness, enduring the awful vengeance of God. Even that furious rage and malice, which cause men here to plague, torment, and murder each other, are faint shadows of the perfect mutual enmity, which reigns universally among the whole multitude of those, who have perished in their sins.—But every judgment of God on his enemies will tend to enrich and profit his believing people: his all-powerful grace speedily converts, and his plenteous mercy pardons and reconciles, even those who have just before been fighting against him; and they learn to rejoice in his worship and service.—But how distinguishing is that grace, which thus saves some of his enemies, at the moment when he consigns others to destruction! Yet no unbelievers can escape, how long soever they be borne with: every sinner must either be reconciled to God, or fall before him; for "his hand will find out all his enemies, . . . and he will make them as a fiery oven in the day of his wrath;" nor can any man evade his vengeance, who does not come to him, worship him, and rejoice before him.—The more the church is weaned from the beggarly elements of external distinctions and relative sanctity, the more will she be replenished with real holiness. Every action and every enjoyment of the believer, ought to be so regulated according to the truth and will of God, and directed to his glory, that it may be holiness to him. Our whole lives ought to be as one constant sacrifice or act of devotion: no selfish or mercenary motive should prevail in any of our actions, any more than "a Canaanite" should enter "into the house of the LORD." Alas! how far are we from this perfection! How far is the Christian church from this state of purity! How are her sacred functions made subservient to the avarice, ambition, and lusts of men! How are her ordinances profaned to secular and mercenary purposes! How are our lives defiled by low and selfish pursuits, and our duties tainted by wrong motives! But times of greater purity are at hand, and the Lord will come speedily to reform and enlarge his church as he has promised. Yet in heaven alone will perfect knowledge, holiness, and felicity be found.

BOOK OF MALACHI.

THE name of this prophet signifies, My angel, or My messenger; and is the same word as he employed concerning the forerunner of Christ, and nearly the same which he used about Christ himself. (3:1.) Perhaps he was called Malachi with reference to these predictions, as well as to his prophetic office; and probably he had another name. He seems to have been the last in order of the prophets, whose writings were transmitted to posterity; and to have been contemporary with Nehemiah, or even to have lived after his time. The scope of his prophecy was to reprove and reform many abuses and enormities, which prevailed among the Jews, and especially the priests; to announce the near approach of the Messiah; to declare the effects of his coming to men of different characters; and to teach the people in what manner they ought to wait and prepare for that event. But it also contains predictions of the calling of the Gentiles, and the extensive propagation of the Gospel. Probably, with Malachi the prophetic office ceased, or was suspended, till the coming of the Messiah, which was about four hundred years. As this prophet particularly foretold the ministry of John Baptist and the speedy coming of Christ, he is very frequently quoted or referred to, in the New Testament. (Comp. 3:1. with Matt. 11:10. Mark 1:2. Luke 7:27.—and 4:5, 6. with Matt. 17:10-12. Mark 9:11, 12. Luke 1:16, 17.)—"The words of Malachi (4:4, 5) import, that after him the Jews were not to expect a succession of prophets, whereupon he exhorts them carefully to observe the law of Moses, and to look for no other prophet, till Elias the forerunner of the Messiah should come." Louth.

CHAPTER I.

The love of God to Israel contrasted with his hatred of Edom, 1-5. God reproves the Jews, especially the priests, for ingratitude, and contempt of him and his ordinances; and foretells the calling of the Gentiles, 6-14.

NOTES.—CHAP. I. V. 1. Marg. and Marg. Ref. Notes, Is. 13:1. Jer. 23:33-40.—Israel. The Jews were more immediately intended; yet the whole nation, descended from Jacob were concerned in the subject, which is thus begun.

V. 2-5. The prophet was directed to open his message of sharp rebukes, by reminding the people of the Lord's peculiar love to them as it had been manifested in all his dealings with the nation. Yet he knew, that they would say, 'Wherein hast thou loved us?' They had endured grievous hardships during the Babylonish captivity; and though now restored to their own land, they still continued subject to the kings of Persia, and under many disadvantages, perils, and difficulties; so that they could not discern any distinguishing fruits of his peculiar love to them. (Marg. Ref. b, c. Notes, 2:17. 3:7-12. v. 7, 8. 13-18. v. 13. Deut. 7:6-8. Neh. 9:31-37. Is. 41:8, 9. Jer. 31:3-5. v. 3. Hos. 11:1.) Perhaps they supposed that they were entitled to the divine favour, as descended from Abraham, the friend of God, and from Isaac the promised seed. But Esau likewise was descended from Abraham and Isaac; and was twin-brother to Jacob, and elder than he: yet the Lord had loved and chosen Jacob, and rejected Esau as comparatively the object of his hatred. (Marg. Ref. d, e. Notes, Gen. 25:22-23. 27:27-29, 33. 29:30, 31. Deut. 21:15-17. Luke 14:25-27. Rom. 9:10-14.) Esau indeed prospered in the world; but he lost the birthright and the blessing, and lived and died, as far as it is known, profane and unbelieving; whilst Jacob was made the heir of the promises, walked with God as a believer, and died happy. (Notes, Gen. 25:31-34. 27:41, 42. 32:6-8. 33:7. 36:6, 7. 48:15, 16. 49:18. Heb. 11:13-16. 12:15-17.) They knew the history of Jacob's posterity, and they could not deny that the Lord had always remarkably appeared for them: but the mountains of the heritage, allotted to Esau's descendants, had, by wars and various means, been rendered so waste and barren, that they were only fit to harbour those monstrous serpents which frequent sandy deserts. The impoverished Edomites indeed were projecting to return to their land, and rebuild their cities, as the Jews had done; but the Lord purposed to defeat their efforts, and to make it appear that his indignation against them was perpetual; because of their other sins, and because they had unjustly enlarged their borders, by seizing the lands allotted to Israel. (Marg. Ref. f-1. Notes, Ps. 137:7-9. Is. 9:8-12. v. 9, 10. 34:3-15. 63:1-6. Jer. 49:7-22. Lam. 4:21, 22. Ez. 25:12-14. 35. Job 31:8-21. v. 19. Am. 1:11, 12. Ob. 1:1-21.) Thus the Jews would see and be compelled to own, that the Lord had magnified himself in maintaining their lot, and punishing those who endeavoured to intrench upon them. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. m, n.)—Edom was the type of the enemies of God, as Israel was of his chosen people. Judas Maccabeus and other Jewish leaders, shortly after, entirely subdued the Edomites.

V. 6-8. It was allowed by all men, that a son ought to honour the person, and respect the reputation and authority, of his father. A servant also was used to fear the displeasure, and reverence the will and commands, of his master; servant his master: 'if then I be a Father, where is my honour? and if I be a Master, where is my fear? saith the LORD of hosts unto you, 'O priests, that despise my name. 'And ye say, 'Wherein have we despised thy name?

and men would condemn him who neglected the duty of this relation. But God had always been as a Father to Israel, not only as the Author and Preserver of their natural lives, or their Benefactor in temporal things; but in respect of their religious advantages, and the typical adoption which belonged to them: (Notes, Ez. 4:22, 23. Rom. 9:4, 5.) yet where were the honour, reverence, submission, and regard to his will and glory, which that relation required? They also called him their Lord and Master; but they neither aimed to please him, nor feared to offend him; they neither respected his authority, nor obeyed his commands. (Marg. Ref. o-r. Notes, Gen. 9:20-23. Ex. 20:12. Is. 1:2. Eph. 6:1-9.)—This was especially the case with the priests, who were more highly privileged than the people, and more expressly consecrated to his service: yet they had "despised his name." (Marg. Ref. s. Notes, 2:4-9. 1 Sam. 2:12-17, 22-30.) They would indeed ask, 'Wherein have we despised thy name?' as disdaining the charge, and offended with the messenger who brought it. (Marg. Ref. t. See on Note, 2-5, v. 2.) But in answer to this, they were accused of "offering polluted bread on his altar." This may refer, either to the meat-offerings which were burned upon the altar, and which they made of the refuse of the wheat; or to the sacrifices which fed the sacred flame, and were the bread or food of the altar. (Note, Lev. 21:6.) If they further inquired how this polluted the Lord; it was answered, that they had said, "The table of the LORD is contemptible." They thought that any thing was good enough to be consumed upon the altar, or to supply, as it were, "the table of the LORD;" so that, provided the people did but bring the best of the increase to the tables of the priests, they let them offer the refuse of their flocks and herds in sacrifice. Thus the animals which were blind, or lame, and sick, and good for nothing else, were consumed on God's altar, from contempt of him and expressly contrary to his law: and was not this evidently evil? (Marg. and Marg. Ref. x, y. Notes, 9-14. Lev. 22:18-24. Ez. 41:22. 1 Cor. 10:18-22.) Would their civil governors be satisfied with such worthless animals, for tribute or for presents? Nay, would they not think themselves grossly affronted, if any thing vile and refuse were offered them? And could they expect, that the God of heaven would accept either them or their services, seeing they so despised him? 'It argues a great contempt of almighty God, when men are less careful in maintaining the decencies of his worship, than they are in giving proper respect to their superiors.' Louth. (Marg. Ref. z.)—It is evident, that these priests understood nothing of the typical meaning of the sacrifices, as shadowing forth the unblemished "Lamb of God;" that they were equally ignorant of the law, which required that the Lord should be served with the first and best of every thing; and that they grudged the expense, thinking all those oblations thrown away, which did not turn to their own emolument.

V. 9-11. The Jews seem to have been at this time suffering under some sharp rebukes from God for their sins; and the priests were appointed to burn incense, and make intercession in behalf of the nation. Let them, therefore, "beseech the LORD to be gracious" to Israel, according to the duty of their office: but as these judgments came upon the nation for the sins of the priests, or those into which they led the people

CHAPTER II.

The priests are sharply reproved, for profaning the covenant made with their fathers, and neglecting their duty, 1-9; and both the priests and people for marrying strange wives, 10-12; and treacherously divorcing their former wives, 13-16; and for impiety and presumption, 17.

AND now, ^aO ye priests, this commandment is for you.

2 If ye will not hear, and if ye will not lay it to heart, ^dto give glory unto my name, saith the LORD of hosts, I will even send a curse upon you, ^eand I will curse your blessings; yea, ^fI have cursed them already, because ye do not lay it to heart.

3 Behold, ^gI will corrupt your seed, ^hand spread dung upon your faces, ⁱeven the dung of your solemn feasts; and one shall take you away with it.

4 And ye shall know that I have sent this commandment unto you, ^jthat my covenant might be with Levi, saith the LORD of hosts.

5 My covenant was with him of life and peace; and ^kI gave them to him for the fear wherewith he feared me, and was afraid before my name.

bringing down judgments on the land; how can it be expected, that their official prayers will induce him to be gracious to us? Though he has superseded the Aaronic priesthood, and sent his gospel among the Gentiles; and prayers, praises, and thanksgivings, when offered through the merits and by the Spirit of Christ, in any place, are more acceptable to him, than the incense and oblations at Jerusalem were of old; yet human nature appears still the same. Men continue, as formerly, though in a different way, to profane the name of the Lord, and to pollute his table; to despise his work and his recompense as contemptible; to count his service weariness; and to express their contempt of him, in their behaviour towards every thing connected with his worship. And none are, at this day, more apt thus to "despise the LORD," and to "offer the lame and blind in sacrifice" than those who enter and continue in the ministry, not "of a willing mind, but for filthy lucre's sake." But let all, who love the Lord, pray that he would send disinterested, active, and diligent labourers into his harvest; such as will at present be content with food and raiment, and cheerfully wait till their Master returns, expecting at that decisive season "to receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away." (P. O. 1 Pet. 5:1-7.)

NOTES.—CHAP. II. V. 1-3. The prophet had before reproved both the priests and the people: (Notes, 1:9-14.) but this message was immediately directed to the priests, as a commandment from the Lord; and if they did not carefully and seriously attend to it, to glorify him, by repentance and a conduct more consistent with their profession, he would send his curse on them, and even curse their temporal possessions and all their peculiar advantages; that is, he would render them distressing, ensnaring, and ruinous. Nay, he had in a measure done this already. But he purposed to corrupt their seed-corn that it should yield no crop; he would not prosper any of their labours; or, he would render their posterity and the priestly family contemptible, and bring it to decay. Yea, he would render them vile; as if the dung, which was taken from the entrails of the sacrifices, should be spread over their faces, and they covered over and taken away to the dunghill along with it, as refuse and loathsomeness. 'The maw was ... the priests,' (Deut. 18:3.) but 'such priests deserved only the dung which it contained.' Bp. Neucombe. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. V. 4-9. The Lord had made a covenant with the tribe of Levi, and the family of Aaron, about the priesthood; as well as one with the nation of Israel about the land of Canaan, and their other peculiar advantages; and afterwards he made one with David about the kingdom. And the Levites would know at length that God had sent these orders, that this covenant might be confirmed to them, by means of their repentance and reformation; or, "because my covenant was with Levi," for the breach of which you are accountable. Louth. The whole tribe of Levi and family of Aaron were here spoken of as a single person, with whom "the covenant of life and peace" had been made; which would be enjoyed in the favour of God and the comfort of his service. This

6 The law of truth was in his mouth, and iniquity was not found in his lips: he walked with me in peace and equity, and did turn many away from iniquity.

7 For the priest's lips should keep knowledge, and they should seek the law at his mouth: for he is the messenger of the LORD of hosts.

8 But ye are departed out of the way; ye have caused many to stumble at the law; ye have corrupted the covenant of Levi, saith the LORD of hosts.

9 Therefore have I also made you contemptible and base before all the people, according as ye have not kept my ways, but have been partial in the law.

10 Have we not all one father? hath not one God created us? why do we deal treacherously every man against his brother, by profaning the covenant of our fathers?

11 ¶ Judah hath dealt treacherously, and an abomination is committed in Israel and in Jerusalem; for Judah hath profaned the holiness of the appointment was a gracious recompense of their piety and reverential fear of God: for when this trust was committed to them, many of them were well acquainted with the law given by Moses, and ready to speak of it to the people: their worship and conversation were sincere and faithful, and free from iniquity or hypocrisy: they "walked before God," as at peace with him, and as following after equity and peace with men; and they were instrumental in converting numbers from their sins, to the worship and service of God. (Marg. Ref. i-o. Notes, Ez. 32:26-29. Num. 16:8-11. 25:11-13. Deut. 33:8-11. 2 Chr. 17:7-9. 30:21, 22. Ezra 7:6-10. Neh. 8:1-9:13. 9:3. Jer. 23:21, 22. Ez. 44:23, 24. Dan. 12:2, 3. Hos. 4:6. They were not mere sacrificers, as their posterity had become; but they were sensible, that the priest ought ever to be ready to speak upon any part of sacred knowledge, and as the messenger of God, to instruct the people from his word. (Marg. Ref. q. Notes, Lev. 10:8-11. Deut. 17:8-13. Jer. 18:18. Hag. 2:10-14.) Yet their posterity had departed from this good way; they had violated the law by their conduct, and perverted it by their explanations; and thus they stumbled, prejudiced, and misled the people: they had abused, and broken the covenant made with their fathers; and therefore they were rendered base among the people, and exposed to contempt as a worthless, mercenary set of men. This was a divine judgment upon them for their sins; especially for being "partial in the law," leaving out such parts, as did not suit their interest, convenience, or inclination; or interpreting it by private regards and affections. (Marg. and Marg. Ref. s-z. Notes, 1-3. 1 Sam. 2:17-30. 3:6. 3:12. Is. 9:13-17, v. 15, 16. Matt. 5:21, 22, 27-32. 15:3-6. 23:16-28. 1 Tim. 5:21, 22. Jam. 3:17, 18.)

Fear wherewith, &c. (5) Of which the holy writings give us two remarkable instances; the zeal of the Levites against the worshippers of the golden calf, ... and that zealous act of Phinehas, mentioned Num. 25: ... The Levites had forty-eight cities allotted them among the several tribes, that the people might more easily consult them. Louth. (Note, Num. 35:2-8.) It is required, ... of the priests of God's sanctuary, that they should be men of knowledge and heavenly wisdom; so as their breasts should keep, and their lips should express to the people, the right understanding of divine things. Bp. Hall.

V. 10-12. The prophet next addressed himself to both the priests and the people. They were all descended from Adam and Noah, as men; and from Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, as Israelites. They were formed by the Creator of one nature, and of one nation; yet they dealt treacherously with each other; and this they did in many respects, so as to "profane that holiness," which God had put upon Israel, by separating and consecrating them to be a holy people to himself. This holiness "the LORD loved;" yet they despised and profaned it, by their intercourse with idolaters in preference to their brethren. For even Judah, in Jerusalem in the holy city, had committed an abomination, in marrying the daughters of idolaters, which were the children of an idol, and of Satan who was worshipped in the idol; so that they became as it were sons in law to the idol, and to Satan, in contempt of their consecration to JEHOVAH. (Marg. and in mind of the first institution of marriage, (as Christ did afterwards on a like occasion) and tells them, that God made but one man at first; (the word rendered "one" is masculine.) "and made the woman out of him; when he could have created more women, if he had pleased: to instruct men, that this was the true pattern of marriage, ordained for true love and undivided affection, and best serving the chief end of matrimony, namely, the religious education of children." Louth.—"The Lord God ... breathed into his nostrils the breath" (or spirit) "of life, and man became a living soul." But had he not "the residue of the spirit?" Was his life-giving power exhausted? and could he not have created many women for this one man, had he seen good? But he meant that a godly posterity should be trained up, which would best be done by the joint care of both parents, living together in love, and uniting their instructions, examples, and prayers for that end; to which polygamy and divorces would have been alike unfavourable. V. 17. The profane language of the people was as offensive to God, as their actual impieties and injustice: for they avowed the blasphemous opinion, that he was most pleased with wicked men. The persons who said this, did not prosper in their outward circumstances, as they expected; they proudly thought themselves good and entitled to God's favour; they envied the prosperity of the wicked; and they argued, that if the Lord were "a God of judgment," he would not let matters go on in this manner: so that unless he punished their enemies and prospered them, they should be ready to deny his Being, providence, or perfections. 'The prosperity of the wicked, . . . implied, as they thought, either that their works were pleasing to God; or else that he disregarded human affairs, and would never call men to account for their actions.' Louth.

V. 1-9. Those who will not lay the commandments of God to heart, to glorify him by repentance and obedience, must be exposed to his awful curse; and their abused temporal blessings will be mingled with bitterness, and be made an occasion of falling to them: yet very often, men under severe rebukes in their persons, connexions, undertakings, and possessions, do not see the hand of God lifted up against them.—It is a peculiar favour to be employed in the sacred ministry, and in making known to sinners, “the covenant of life and peace:” when they, who are thus engaged, are themselves interested in that covenant, and when God has put his fear into their hearts, and made them eminent for faith and holiness. Such ministers will be able and ready to teach the truths and precepts of God’s word with gravity and sincerity; and “iniquity will not be found in their lips:” they will “walk with God in peace and righteousness, and turn many from iniquity,” who will be “their joy and crown of rejoicing in the day of Jesus Christ.” But all, who sustain or desire to enter into this sacred function must remember a prediction of the Messiah's forerunner: and of the Messiah himself, to cleanse his church and to judge the wicked, 1-6. The people are warned to repent, especially of their sacrilege and proud blasphemy, 7-15. A blessing is promised to such as feared God and spake together of him, when the righteous shall be separated from the wicked, 16-18.

that the lips of a minister should be fraught with divine knowledge, brought forth from the good treasure of heavenly wisdom, stored up in the heart; that men may be induced to inquire the truth and will of God from his mouth, as "the messenger of the LORD" to their souls. Ministers who answer this description honour God, and he will honour them, and make them honourable before men in due time and measure.—But, alas! how large a proportion of those, who fill the holy office, entirely depart from this good old way! How many pervert and corrupt the precept of the law, and the doctrine of the covenant, by their partial, superficial, and erroneous instructions; and cause men to stumble by their wicked examples! Such ministers therefore soon fall into contempt: the people disregard their instructions, and do not scruple to defraud them of their incomes; and sometimes even alienate that provision, which they have done so little to deserve, and so much to forfeit: and, however unjust man may be in these transactions, the Lord is evidently righteous; for "they that despise him shall be lightly esteemed."

V. 10-23. The selfishness and depravity of the human heart are continually striking out new channels of iniquity. Forgetful that "one God hath created them," and that they are sprung from one common father, men multiply frauds and oppressions against their brethren: nay, professed Christians against their fellow Christians, profaning that sacred character to the vilest of purposes. Among other evidences of men's comparative disregard to piety, that is peculiarly worthy of notice, which arises from the marriage of professors of godliness with those who are openly irreligious. Men, who value their distinctions of rank or family, will not degrade themselves by alliances with those beneath them: yet those who profess themselves to be of Israel, and "holiness to the LORD," set so little value on this distinction, as deliberately and wilfully to ally themselves with the children of his avowed enemy! This is no light matter: for he, who of old determined to "cut off from the tabernacles of Jacob, the master or scholar" who did this, will never connive at it in Christians.—The Lord also notices men's behaviour in the different relations of life; he witnesses the unfaithfulness, imperiousness, and unkindness of numbers to their wives, and their violation of the vow and covenant, which they made to them before him and the congregation. He hears the prayers and complaints, and sees the tears of those who have been thus injured; and, as he would have his children joyful in his service, he will call those to account who cause them to weep before him.—The depravity of men has rendered it necessary in civil society, to connive at deviations from the original institution of marriage: but in all our reasonings on that subject we must revert to it. Did not he, who "had the residue of the spirit," create one woman, and no more, for man in paradise? and was not this designed, that, with united attention, both parents might bring up their posterity in the fear and service of God? Can therefore polygamy or divorces on frivolous pretences, be reconcilable with this appointment? And does not the impious and unfaithful conduct of many professed Christians, to the wives of their youth, form a perfect contrast to the love of Christ to his espoused church? (Notes and P. O. Eph. 5:21-33.) If men would "take heed to their spirits," they would find, that their behaviour in relative life springs from base selfishness, which disregards the welfare of society, and the happiness of individuals, when put in competition with the indulgence of their base passions and unreasonable caprices; however they may cloak their violence by other pretences. Yet we may the less wonder at their cruelty to their inferiors, purge them as gold and silver, that they may offer unto the LORD an offering in righteousness.

4 Then shall the offering of Judah and Jerusalem be pleasant unto the LORD, was in the days of old, and as in former years.

5 And I will come near to you to judgment: and I will be a swift witness against the sorcerers, and against the adulterers, and against false swearers, and against those that oppress the hireling in his wages, the widow, and the fatherless, and that turn aside the stranger from his right, and fear not me, saith the LORD of hosts.

6 For I am the LORD, I change not; therefore ye sons of Jacob are not consumed.

7 I Even from the days of your fathers ye are gone away from mine ordinances, and have not kept them. Return unto me, and I will return when they weary God himself with their impiety and infidelity and when they take occasion from his righteous rebukes to blaspheme his name, and charge him with partiality and injustice. But they who inquire in this daring manner, "Where is the God of judgment?" will soon be answered by his appearing to judge the world in righteousness, and to inflict vengeance on all his enemies.

NOTES.—CHAP. III. V. 1-4. It is evident that JEHOVAH himself here speaks; and he says, "Behold, I will send my messenger to prepare the way before me." Now John the Baptist, who beyond doubt was intended, prepared the way before Christ. (Marg. Ref. a, b. Notes, 4:4-6. 1s. 40:3-8. Matt. 3:3. 11:7-11. Mark 1:1, 2. Luke 1:1-17, vv. 16, 17. 7:6-79. John 1:6-9, 19-28.) Then "the Lord," (the same whom David called "his Lord," Note, Ps. 110:1.) "whom they sought" and expected would "come to his temple," or his own temple, which could not be fulfilled in Christ, unless he were the Lord and Proprietor of the temple. (Note, Hag. 2:6-9.) He would "come suddenly," or immediately after his forerunner had announced his approach: and this he did, when he repeatedly cast out the buyers and sellers from it, and there daily preached to the people. (Marg. Ref. c. Notes, Matt. 21:12, 13, 23-27. Luke 22:1-32, 41-52. John 2:13-17.) He would be "the Angel," or "Messenger of the covenant," even the new covenant of mercy and grace, which he came to mediate. (Notes, Gen. 48:15, 16. Ex. 23:20-23. 1s. 63:9. Acts 7:30-36, vv. 30, 35.) In the prospect of his coming the Jews professed to delight.—He is the person ye delight in, whose coming is so much desired, the time of it being the subject of your search and inquiry, and the expectation of it your comfort and delight. Louth. But, who among the people would be able to abide his coming, and stand the test of his doctrine, and the trying dispensations which would attend the setting up of his kingdom? For he would resemble "the refiner's fire and the fuller's soap," and no hypocrite or wicked man could abide the test. He would "sit as a refiner of gold and silver," to purify his church, and the hearts of his people, from all dross; and thus he would prepare a pure race of ministers, and a spiritual priesthood, (instead of the corrupt and rejected tribe of Levi,) who might present before him a holy worship, as pleasant to him as the services and sacrifices of the most eminent believers, in the pure times of the ancient church. (*Marg. and Marg. Ref. d-m. See on Note, 1:9-11, v. 9. Notes, 4:1. 1s. 1:25-27. 4:3, 4. 48:9-11. 61:4-6. 66:19, 23. Zech. 13:8, 9. 14:20, 21. Matt. 3:7-12. V. 5, 6. (2:17.) The coming of Christ would be followed by the condemnation and punishment of the Jewish nation. He would come "near unto them to judgment, and . . . be a swift witness," to testify that their works were evil: (Note, John 7:30-10, v. 7.) and thus he would speedily convict the sorcerers, and other notorious criminals, of which the bulk of the nation at that time principally consisted; and then he would bring them to condign punishment. Indeed the prevalence of the sins here enumerated, and of similar crimes, caused the Jews to reject Christ and his holy gospel, and thus brought on the ruin of the nation. (*Marg. and Marg. Ref. n-r. Notes, 2:13-17. Ps. 50:3-21, v. 6, 7, 18-21. Jer. 7:5-7. 22:13-19, vv. 13, 14, 17. 29:21-23. Zech. 5:1-4. Matt. 23:13-33. John 3:19-21. Acts 7:50-52. 1 Cor. 6:9-11. Gal. 5:19-21. Jam. 4:1-6. 5:1-6. unto you, saith the LORD of hosts. But ye said, Wherein shall we return?

8 Will a man rob God? yet ye have robbed me. But ye say, Wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings.

however wicked, till the Messiah was come: but then his immutable justice, holiness, and truth, required him to punish them for their enormous wickedness. (Marg. Ref. s-u. Notes, Ex. 3:14, 15. Thus many nominal Christians seem to suppose, that God, under the gospel, is too merciful to punish sinners; or at least that he makes far more allowances for sin than formerly: but, as his immutable perfection had hitherto led him, amidst all the provocations of Israel, to perform his promises to their fathers; so the same immutable perfection would still induce him, when the Messiah was come, to "magnify his law," to glorify his justice, and to honour his truth and holiness, by the condign punishment of all the impenitent and unbelieving. V. 7-12. The Jews in the time of Malachi copied the sins of their fathers, and proudly excused their conduct: instead of repenting and returning unto God, that he might return to them. It must be allowed to be the height of atrocious wickedness for a man to rob God: yet they had been guilty of this daring injustice; for they had not paid him the tithes and oblations, which he claimed from them, as the portion allotted to his ministers, the priests and Levites, but had sacrilegiously appropriated them to their own use: and the whole nation was involved in this guilt, and lay under his awful curse for it. But let them render him what he demanded as his due, or rent, as it were, for the land, that the priests and Levites might have no excuse for their secularism, and thus put his truth to the trial; and their consequent prosperity should cause all the nations to admire their felicity, and the beauty and fertility of their country. V. 13-18. Many bold infidels and impious persons were found among the Jews, who spake "stout words" against God, and justified them. They thought all the time and expense employed in his service lost to them: they attended his ordinances, with many expressions of self-denial and humiliation; but they derived no profit from them: and they concluded, and openly avowed their opinion, that those haughty rebels, who cast off all religion, and tempted God by their presumptuous wickedness, were the most prosperous and happy persons. So that the people, in the event seeing this, would retract their erroneous judgments, in supposing that the wicked are happy, and the righteous miserable: for they would discern a manifest difference in the condition of those who did, and those who did not, serve God.—The connexion of this passage may be referred to the times of Christ, and the fate of the believing and unbelieving Jews: but it will be fulfilled in a far more striking manner at the day of judgment. Note, 1 Pet. 2:9, 10.)—The same word being used by the prophet, in speaking of a pious remnant of Israel, in his own days, or in those of the Messiah, which had been employed by Moses concerning the nation of Israel; illustrates the apostle's doctrine concerning a remnant of Israel, and only a remnant, that could be called "Israel." PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The Lord Jesus prepares the sinner's heart to be his temple, by the ministry of his word, and the humiliating convictions of his spirit; and then he speedily enters it as the most gracious messenger of peace and consolation.—But no hypocrite or formalist can endure his doctrine, or stand before his tribunal; and no idol or lust can maintain its ground, when he takes possession of the believer's heart. He refines his people "as a purifier of silver;" that he may render them "zealous of good works," and make them "a spiritual priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices," acceptable and well pleasing to the Father through him. Yet the upright Christian needs not fear the fiery trial of afflictions and temptations, in which the Saviour refines his gold: for he will take care that it shall not be more intense or durable, than is needful for his good; and this trial will terminate far otherwise, than that which he will make of the wicked at the last day. Then he will be a swift witness to convict them of impiety and iniquity: and their destruction will result from his unchangeable justice; even as the salvation of the righteous from his unchangeable truth and love.—We have all departed from God, and robbed him of his glory and worship; and have been guilty of inexcusable sacrilege in spending his talents on ourselves: and grosser sacrilege often brings whole nations under a curse. But let "us return to God, and he will return to us;" and he who makes trial will soon find, that nothing is lost by "honouring the LORD with his substance," and expending liberally in supporting his cause. Infidels and Pharisees will not believe this; but speak stout words in justifying themselves, and objecting to the divine dispensations: yet they will soon be silenced and confuted.—The Lord notes the pious words of those who fear his name and seek his glory. He is graciously present when they meet to converse and pray together. (Note, Matt. 18:19, 20.) He will preserve them as his jewels, when the earth shall be burned up as dross; yea, he will acknowledge them as his beloved children, who served him in the midst of a crooked and perverse world. And at the day of judgment, the different appearance of the righteous and the wicked; their different reception by the Judge, and their different feelings respecting him; the different discoveries made of them, and the different places allotted to them, will make all the world retract their foolish censures, and confess that they alone were wise, honourable, and happy, who "served the LORD" and trusted in him.

NOTES.—CHAP. IV. V. 1. In the day before mentioned, the wrath of God would "burn as an oven," or furnace, against the "proud" Pharisees and Sadducees, and all others who should reject the Messiah; and it would destroy all the wicked Jews, with their city and temple; so that no remains of them would be left in the land, or acknowledged as the people of God. (Marg. Ref. a-c. Notes, 3:1-6, 13-18, vv. 13-15. Ps. 21:8-12, vv. 8, 9. Joel 2:28-32, vv. 30, 31. Am. 5:18-20. Zeph. 1:14-16.)—The history of the siege and destruction of Jerusalem and the temple; and the unspeakable miseries of the Jews, and the unparalleled slaughter made of them by the Romans; with all the sufferings of the scattered remnant to this day, forms the best comment on this verse.—Leave them, &c. A proverbial expression for extirpating desolation. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Matt. 24:21, 22.)

V. 2, 3. Christ is "the Sun of Righteousness." By his doctrine he discovers God and his perfections, law, and truth to mankind; he shows them the eternal world, and its infinitely important concerns: he brings them acquainted with themselves, their sins, dangers, wants, enemies, and refuge. He is the source of all man's righteousness for justification and sanctification: his influences render the sinner wise, holy, fruitful, and joyful. (Marg. Ref. f-i.) All the light in the church, before his coming, was derived from the dawning of the day, which his rising was to perfect.—He arose at his birth, became more conspicuous in his ministry, was eclipsed at his death, shone forth brighter after his resurrection and ascension, and attained his meridian splendour, when the Mosaic dispensation terminated in the destruction of Jerusalem, and the Christian dispensation was completely established. Then he shone on all the pious Jews, (3:16.) and on all believers with "healing in his wings, or beams;" "wings" metaphorically for "beams;" Bp. Newcombe. Thus he healed their wounded consciences, their broken hearts, their spiritual maladies; and they went forth from the bondage of Satan, or the yoke of the ceremonial law, to grow up in knowledge and holiness, as calves grow strong and vigorous which are fed at the stall: and then they were made victorious and triumphant over all their wicked persecutors.—The beams of this Sun have enlightened the nations, and the souls of all that fear God, ever since. should be destitute of prophets, until the time of Christ because they should with more fervent minds desire his coming; the prophet exhorted them to exercise themselves diligently in studying the law of Moses in the mean season, whereby they might continue in the true religion, and also be armed against all temptations.—These verses intimate, that the Jews ought not to expect any more prophets till the forerunner of Christ appeared among them. They were therefore to attend to the law of Moses, and wait the Messiah's coming by the light of that dispensation. At length Elijah would come, (that is, John the Baptist,) to introduce that glorious and terrible day of Christ: and his ministry would be rendered effectual in numerous instances, to turn the hearts "of the fathers with the children" to the Lord, to reconcile their discordant parties, by directing them all to Christ; or to restore the degenerate children to the temper of their pious forefathers, that they might be owned as their posterity. But except this change took place, the Lord would "come and smite the land with a curse." With this awful sentence the Old Testament concludes.—He sheweth wherein John's office should stand; in the turning of men to God, and joining the father and children in one unity of faith; so that the father shall turn to the religion of his son, which is converted to Christ, and the son shall embrace the faith of the true fathers, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob.—John the Baptist, in many things resembled Elijah, the intrepid, self-denying, and zealous reformer of Israel, in the days of Ahab.—He came "in the spirit and power of Elijah" who was considered as the chief of the prophets, after Moses. (*Marg. Ref. Notes, 3:1-4, v. 1. Is. 40:3-5. Dan. 9:25-27. Joel 2:28-32, v. 30, 31. Zech. 11:7-11. 13:8, 9. 14:1-3. Matt. 11:13-15. 17:10-13. Mark 9:11-13. Luke 1:14-17, v. 16, 17. 7:6-79, v. 76. PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Behold, another day is coming, far more dreadful than any that has gone before, to all "the proud and those that work wickedness." But "the Sun of righteousness" now shines, to enlighten and bless all who "fear the LORD;" and the more we walk in his light, and delight in his fructifying beams, the more speedily will our souls be healed, and we shall grow holy, fruitful, and happy. What then will be our felicity, when we go forth from the dungeon of this world, to rejoice and grow up in his immediate presence for evermore! Then all enemies will be put under our feet, as partakers of the Redeemer's triumphs and glory; and peace and joy unutterable will be our portion. Let others then boast in the illusion of their proud reasonings, and call it illumination; but let us keep near to that sacred word, through which this "Sun of righteousness" shines upon the souls of his people: and in the way of his ordinances and commandments, let us wait with patience the hour of our release; and cheerfully expect the great and dreadful, yet delightful day, when he shall come the second time to complete our salvation. (Notes, Is. 50:10, 11. 2 Tim. 4:6-8. Tyl. 2:13, 14. Heb. 9:27, 28.)—But let all men observe, that unless their hearts are turned from sin and the world to Christ, to God, to peace, and holiness, they cannot escape the curse of his broken law, or enjoy the felicity of his chosen and redeemed people.
